Mr. CARLSON. I compliment the gentleman from New York for bringing out these questions and answers, questions that are somewhat confusing. I think every Member of the House, and I think every man in the country, wants to understand this and every other suggestion, because we all know that when the committee and Congress details its program, the committee will have to go into every one of these matters.

Mr. REED of New York. And may I say to the gentleman from Kansas that I wish I could flatter myself that I have approached this problem as intelligently as he did when he took the floor on this same question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair reminds the gentleman that there are other special orders following him.

Mr. REED of New York. Then, with the consent of those having the special orders, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman has mentioned those who had large incomes in 1942 who would be benefited by this Ruml plan. Could not that be provided for by stating that in no event could the tax paid in 1943 be less than the man would have paid in 1942?

Mr. REED of New York. I think there are at least a half dozen different ways that we could provide for that danger. I merely call attention to the fact that I know such a danger exists, and it can be corrected by the Committee on Ways and Means, whose business it is to see that there is no tax evasion under any plan.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. McLEAN. And I suggest to the gentleman from New York that if he will examine the bill which I have introduced, H. R. 506, he will see that it is an effort to accomplish the purpose which he has in mind.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes. I am using a Member of Congress as an example, because I know that will challenge the same attention of Members that a picture of an individual does when he finds his own photograph in a group.

Mr. DOUGHTON. On what assumption would he necessarily pay the 1942 tax out of the 1943 income? Have not many people looked ahead knowing that they would owe a 1942 tax, and out of the 1942 income have they not provided for the payment of that tax? I think a great many people have done that. Then, why pay out of the 1943 income if they have paid for it out of the 1942, as they should?

Mr. REED of New York. That is what they are trying to avoid. When this war is over, and millions of people find themselves without income, they will still have hanging over them this tremendous debt from the last year, under the present system.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Could we not deal with that matter then?

Mr. REED of New York. Oh, it is a good idea to deal with it now, because this is the time to do so; not when there is a $300,000,000,000 debt. No man knows how high the taxes will be when the war boom is over. It would be a fine thing if the taxes were current rather than in arrears.

EFFECT OF RUML PLAN SPREAD OVER THE YEARS

It must be evident, therefore, that the effect of the transition from the present "year-behind" system of collection to current collection, as proposed under the Ruml plan, would be spread over a period of a great many years.

Let me illustrate this point by taking the case of a Member of Congress, who has an income of $10,000. At the present moment, he is in debt to the Treasury for the tax on his last year's income, which in the case of a single man would amount to about $2,000. Under the existing method of tax collection, he would normally pay that debt in four equal quarterly installments during 1943, out of his 1943 income. If the Ruml plan should be adopted, that debt for last year's income tax liability would be wiped out. However, he would still pay $2,000 income tax during 1943, but the payment would be in discharge of the anticipated 1943 liability instead of the 1942 liability.

If the Member in question stays in Congress, he will go on paying his tax year after year under the Ruml plan without interruption. As long as he receives his congressional salary and pays his tax, the Treasury will not be out 1 cent so far as he is concerned, nor will his payments have been reduced.

If at some future time the Member dies or resigns from Congress or is not reelected and does not take up any other occupation, he or his estate will then receive the benefit resulting from the elimination of the taxable year 1942. Under the present system, one more year's tax liability would be due. Under the Ruml plan, there would be no tax debt for the past year.

Thus it is apparent that whatever gain to the taxpayer, or loss to the Treasury, which would occur by reason of dropping the year 1942 in order to get tax payments on a current basis, would, as I have said heretofore, be spread over a great many years, which in the individual case will be the productive lifetime of the taxpayer.

It would work out very much the same as insurance policies are paid off over a period of years. People do not all die at the same time.

What I have tried to picture in words is graphically illustrated by the following table:

| Income year | Income | Assumed tax payments[1] | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | | Present law | Ruml plan |
| 1942 | $10,000 | $1,200 on 1941 income, paid in 1942 | $1,200 on 1941 income, paid in 1942 (plan not in effect). |
| 1943 | 10,000 | $2,000 on 1942 income, paid in 1943 | $2,000 on 1943 income, paid in 1943. |
| 1944 | 10,000 | $2,000 on 1943 income, paid in 1944 | $2,000 on 1944 income, paid in 1944. |
| 1945 | 10,000 | $2,000 on 1944 income, paid in 1945 | $2,000 on 1945 income, paid in 1945. |
| 1946 (dies at end of year) | 10,000 | $2,000 on 1945 income, paid in 1946 | $2,000 on 1946 income, paid in 1946. |
| 1947 | None | $2,000 on 1946 income, paid in 1947 | None. |

[1] Exclusive of Victory tax, and assuming rates are unchanged in future.

Under the present plan, the taxpayer, or his estate, would make six tax payments in the above example from 1942 through 1947. Under the Ruml plan, only five tax payments would be made in this period, the omission occurring in the last year. At the present time, the tax liability continues after the income has ceased. Under the Ruml plan, there is no tax debt. The above table shows how the full effect of dropping the year 1942 is not felt, either by the taxpayer or the Government until the taxpayer ceases to have an income which is currently taxable. It also illustrates how the effect of dropping the year 1942 would be spread out over the years, the time differing in each individual case.

Suppose we take the case of a single man who earned $3,000 per annum in a civilian job, and went into the Army January 1, 1943, at $50 per month. Here is how his tax payments would work out under existing law and under the Ruml plan:

|---|---|---|---|
| | | Present law | Ruml plan |
| 1942 | $3,000 | $200 on 1941 income, paid in 1942 | $200 on 1941 income, paid in 1942 (plan not in effect). |
| 1943 | 600 | $400 on 1942 income, paid in 1943 | $5 on 1943 income paid in 1943.[2] |
| 1944 | 600 | $5 on 1943 income, paid in 1944. | $5 on 1944 income, paid in 1944. |
| 1945 (back at old job) | 3,000 | $5 on 1944 income, paid in 1945 | $400 on 1945 income, paid in 1945. |
| 1946 (dies at end of year) | 3,000 | $400 on 1945 income, paid in 1946 | $400 on 1946 income, paid in 1946. |
| 1947 | None | $400 on 1946 income, paid in 1947 | None. |

[2] Since the taxpayer knows that his income for 1943 will be less than for 1942, he is not required to use the 1942 liability as a tentative basis for computing his 1943 liability, but can determine his tentative tax on the basis of his reduced income for 1943. The converse is true as regards the year 1945. (See H. J. Res. 17, p. 5, line 13.)

Under the above example, the taxpayer and the Treasury both feel the effect of dropping the year 1942 out of the picture, as provided under the Ruml plan, as soon as the diminution of income occurs. However, it is made up again as soon as he returns to his old job—from 1942 through 1945 he would pay a total of $610 under both methods of tax payment. As long as he continues in his job his tax status would continue to be the same under either method. When he dies or ceases to have a taxable income he still has a tax liability for the past year under the existing method of collection. Under the Ruml plan this tax debt would not exist. Thus the foregoing example also makes clear that the ultimate effect of dropping the 1942 liability under the Ruml plan is postponed until the taxpayer dies or ceases to have income. It also demonstrates how, where the income is increased over the previous year, the Ruml plan would speed up collection of the increase in tax by a full year. See reference to year 1945, where soldier returns to his old job after service in the Army.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to say that I have read this article, and I presume I am reading from your speech. This is a mimeographed copy I have here. I want to say to the Members of the House that this is absolutely the most complete document yet published on taxes. The gentleman from New York has just read some figures that you could not possibly follow. Nobody could follow them in a speech, but they are the most conclusive story of the Ruml plan that has yet been printed by anybody. I wish to compliment the gentleman for his preparation of this wonderful article.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for his kind remarks.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield briefly.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. We have a right to assume that the income taxes will continue through the years; that is, it will be a policy of this Government.

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. There are about 27,000,000 people who come within the law. I have seen the statement somewhere that about 15 percent of those will likely not be able to pay any income taxes from their salaries, and so forth. That would be three or four million. The chances are that the income of the people this year will be greater than it was in 1942. Can we not assume that?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Then, perhaps, we will catch three or four millions. So can we not assume that the Treasury will collect more money in 1943 under this pay-as-you-go program than it would under the 1942 plan?

Mr. REED of New York. That is the conclusion I have come to. Perhaps later events may change my mind, but that is my conclusion now.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is not a question of whether the Treasury will get more money. The question is whether a large taxpayer will have to pay the tax which the law says he should pay. We need a great deal more money. The question is whether the taxpayer is excused from paying the tax which the law says he should pay. We expect to get more money. We will have to impose additional taxes and get more money. The question is whether or not somebody is going to be relieved of taxes that the law says he should pay. That is the issue.

Mr. REED of New York. In my opinion, you will get more money by this shift, with such modifications as the committee may make.

Mr. ROWE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. ROWE. Under the same rates?

Mr. REED of New York. Under the same rates, because these rates are retroactive to 1942 anyway.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield briefly.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I did not hear the gentleman's discussion about a million of taxpayers who are in the professional class, about whom there is no way to estimate the amount of their taxes.

Mr. REED of New York. Of course, provision must be made with reference to them and with reference to farmers and other groups. I am not dealing with that question. What I am trying to do is to clarify the public mind, and show that they are not going to be relieved of taxes in the final analysis. They are going to pay them on March 15. They are going to pay them at the same rates. As a result of the speeding up of collections currently we will gain considerable revenue, to make up for any alleged loss that we may suffer otherwise.

Now, in conclusion, I hope, as a result of this discussion, I have helped to clarify some of the confusion regarding the Ruml plan. Let it be understood that if the plan is adopted, there will be no immediate cessation of tax payments for the average taxpayer; also, that any loss to the Treasury will be spread over a long period of years.

Of course it should be pointed out that if Congress gives favorable consideration to the Ruml plan, there is no assurance that it will be enacted exactly in the form proposed by Mr. Ruml. The details would have to be worked out after careful study and deliberation. Congress certainly would want to make provision against any possibility of tax avoidance, and it probably would also want to give consideration to the question of whether the 1942 liability should be forgiven in all cases, or only where the income did not exceed a certain amount. In the case of larger incomes, it might want to provide that the 1942 liability should be deferred for a certain number of years, or possibly collected from the man's estate when he dies. All these questions and many others would have to be carefully considered.

INVESTIGATION OF FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. COX, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (Rept. No. 8) on House Resolution 21 for printing in the RECORD:

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of five Members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a study and investigation of the organization, personnel, and activities of the Federal Communications Commission with a view to determining whether or not such Commission in its organization, in the selection of personnel, and in the conduct of its activities, has been, and is, acting in accordance with law and the public interest.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) at the earliest practicable date during the present Congress the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

Mr. FISH. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. NICHOLS). There is no question of objecting. The gentleman is simply filing a report.

Mr. FISH. I would like to ask when the gentleman expects to bring this up?

Mr. COX. The first thing tomorrow morning.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the question of social security.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech made in New York before the National Association of Retail Secretaries, on the future role of water transportation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, now that the Seventy-eighth Congress has been organized and is beginning to function, it is altogether appropriate that it take some legislative soundings as it pursues its course. In performing our responsibility as public servants, we should attempt to determine the will of the people as much as possible, as indicated in the recent elections. To ignore the expressed will of the electorate is to fail in our duty and cause the legislative processes of free government to fall.

Few will deny that the election last November established very definitely that the American people are in revolt against the unbridled bureaucracy which has run rampant throughout the Nation and invaded every home. The American people are ready to make any manner of sacrifice and to submit to all sorts of restrictions necessary for winning the war and bringing their sons home to them at an earlier date but they are indignant with the confusion of thought, confliction of policies, the lethargy of action, protection of special and private interests and the intimidation threatened them by the pontifical pronouncements of the war lords of bureaucracy.

The determination of the people to win the war quickly and effectively seems to be in conflict with the equal determination of the bureaucrats to continue their practices of paternalistic and dictatorial administration. The people are tired of being pushed around like so many pieces of game—they will fight this war after the American way and not after the pattern of foreign dogmas.

This is the responsibility of Congress, the chosen spokesman for the people. We cannot shirk it. It is not enough that the Congress appropriate funds to equip and maintain a vast military establishment. It is not enough that it enact legislation authorizing the administration to regulate our domestic economy in time of war. We must, in addition, make sure that the funds are as wisely and effectively spent as wartime conditions permit. We must make sure that the administration of the laws and the exercise of the authorities conferred are positive and productive and not excessive. It is the duty of the Congress to see that this is done. The people have selected us to protect them against the deadening influence of interbureau jealousies and against the high-handed and officious practices of arrogant administrators.

One of the most bitter complaints against bureaucracy arises in connection with the price and rationing program. For over a year, criticisms have come from all parts of the country relative to all phases of the program and in ever increasing number and volume. Yet the Congress has done nothing about it. The complaints have fallen on barren ground. As Members of the Congress, we individually hear the complaints and individually communicate them by phone or letter to the proper administrative official, usually without success or satisfaction and invariably with the inescapable feeling that the official at the other end is habitually registering his disdain for us by that typical American gesture of the nasal-digit drama. Even informal combinations of the House Members interested in a common problem have met with no success.

This utter disregard of the public interests and practice of the ruthless and high-handed methods typical of European governments must stop. The Congress is not entirely innocent in this regard. There has been no legislative instrumentality or agency before which these complaints could be placed by the people, no agency which had the authority to investigate the need for rationing, to settle the differences between conflicting policies, statements, and charges between various bureaus, to inquire into the progress of plans to correct the conditions which make rationing imperative or, finally, to expose the ruthless, arrogant, and un-American methods of enforcement.

In some instances our neglect to inquire into the progress of action necessary to remedy conditions has resulted in months of delay with an inevitable adverse effect upon our domestic economy. It was not until the bureaucrats had been permitted to flounder and vacillate in the rubber situation that any congressional action was taken, and even now we cannot be sure but that inside personalities and behind-the-scene private interests are causing the synthetic rubber program to bog down.

There has never been any complete uncontradicted explanation of the necessity for sugar rationing, with our refineries and warehouses with excess stocks and with the sugar production in continental United States, if properly developed and directed, sufficient to meet all our domestic needs. Surely the people are entitled to learn from their Government the truth in this regard without equivocation or confusion.

For months the American people have been rationed in coffee, and yet we hear that ships return from South American ports with nothing in their holds but sand and water for ballast. Failure to relieve the gasoline and oil transportation situation last summer and fall might have been corrected had there been a legislative forum where the individual responsibility for the failure could have been brought to light. There are scores of instances such as these where our Government has fallen down, in which the public has been given an abundance of half truths by way of explanation and yet the Congress is silent.

Even now there is widespread clamor throughout the Nation over the unreasonableness of the methods of enforcement of the ban on pleasure driving. People quite properly refuse to be victimized by a system of secret ogpu or gestapo. They will observe reasonable rules and regulations but will never submit to a system of civilian sneaks, snoopers, and snipers, nor should they.

How then can these conditions be best corrected by the Congress? At one time last summer I endeavored, without success, to require all rationing orders of consumer commodities to be approved by the Congress, solely for the purpose of bringing facts into the open and convincing the people of the necessity for the rationing and of making sure that the rule of enforcement would be fair and reasonable. There are many sound objections against seeking to correct these conditions by such a proposal. However, the alternative is not for the Congress to take the attitude that once having delegated the authority to the executive branch of the Government, we are powerless to act and that the responsibility of proper functioning and exercise of the authority rests upon someone else.

The alternative, to my mind, is to create an official legislative forum, a place where these complaints of the people can be voiced, where their protests can be heard, and where their solutions and recommendations can be considered. Such an agency of the Congress can go a long way toward re-creating public confidence in Government by bringing to light the factual conditions which make rationing necessary. Such an agency can give to the people honest and uncolored assurance that steps are being taken to correct those conditions. Such an agency can give persuasive impetus to the relaxation or modification of unreasonable rules, regulations, and edicts.

Accordingly, I have today introduced a resolution authorizing the creation of a special select committee of the House, to be composed of nine Members, and whose duties will be to inquire into the fairness of price limitations, the necessity for various types of rationing of consumer commodities and services, the reasonableness of the policies affecting rent control, the progress of Government-sponsored programs to alleviate the scarcity of rationed articles and the reasonableness of methods of enforcements. Of course, the operation of such a committee must be conducted in such a way as to help rather than to interfere with the war program. Important, secret, and vital information which, if permitted to reach the ears of our enemies would do us serious harm, cannot be disclosed to the public, but this does not mean that representatives of the people who value their oath of office no less than even the Commander in Chief, should not be kept informed. I firmly believe that if such an agency were created and the public given to realize that its representatives in Government, chosen by them, are an active, constructive, and dynamic part of the domestic war program, much of the criticisms would be mollified and greater confidence generated. I strongly urge that this or some similar proposal receive serious consideration and positive action by the House.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman gets favorable action on his resolution. Had the Congress or representatives of the people been informed as to things going on in Japan prior to Pearl Harbor, the situation might have been entirely different and we could have anticipated the attack which was made on us December 7, 1941.

Mr. COLE of New York. The gentleman is delving into a realm of international politics which my resolution does not contemplate. I do firmly believe, however, that the people should be told the truth on any subject matter affecting their interest.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. We learn now there were certain things that Ambassador Grew had informed the State Department were taking place a whole year prior to December 7, 1941, which information was not conveyed to any Member of Congress, irrespective of a committee of Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some observations of mine on the subject Successful Small Plants Pooling, together with two articles and a portion of a letter from our distinguished friend the gentleman from California [Mr. TOLAN].

I am informed this will take two and a half pages and will cost $112.50, but because of the importance of the small businessman's problems at this time I feel there may be some contribution to a solution in part of the plight they are in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR TUESDAY, JANUARY 19, 1943

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute to ask the majority leader a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, can the majority leader tell us what the program will be for tomorrow?

Mr. McCORMACK. On tomorrow the resolution reported out of the Rules Committee to investigate the Federal Communications Commission will come up for consideration in the House.

Mr. MICHENER. I thank the gentleman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD a broadcast I made over radio station KWTO in Springfield, Mo., last Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, on the opening day of this Congress the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] introduced House Resolution 21, calling for an "investigation of the organization, personnel, and activities of the Federal Communications Commission with the view of determining whether or not such commission in its organization, in the selection of personnel, and in the conduct of its activities, has been, and is, acting in accordance with law and the public interest."

The resolution was reported out today by the House Rules Committee and is scheduled to come before the House for consideration, according to the announcement of the majority leader a minute ago, on tomorrow.

I think that this resolution, in its present form, is too narrow. It should either be amended or superseded by a broader resolution. I have therefore today introduced another resolution which includes the substance of the Cox resolution and other issues as well.

Radio broadcasting vitally affects the public. If there is to be an investigation, we want one which will get into the basic issues in this most important field. I have no objection to the Cox resolution except that it is too limited. We want to know what the Commission is doing. But more important even than that we want to know about the industry, an industry in which a few networks dominating the field make inordinate profits and in which the small independent stations in our rural sections are being forced to the wall. In 1941, for example, the return on net investment, after taxes, was about 60 percent for the National Broadcasting Co. and for the Columbia Broadcasting System. While this was going on, two or three hundred of our smaller stations lost money; and they are still losing money. During this year, the small radio station, along with other small businesses, is threatened with extinction. We cannot afford to let that happen. With gasoline rationing, they are more important than ever. They are the backbone of independent broadcasting service in the interest of our own local communities, and in the interest of the Nation at war. We must not have the building up of monopoly, control, and inordinate profits at one end of the line and economic disaster at the other end.

We want to know the extent of the monopoly and control exercised by a very few of our 130,000,000 people over this, the world's most effective medium for molding public opinion. We want to know how that control is tied up with control over the sources of program material—over records and transcriptions, for example. Can small record and transcription companies survive? Our small independent stations cannot get network service. Those on the networks get little or nothing from it. Stations, especially the independent ones, rely to a great extent upon transcriptions. We want to know whether there is any undue concentration of control here and whether it is being exercised to the detriment of the independent stations.

We also want to know how the control of radio broadcasting is being exercised in terms of what the public is permitted to hear. We want to know how it is that organizations like the Cooperative League are denied time to use the frequencies which belong to the public. Regardless of our own views regarding the merits or demerits of this movement, we should know how it is that a movement of such public significance is denied time on the ground that its program concerned a controversial matter or that it may be disturbing to present vested interests. We want to know the answer to that. We must know how much discrimination there is by radio stations in selling the use of their facilities, who the favored persons or groups are and the reason for their advantage.

And the use of radio in political campaigns is another matter we have reason to be concerned with. Some Congressmen who remained in Washington during the recent campaign have particular reason to be concerned over the action of radio stations in denying time to their supporters back home.

There are other matters any investigation should include. All of us no doubt have received complaints in recent weeks about the great wave of vulgarity, obscenity, and suggestiveness that has been coming in over various radio programs. We know that the average station is powerless to control this flood of vulgarity because it has no control over the program and no advance notice as to what may be in it. We cannot afford to let programs which come into our homes and which cannot well be kept from the ears of our children replace the Police Gazette.

Commentators, too, merit our attention. Whose interests are they serving? The recent attacks upon this body over the radio are serious business. We want to know what is back of all this. We want to know what efforts have been made to present the other side, and if none have been, why not.

We have only one agency, the Federal Communications Commission, which is entrusted with authority to do something about these vital subjects unless we can dispose of some of them by definitive legislation. It may well be that the Commission can be expected to do a better job in protecting the public interest if more explicit duties are placed upon it. At any rate here is a grave problem and I submit we cannot continue to overlook it.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I wish to thank the gentleman for his excellent statement but I also wish to state that it seems to me if there is to be an investigation of this kind it should cover the whole field of this very vital industry and all of its effects upon the people of America. I also want to commend the gentleman for what he had to say about this matter connected with the Cooperative League which I understand has now been straightened out, but the fact that there was ever any question about it is rather disturbing to me.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understand it has been straightened out since the subject has been raised in the Congress of the United States. In this connection, I may say that it seems interesting that the companies first turned down the program offered. I certainly have no interest in the Cooperative League; I have no connection with it and know very little about it; but I understand that it was largely turned down on the ground that it presented controversial matters and that the second cause of the rejection was that it might perhaps be objectionable to other advertisers who were already on the program, which indicates that the advertisers are very largely controlling what goes out over these wave lengths which belong to the people of the United States.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein editorials and clippings on the subject which I have discussed, and also to include the language of the resolution I have today introduced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

[From Variety of December 23, 1942]

RADIO HITTING BLUE NOTES—SOUND WARNING ON DIRT, SLANG—COMPLAINTS FROM STATION OPERATORS PERTAIN TO "GIRL GAGS" OF COMICS BROADCASTING FROM ARMY CAMPS—CUSS WORDS AND DOUBLE ENTENDRE FREELY USED IN NIGHTTIME SCRIPTS—PREY FOR BLUENOSES

As indicated by letters received by Variety during recent weeks, local broadcasters are becoming increasingly distressed over the latitude of language allowed some of the network comics and dramatic shows. The complaints, as expressed by these station operators, range from the tendency of comics while playing before service camp audiences to give a bluish tint to "girl gags" to the free use of questionable expletives and double entendre in nighttime script programs. Most of the letters have sounded a note of warning, urging that the networks bear down on the culprits before the bluenoses start up with their customary exaggerated alarum.

One of the more articulate and provocative notes on this theme comes from Barron Howard, business manager of WRVA, Richmond. His letter follows:

"Damn! hell! guts! lousy! These and other odd bits of profanity and vulgarity are commonplace on the air now, particularly on programs with a metropolitan origin. The explanations range from 'freedom of the art' to 'this is war,' and a plea for 'realism.'"

EASY ATTENTION-GETTER

"As usual, those who make these explanations have an ax to grind, and merely make use of surrounding circumstances and conditions to get these axes ground. Of course, it is easy to hop up a program with shock technique and blue gags when other writers fail to do so. Violation of a tabu always compels attention, regardless of the nature of the tabu. It is also axiomatic that such violations are effective only in inverse ratio to the extent of use.

"'Freedom of the art' sounds swell, but any art is addressed to its audience. The artist who fails to define the audience to which he is working, is that much less an artist. A spicy cartoon would go to Esquire—decidedly not to the Southern Churchman.

"The plea of 'realism' falls down completely. What has happened to all the good solid four-letter Anglo-Saxon words? Why eliminate them from a realistic picture? A line is drawn, and it can just as well be drawn before anyone becomes offended. What does the paternity gag have to do with 'realism' in art?

"It is true that 'this is war,' but it is also true, as a matter of record, that the most stirring appeals in American, or any other history, have been phrased without benefit of profanity or vulgarity.

THEN CAME THE COMICS

"Time was when radio was family entertainment. Then came the stage comedians with a background of blue gag technique and a nostalgic odor of the burlesque wheel. The blue pencils wore out one by one until now a cloud of ozone surrounds the average comedy program. Paternity jokes are standard. Illegitimate children and human triangles frolic during the daytime.

"Radio is the only truly national medium and it is fundamentally a family affair. By its very nature it cannot become all things to all men. Its function is distribution of education, culture, and entertainment. Youths Companion, Ladies' Home Journal, Atlantic Monthly, and the Saturday Evening Post, yes—but no dice on Captain Billy's Wizbang. Many people object to profanity and vulgarity, whereas none object to the absence of these items and all can be entertained, educated, and informed without them.

"Admittedly it is tough going to entertain a gang at an Army camp with an hour of burlesque routines and then follow in the next-to-closing spot with a radio script that is so dull by comparison that not even a titter comes from the highly publicized military background. This goes right back to the time-honored radio custom of playing to the immediate audience—the studio audience or the group with which the writer is familiar. All too often this is the smart metropolitan theater-going public which is not even representative of the cities in which it resides. In our own area, for instance, church groups are all-important. These groups are highly vocal, truly representative, and play a large part in community affairs. It may be recalled that an evangelical bishop swung the State of Virginia into the Republican column for the first and only time in history when Al Smith was a Presidential candidate. The motion picture managed to see the light when the church became militant.

MUST CLEAN SHOP

"Aside from any sense of stewardship or of proprieties, it is to our own self-interest to clean up the shop before somebody comes in with a new broom and does it for us.

"It is purely a matter of good writing and fairness to our fellow craftsmen. If, for instance, 'guts' were strewn over every progress, the word would become ineffective and another shocker would have to be found—presumably some word connected with bodily excreta or sexual functions—until it, too, went the eventual way of all shockers.

"The lazy writer must be made to recognize the limitations of his craft—lest someone else define his audience for him. Or shall we at WRVA go ahead with the idea of presenting a good narrator of Pullman smoker stories each evening at 10:30 p. m.?

"BARRON HOWARD."

RADIO, PRESS FLAYED FOR NAUGHTY WORDS

NEW YORK, January 11.—A protest against the use of "hells and damns and other rough and vulgar expressions" was lodged today by the Ensley Highland Methodist Church of Birmingham, Ala., with broadcasting companies and newspaper press services. The letter of protest was also sent to President Roosevelt and Wendell L. Willkie.

RADIO SHOULD GUARD

The right of radio to be free of over-regulation imposes upon broadcasters a duty of self-restraint which is necessary if programs are to be kept clean enough to be welcome visitors in the American home. The majority recognize that duty, and heretofore few broadcasts have contained the vulgarities which would make them objectionable.

Listeners are aware of a creeping now in that direction. Maybe it's the war. Perhaps some script writers, or the comics employing them, believe that national robustness requires a saltier diet; maybe commentators, interviewers, or those interviewed on the air, believe that profanity seasons and adds virility to their words; or perchance they reason that in an era of stark realism anything goes. Whatever the explanation the trend is noticeably on. In the vast majority of cases, the objectionable features occur on the chains, far from the point of outlet.

The industry does not need to be reminded, surely, that among its listeners are millions of children and young people, who do not yet regard uninhibited language and smut in the guise of humor as smart. But they might come to so regard it if they hear it often enough.

Broadcasters are in a position to regulate these offenders. They owe it to the public to preserve—and compel their entire retinue, big names and small, to respect—standards consistent with a sense of decency which hasn't changed, war or no war.

THE PROBLEMS OF THE SMALL RADIO STATION DURING WARTIME

(By C. L. "Chet" Thomas, general manager, KFRU, Columbia, Mo.)

Have you noticed the worried look of the small station manager? Notice particularly the deep crease between his eyes and the horizontal worry lines on his forehead. These outward signs of agitation are slight indeed when compared to the inner mental turmoil. The reason? That's easy to answer. The solution? That's a difficult assignment, and no one man is brilliant enough to know all the answers. There is a solution, of that you can be sure, but it is going to take unity of action and an unselfish approach to the problem. To review a few of the problems:

First is the sharp decline in business. Many 250-watt stations are located in towns and areas devoid of war industries or Army, Navy, and Marine encampments. Population in these areas has decreased appreciably due to a mass migration of workers to industrial centers. Loss of population means loss of buying power which is accompanied by curtailed advertising budgets. Tough indeed is the lot of a small station dependent for revenue on the advertising appropriations of retailers. The problem becomes more acute when you consider that small stations derive up to 85 percent of their revenue from merchants in their home town. The volume of national advertising placed on the 250-watt station in a minor market is too small to pay the overhead. This is a source of income that must be exploited if many of the "smallies" are to survive for the duration.

Personnel has always been a problem and is becoming a major source of worry now. Enlistments and the draft have taken their just toll, and I doubt if you will hear many complaints from the management. Winning the war is our greatest problem, and the small stations are making an all-out effort. Loss of men to the fighting forces affects the large, medium, and small stations, and therein lies the problem. The larger station needs replacements and has been reviewing applications received with a less critical eye. No one blames anyone else for trying to advance his or her position in life, and, contrary to popular belief, the manager of a small station is a human sort of fellow under his callous exterior. This makes it all the harder for him to sell the staff member on the advantages of small-town life in order to keep a good announcer, writer, salesman, etc. Financially, the harried small-station manager cannot compete, so most of the time he loses the argument. Were this to happen infrequently, it could be coped with, but when it becomes a weekly occurrence, it makes old men out of young men quickly.

Equipment—a nine-letter word meaning grief. Spare stock is at the required minimum, but rarely above. When a tube burns out the entire staff becomes depressed. The small station is no hoarder of tubes, condensers, transformers, etc., for patriotic as well as financial reasons. Engineers are becoming inventive geniuses in order to keep the station on the air. Not many station managers are technically minded, so when the transmitter starts "acting up" in these times a sense of humor is the only thing that saves the day.

Recordings and transcriptions are the very lifeblood of the nonnetwork small station. Take them away and there's not much left. The need for the maintenance of public morale and communication is just as important in the small community as it is in the large. Broadcasting of Navy, Army, Marine, Air Corps, Red Cross, nurse recruiting, salvage, fuel consumption, and so forth, announcements is a must on the daily schedule. War bond and stamp programs and announcements are on the air from sign-on to sign-off. The small station is doing a real job, and it must not be sacrificed or even endangered by the machinations of a union czar.

In Chicago, recently, James C. Petrillo won round one of a lawsuit prosecuted by able Thurman Arnold. The judge's decision cannot be questioned, nor should it be as it was predicated on a sound legal basis. The majority of the remaining rounds must be won or broadcasting will have been dealt a blow so stunning that many of the small stations of the Nation will throw in the sponge.

This must not, and cannot, happen if we will but apply the muscle and brain power to whipping this problem as we have applied in building our properties against seemingly unsurmountable odds.

These are not all of the problems, as any 250-watt station manager will tell you. There are others of a local, regional, and even national nature. What is the solution? The salvation of the small station lies with themselves, primarily. The Government and the industry will lend a helping hand, but action and forthright thinking must come from the men operating these small radio stations. Here are two ideas that will mean much work and may even cost money, but with unified action and intelligent cooperation should form the nucleus for widespread recognition of the importance of the small station in the radio industry as well as in the American way of life.

The small stations need representation in Washington. The clear channels, the regionals, and the networks are constantly promoting their interests through well managed, well financed organizations. Congress, the administration, the Federal Communications Commission, and the public at large must be made to realize the importance of the small station to the Nation. There's a real story to be told and it must be told convincingly. There are far more low-power stations than there are 5-, 10-, or 50-kilowatt outlets, and in a democracy it is the will of the majority that decides any issue. Small stations are a real power and if properly organized and represented, they can do much to improve their status and increase their ability to "operate in the public's interest, convenience, and necessity."

Sales representation for small stations is a crying need. National representatives are doing an excellent job for the larger stations, but in many cases spend too little time in selling the small station. This is natural, because the rewards in the form of commission are not in proportion. This does not imply that the representative should be allowed a larger commission for selling the "smallies" but it is a problem that is worrying more than one small-station manager. Perhaps one answer is to form State or regional organizations of small stations. Selling these stations individually, or as a unit, can be made attractive to national advertisers. The selling agent must be well acquainted with the operation and problems of small stations and he must understand the local prestige of these stations. In order to get a man of recognized caliber, it may be necessary to work out a salary, expense, bonus arrangement. If so, it is advisable and will pay dividends over a period of time. The cost to the individual station would not be considerable on a group basis. There's the germ of an idea here, and it can be incubated if approached objectively.

This same State or regional organization can work together in solving other problems, such as equipment, music, labor, legislation, increasing the sale of bonds and stamps, etc., etc. The small-station operator has been accused of being "small town" and unable to see beyond the horizon. This cannot be true if these stations are to survive. In unity there is strength, and it's going to take all the strength available to solve the problems facing the radio industry as a whole and the "smallies" in particular.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE BROADCASTERS?—THE CURIOUS CASE OF THE "MONOPOLISTS" WHO DO NOT CONTROL THEIR OWN PROGRAMS

(By Bernard B. Smith)

For the better part of a year the radio industry has been in turmoil. One of the great networks has brought suit against another; the Federal Communications Commission has charged that the entire existing system of network broadcasting is monopolistic in character and has taken steps to curb it; two of the broadcasting companies in their turn are carrying to the Supreme Court a suit to enjoin the application of the Commission's network rules; the United States Department of Justice has brought suit against those same companies under the terms of the Sherman antitrust law; a number of congressional committees have conducted independent hearings on various aspects of the controversy, and a member of the Rules Committee of the House of Representatives has proposed that Congress investigate the Federal Communications Commission, charging that its chairman "is guilty of a monstrous use of power and is rapidly becoming the most dangerous man in the Government."

Amid all the bitterness, the charges and countercharges in this bewildering series of events, there is only one factor which should concern the radio-listening public, and that is the preservation and improvement of network broadcasting in the public interest. Let this, therefore, be stated at once: the public interest will be served not by breaking up the networks, but by increasing their responsibilities and their control over their own radio programs; by compelling them to extend network facilities where the existing ones are insufficient; and, finally, by accomplishing this through sound regulatory legislation rather than through lawsuits which threaten the very existence of the networks.

Taking a glance backward, it is clear to almost everyone that it is to the networks we owe a large share of the improvements in the technical aspects of broadcasting. It is quite true, as the Federal Communications Commission points out, that there are remote areas of the country which are still entirely without network broadcasting services, and that in certain other areas available services are insufficient. What is not equally clear to everyone, however, is that as long as network broadcasting derives its principal financial support from the sponsorship of radio programs by national advertisers, network facilities will be extended only if advertisers require such extension.

It seems pretty clear that the networks have been operated primarily in the service of the advertisers rather than in the interest of the public, and it is in this fact, rather than in the allegedly monopolistic character of the industry, that the basic deficiencies of American network broadcasting have their origins.

The networks, in order to induce the large national advertisers to purchase their facilities for the sponsorship of national radio programs, have worked out a system of discounts which sharply reduces the time costs for those advertisers who employ the greatest amount of broadcast time in a given year. In addition, the national advertiser who purchases the facilities on a network for a continuous hour of broadcasting pays in proportion substantially less for this hour than an advertiser who purchases only a 15-minute period. And during the daytime 15 minutes constitute the standard period.

Thus, for example, Procter & Gamble will purchase a full hour's time on a network; it will then break this up into four 15-minute segments each of which advertises a different Procter & Gamble product with a distinct radio program. Procter & Gamble, however, pays for this time upon the basis of a full hour program. When, therefore, a small competitive company having only one product to sell desires to advertise its product on the air it will find that its cost for a 15-minute period of network time over the same stations and at approximately the same time will, after all discounts have been allowed, be as much as 50 percent more than the allocated cost of such a 15-minute segment to Procter & Gamble or General Mills. If, nevertheless, this smaller manufacturer should persist and decide to spend a premium of 50 percent more than his competitors, he would be likely to find that the best broadcast hours of the afternoon on the principal networks had already been contracted to such dominant companies as Lever Brothers, General Mills, General Foods, and Procter & Gamble. In fine, he could not—even at a premium—purchase equally desirable time in which to deliver his commercial message to the American public.

It is, therefore, not surprising that the crowding out of the smaller advertiser as a commercial sponsor of national network programs has become a pronounced phenomenon of network expansion. Thus in the 5 years from 1937 through 1941, while the network revenue of the largest broadcasting company increased over 50 percent, the number of its commercial advertising sponsors decreased almost 25 percent; and by 1941 11 advertisers accounted for over 50 percent of the network revenue of all the national networks in the United States.

The networks are not to be condemned for such situations, for it is only by encouraging large firms to use radio as an advertising medium that network broadcasting has received the financial support which made possible its phenomenal growth and advancement. Nor, for that matter, can we criticize the conduct of the national advertisers; for in the keenly competitive climate in which they operate, uncontrolled by adequate Government regulations, these advertisers must seize upon every available advantage in order to keep their trade names and shibboleths ubiquitously and incessantly before the public. In fact, despite the purely commercial character of their enterprise, they have provided the Nation with some of its finest radio fare.

But there are further difficulties. For example, if a small independent manufacturer, using only a single 15-minute period for network broadcasting, should develop an excellent radio program, and through this means achieve notable success in spite of being confined to a less desirable time spot, it rests within the power of the network upon the expiration of a 13-week period to terminate its contract with that company in obeisance to some powerful competitor. It is true that networks have not been known to employ such tactics. Nevertheless, under existing unregulated network broadcasting, the network may at its own pleasure refuse to renew the time contract of a legitimate small advertiser. Today, when drugs, soaps, and grocery products depend in vital measure upon radio advertising as a means of keeping their trade names before the public, the power of the networks to take away the broadcast time of a given advertiser and to grant such time to others is almost a power of life and death.

Furthermore, under existing network practices, the cost of advertising depends to the very largest degree upon the skill of an advertising agency in obtaining for an advertiser a radio program of great popular appeal at the lowest possible cost. If, through a stroke of good fortune, an advertiser should acquire at low cost a radio program which achieves great popularity, its cost of advertising will become substantially lower than that of its competitors in the same field. For advertising costs are measured by the ratio between the aggregate cost of the program (the charge for broadcasting time plus the fees for the performers and other talent) and the total number of persons who are listening to the radio program in the course of which the commercial message is broadcast. The number of listeners is approximated by test samplings and surveys made by such companies as Crosley, Inc., and C. E. Hooper, Inc.

Thus General Foods, several years ago, at relatively low cost introduced a radio program known as the Aldrich Family which now attracts one of the three or four largest radio audiences that listen to any program broadcast in the United States. Any competitor who wishes to reach an audience of similar size must build a program around radio entertainers of such national attraction as to make the cost of the program almost prohibitive; and even then it could not be certain that it would reach an audience comparable to that of the Aldrich Family. Accordingly the value of radio advertising depends not only upon the amount of money appropriated, but largely on the advertiser's good fortune in finding a program that will attract a Nation-wide audience.

Between the hours of 7:30 and 8 o'clock every Sunday evening the F. W. Fitch Co. advertises its shampoo over the red network of the National Broadcasting Co. This half hour is sandwiched between two of the most popular half-hour radio programs; for at 7 o'clock on Sunday evening the Jack Benny program is on the air, and at 8 over the same network the Charlie McCarthy program is broadcast. The F. W. Fitch Co., taking very natural advantage of the tremendous popularity of each of these costly program, devotes this half hour to a simple, low-cost musical program, relying upon the recognized habit of that segment of the listening audience which—desiring to hear both the Benny and the McCarthy programs—refrains from dialing off the red network during the half-hour period between them.

As a result the Fitch program draws a radio audience altogether out of proportion to its cost and entertainment value, and the F. W. Fitch Co. enjoys a tremendous economic advantage over its competitors because of its stroke of fortune in having acquired the right to broadcast during this half-hour period. Its competitors must spend tremendously more in order to present a commercial advertising message to an audience of comparable size.

There is scarcely an advertiser of any significance in the country who would not offer the National Broadcasting Co. a substantial premium over its standard rates to acquire this particular half hour. Yet because of those same self-imposed limitations which restrain the networks from terminating a contract with a small advertiser who has evolved a successful 15-minute program, the National Broadcasting Co. will continue to renew its contract with the F. W. Fitch Co. as long as the company desires.

Working under such a system, the broadcasting companies cannot exercise real control over the programs broadcast on their networks. Their contention that they provide balanced programmatic fare is refuted by even a cursory examination of their actual program schedules. The truth is that the decision as to whether or not a radio program shall be presented over network broadcasting depends not on the network's opinion of the program's worth but on the advertiser's opinion about its effectiveness in promoting the sale of the laxative, dentifrice, or breakfast food he produces.

Such radio programs are developed and produced either by independent producers retained by advertising agencies in behalf of the advertisers or by the radio staffs of the advertising agencies. Many of the agencies would welcome a change in network practices which would relieve them of the production of radio programs as a prerequisite to the efficient conduct of their business. But until such time as the broadcasting companies are required to be solely responsible for the programs presented over their networks, a successful advertising agency has no choice but to continue to maintain—or employ the services of—a skilled and resourceful radio production staff.

When the broadcasting companies assume such programmatic responsibilities these experienced production staffs can create and produce programs in behalf of the networks. The agencies cannot in any sense be held accountable for a lack of balanced radio fare, for no one agency or combination of agencies controls all of the programs on any of the networks. On the other hand, the only control that the networks assume over commercially sponsored programs is to assure themselves that their content is neither politically partisan nor offensive to the general public.

The broadcasting companies speak tenderly of the educational sustaining programs which they provide without profit to the stations comprising their network. Yet during the period of greatest radio attendance, from 7 p. m. to 10:30 p. m. each evening, we find few such programs. These most valuable broadcast hours are now owned almost exclusively by advertisers of drugs, foods, soft drinks, cigarettes, soaps, and beauty preparations. We have yet to hear of a network terminating the time-contract of a national advertiser in order that it may supply the Nation with a half-hour sustaining program of intellectual significance.

The degree to which control has been relinquished by the networks is indicated also by the right granted to an advertiser to specify, subject to certain minimum requirements, how few or how many of the network stations are to be used for the broadcast of a program. The advertiser will, quite understandably, purchase time only on those stations which serve the area in which he has existing or potential markets for his product.

Thus the Sun Oil Co. sponsors the broadcasts of Lowell Thomas over only 25 stations because these are the maximum stations serving the area in which the company's products are sold. It may be presumed that the Sun Oil Co. proscribes Mr. Thomas from appearing on the air in behalf of any other sponsor. So, because of advertiser control, three-fourths of the country is deprived of the opportunity to listen to Lowell Thomas' comments on current events. On the other hand, the radio program How'm I Doin'? is heard over 4 times as many stations as is Lowell Thomas—virtually throughout the United States—simply because the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., its sponsors, have existing markets for their cigarettes throughout the country.

The Jack Benny and Charlie McCarthy programs are heard over Nation-wide networks only because there is no broadcast area in the United States which is not either an actual or potential market for Jello and Chase & Sanborn coffee, the products, respectively, advertised on these programs. If these programs had originally been acquired by advertisers enjoying only limited markets for their products, vast areas of the country would have been deprived of the right to hear them.

Thus the advertiser determines not only what the people of the country shall listen to but also—in accordance with his own market problems and at variance, frequently, with the public interest—precisely what sections of the country are going to be permitted to hear a specific broadcast.

II

To insure that the networks control radio broadcasting basically in the interest of the public, rather than in the service of the national advertiser, it is essential that we promptly provide for the sound regulation and licensing of network broadcasting—not indirectly through the control that the Federal Communications Commission now exercises over the individual stations but by a specific, unambiguous statute which, as the basic premise, will recognize network broadcasting in its present high state of development and will seek to continue it and improve it.

When, by statute, network broadcasting is recognized as a public facility, it will definitely become the responsibility of the networks to create balanced radio programs available to the entire Nation in much the same fashion as the great national magazines provide reading matter. If a program is sufficiently popular to interest the entire Nation the entire Nation should be afforded the opportunity of hearing it. One section should not be deprived of such opportunity solely because it displays insufficient interest in the beverage or household remedy advertised by the sponsor.

To continue the analogy, in our national magazines advertisers with large budgets purchase the right to display their advertisement in preferred space. Advertisers with smaller budgets purchase less desirable space but pay proportionately less therefor. The magazine and not the advertiser determines what the magazine shall contain, and its editors assume the obligation of creating a balanced, interesting magazine for sale to the public. No advertiser receives a reduction in rates if his product enjoys no market in certain sections where the magazine is sold.

With definitive legislative licensing of network broadcasting, each network would be required to build and create radio programs independent of the national advertisers. These programs would be broadcast simultaneously over the entire Nation-wide system of the specific network. An advertiser would then no longer sponsor a radio program; he would simply purchase the right to have a commercial message delivered for several minutes during the course of the broadcast of a radio program. The amount he would pay would be determined by a formula based upon the following correlative factors:

1. The size of the audience that customarily listens to the radio program during which the commercial message is delivered. (This is, as has been pointed out, now satisfactorily tested by a sampling process. Just as magazines and newspapers now guarantee their circulation in fixing their advertising rates, so would the networks guarantee the size of the audience listening to a radio program in the course of which a commercial message is to be delivered.)

2. The number of stations whose facilities the advertiser employs, their power, and the number of radio-equipped homes in their broadcast area.

Thus, while many advertisers would purchase the right to have their "commercial" broadcast over an entire network of stations, others (because of the limitation of their markets) might prefer to employ station facilities only in the specific broadcast areas in which their products are sold. A program could be sponsored by a number of different companies in a number of different areas. In the course of the program, when the moment for the "commercial" arrived, the national network could be broken down into the required groups of stations, each of which would carry the message of a different advertiser; then the national hook-up could be restored and the program continued. Thus, Lowell Thomas could be heard everywhere even if no single advertiser could be found to sponsor him on a national basis.

Under this plan the advertiser, whether large or small, will receive precisely what he pays for; he will no longer have to fear that the program during which his "commercial" is delivered will not attract a sufficiently large audience, since the basis of advertising rates will be scientifically predetermined, and will no longer be based upon the accident of an advertiser developing a program of phenomenal audience appeal. Small companies will have an opportunity to employ radio advertising without the present disadvantage of competing with large advertisers who have virtually monopolistic control over network broadcasting.

Today it is difficult to find a sponsor for a series of Toscanini concerts because, although its listening audience is smaller than that of the program Truth or Consequences, its cost is substantially greater. Under the plan proposed, programs like the Toscanini concerts would be eagerly employed for commercial broadcasting, for then the advertiser's cost would be predicated not as heretofore solely upon the charge for broadcast time plus program costs, but principally upon the actual size of the listening audience.

All network programs would be heard over the facilities of radio stations in every broadcast area of the United States. Only part of the day and evening, however, would be employed by the affiliated radio stations for the broadcast of network programs. The balance of broadcast time would be used by the individual stations for programs of local importance. Thus the individual stations would furnish a balanced service in much the same manner as a local newspaper which—in addition to syndicated columns, Associated Press, and United Press dispatches, and a national Sunday supplement—publishes articles and news of purely sectional interest.

The networks can be depended upon to create through this system of balanced programming a profitable enterprise, yet one which will better serve the public interest than does the existing system of broadcasting. As magazines strive to increase their circulations as a means of charging increased advertising rates, so each of the national networks would strive to improve the character of its programs in the hope of increasing its listening audiences and thus being able to charge higher rates for the broadcast of commercial announcements.

Independent radio program owners and producers and advertising agencies as well as the networks themselves would supply the radio programs; and the networks would reasonably be expected to pay for such programs a sum commensurate with the size of the listening audience that the program would attract.

If proper technical control were employed there would be no physical handicap to the creation of additional networks. Instead of concerning itself with the economic relationship between the network and the individual station, the Federal Communications Commission should now be overhauling its methods of power allocation; instead of freely granting increased power for transmitters (as it has done in the city of New York) it should, by reduction of power and other signal limiting devices, insure that stations will be clearly heard only in the broadcast area which they are intended to serve and will not prevent stations in other areas from broadcasting over the same wavelength.

In existing broadcast practice we are not infrequently confronted with the paradox of having too many rather than too few networks in operation. When Fibber McGee, Bob Hope, or Jack Benny is on the air even two national networks are one too many, for no national advertiser will, in the exercise of sound judgment, attempt to sponsor a costly radio program under the present system in competition with one which virtually monopolizes the Nation's listening audience. The price of the half hour of the Jello broadcast time over the red network is substantially the same as that asked for the same half hour over the Columbia Broadcasting network. The latter dare not reduce the price for this half hour, and certainly no sponsor can reasonably be expected to pay that price. But under the proposed system the rates asked for advertising on a rival program would be determined by the number of people listening to that program. The smaller the listening audience the lower the rates would be; if the program proved good enough to win over listeners from the Benny program, the rates would rise.

Thus virtually all programs could be commercially sponsored: the smaller advertiser would once again find it possible to support network broadcasting serving not alone his own interests but equally those of the network and the public. And if the power and scope of stations were properly controlled, any needed number of networks could compete in creating attractive rival programs.

Fundamentally, all that the courts by their decision in the current radio litigation will determine is whether to recast the existing competitive balance between rival networks and stations in their bids for national advertiser patronage. The problems which have been posed will not be solved until, by an Act of Congress, network broadcasting is recognized as an independent facility, and the rules and standards governing its conduct are clearly and unequivocally defined. Only then will the networks be provided with enduring yardsticks and blueprints to guide them in serving the public interest.

[78th Cong., 1st sess. H. Res. —. In the House of Representatives, January 18, 1943. Mr. SPARKMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules]

Whereas the public owns all radio frecies and the granting by the Government of quencies and the granting by the Government of quasi-monopolistic licenses to private persons is of vital interest to the public and it is essential for freedom of speech and public discussion, the free and untrammeled flow of information and opinion, the encouragement of education and social progress, and the maintenance of public morality and democratic institutions—

That radio broadcasting and the sources of program material and talent be free of any monopoly, monopolistic practice, or undue concentration of control;

That small, independent radio stations be able to continue in operation in order to serve their communities;

That the control of any station or network of stations should not be exercised to advance the special interests of any persons, group, or business or in any other manner than in the public interest and in the interest of its listeners;

That the facilities of any station or network should be made available to all persons upon a fair basis and without improper discrimination; and that programs should be free from vulgarity, scurrility, vilification, or other debasing content: Therefore be it

Resolved, That there is created a select committee to be composed of five members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to make a thorough and full study and investigation of the Federal Communications Commission, the broadcasting industry and of any business related thereto or connected therewith, including, but not limited to, the following matters:

(1) The organization, personnel, and activities of the Federal Communications Commission with a view to determining whether or not such Commission in its organization, in the selection of personnel, and in the conduct of its activities, has been, and is, acting in accordance with law and the public interest.

(2) The existence, extent, formation, legality, and effect upon the public of any monopoly, monopolistic practice, or undue concentration of ownership, control, or management in the hands of a person or group of persons in radio broadcasting or any phase thereof, or in the recording and transcription industry, the management of artists, or any other source of program material and talent;

(3) The existence and extent of conditions endangering the continued operation of small, independent broadcasting stations, especially in outlying areas of the country, and the effect upon the public of the cessation of operation of such stations;

(4) The extent to which radio stations or networks censor or decline to accept programs offered to them, the reasons therefor and effect upon the public thereof, including programs concerning public or controversial issues and programs offered by or in behalf of any legally qualified candidate for election to any public office or for nomination in any political primary; and

(5) The quality of program service of radio stations, especially the extent to which programs contain vulgar, scurrilous, vilifying, or other debasing material.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) at the earliest practicable date during the present Congress the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such time and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from New York, who has the next special order, yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman if it is of the utmost necessity.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE AIR ACCIDENTS

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 33, Rept. No. 9), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Select Committee to Investigate Air Accidents authorized by House Resolution 125 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, and House Resolution 403, Seventy-seventh Congress, second session, be continued for a period from January 1, 1943, to March 1, 1943, for the purpose of allowing said select committee to complete its unfinished work and investigations and file its report and make recommendations to the House covering the hearings held and the studies made by said committee since March 12, 1941.

That said select committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to act during the present Congress for a period from January 1, 1943, to March 1, 1943, with all powers-granted to it under House Resolution 125 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, and House Resolution 403 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, second session.

That the funds appropriated to said select committee by House Resolutions 525 and 570 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, second session, or any part thereof not already expended by said select committee, are hereby made available to said select committee to take care of the further expenses of conducting said investigation and study, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistance, and shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or subcommittee thereof conducting the investigation and study or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the resolution just introduced by the chairman of the Rules Committee extending the time of the committee, of which the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] is chairman, to March 1 was reported unanimously. I supported it but if it is the purpose by extending the life of that committee to March 1 to delay consideration in creating a permanent standing Committee on Aviation in the House, I shall oppose the extension when it is brought up.

Mr. SABATH. It is not the intention of the committee of which the gentleman from New York is a member to delay giving hearing to those seven or eight Members who have introduced other resolutions for purposes that the gentleman has mentioned. I am hopeful that as soon as we get through with the hearings on the important resolution introduced by the gentleman from Georgia, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, in conjunction with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] that hearings will be held on twelve other resolutions that are pending and that must be acted upon without delay.

Mr. FISH. May I say to the gentleman that we want to expedite action because there are many Members on both sides who would like to serve on a House Committee on Aviation. The standing committees of the House are now being chosen and if we expedite the creation of a Committee on Aviation I think it would be in the interest of the Members of the House and of aviation.

Mr. SABATH. Nothing would please me better than to get action on it, but I cannot in the next few days.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a resolution—House Resolution 10—providing for the creation of a standing Committee on Aviation in the House, composed of 21 members, and dealing with all phases of civilian and commercial aviation.

Such a committee should be set up immediately, and begin the consideration of the problems of post-war aviation, in order to properly develop and expand American airways and to maintain the dominance we have achieved. I am fearful that unless we have a constructive program to put into effect as soon as victory has been achieved, we will lose our dominance of the airways of the Pacific, of South and Central America, and also to Africa. World War No. 2 will bring about tremendous changes all over the world, and particularly in the greater use of airplanes for transportation and travel.

Aviation is still in its infancy. There are a million Americans employed in the aircraft industry, and another million in the Army and Navy air forces. It will emerge from this war as one of our greatest industries. Last year 48,000 war planes were produced, and in 1943 that figure will be doubled. The conversion of such a huge industry to peacetime requirements is a serious task in itself.

The need for a permanent aviation committee should be apparent, if we are to have a definite policy of commercial air-line expansion and perfect plans for world-wide air routes and transportation. The Congress should ascertain our rights to freedom of the air in Africa, where we are spending huge sums under the lend-lease and war appropriations. Will we be permitted to use these airfields, after the war, for commercial aviation?

It is not too soon to make plans to take care of the excess planes and excess pilots after the war, instead of virtually abandoning the aircraft industry as we did in 1919. There is no reason why thousands of planes and pilots could not be used, if plans are made in advance, to carry first-class mail in the United States and abroad. Huge bombers could be easily converted into transport or cargo planes. The carrying of light freight by big planes is not only feasible but highly probable. It is not difficult to visualize transport planes seating 200 passengers, cargo planes that will carry 30 tons of freight, and fast commercial planes that will do over 300 miles an hour. Aviation is only in the morning of its destiny.

Unless Congress creates a permanent committee on civilian and commercial aviation, the end of the war, with its shutting off of war orders, may cause an aviation tailspin and collapse that will far exceed the panic of 1932 and its resultant unemployment.

It is the duty of Congress, as the sole Federal legislative body, to try by all possible means to avert a collapse in our aviation industry after the war. It should start now to plan the expansion of our air transport on such a large scale that it will keep our aircraft industries going and provide employment for 100,000 pilots.

An aviation committee in Congress, composed of experts, could, through foresight and planning, help save our aviation industry and make it, as Eddie Rickenbacker says, the kingpin in American economy. The railroads were after the Civil War, the automobile after the World War; why not aviation after this war?

Mr. Speaker, if Congress acts and acts immediately and wisely, aviation may well be assured a glorious destiny after the war. If, however, the Congress fails to act, then we can anticipate what happened after the first World War—there will be a collapse in the aviation industry and it will have a dismal future instead of a glorious one, providing employment and extending our civilian and commercial airways throughout the world.

DOLLAR-A-YEAR MEN IN THE GOVERNMENT SERVICE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend two actions which have come to my attention recently. I have stated on the floor of the House on numerous occasions that I did not believe in the method of hiring dollar-a-year men for the Government service. I believe that people in positions of control of governmental policy should be on the governmental pay roll.

I am encouraged to read in the Sunday paper where the Secretary of Agriculture, who is also Food Administrator, states that as far as the work of his agencies is concerned, all people connected therewith shall be on the Government pay roll and not on any other. I want to commend that action.

I want to also point out that a man by the name of Mr. Ralph J. Cordiner has recently given up a salary from a private corporation running into six figures to accept $8,000-a-year salary from the Government in the War Production Board. I think mention should be made of that because his patriotic example could well be emulated by others.

Any person in a position to make governmental decisions should derive his income from the Government and not elsewhere.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. SMITH of Ohio (at the request of Mr. JONES), indefinitely, on account of an accident.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON]?

There was no objection.

DOLLAR-A-YEAR MEN IN THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the remarks made by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], I desire to say that today the trouble is not so much the salaries these men are drawing as it is whom they represent. Regardless of what salaries they may draw, some of them still represent the very interests they represented before they got on the Federal pay roll. That is the trouble we have been having with our power development and with rural electrification. That is one trouble we are now having with the railroads blocking the building of pipe lines and the Florida barge canal, which would supply the eastern seaboard with all the oil and gasoline necessary and get rid of this field in which the German submarines are preying upon our transoceanic and coastwise shipping.

Therefore, it is not a question of their resigning from one job if they are going to come down here and represent the same old corporation. What we want are men of independence, men who will will represent all the American people, and carry out the will of the Congress, and not go in there and "pinch hit" for special interests at public expense.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] may have permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Christian Science Monitor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, January 19, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

68. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting a report of the Archivist of the United States on lists of papers recommended to him for disposal by certain agencies of the Federal Government; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

69. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a report of the Federal Bureau of Investigation pursuant to Public Law No. 644, Seventy-seventh Congress, an analysis and recapitulation of investigations conducted under Public Law No. 644, Seventy-seventh Congress, during the second quarter of the fiscal year, 1943 (October 1 through December 31, 1942) (H. Doc. No. 51); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

70. A letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting a report covering the operation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the period from the organization of the Corporation on February 2, 1932, to December 30, 1942, inclusive (H. Doc. No. 52); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

71. A letter from the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act creating the circuit court of appeals in regard to fees and costs, and for other purposes," approved February 19, 1897 (29 Stat. 536; 28 U. S. C. 534); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

72. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a report of designs, aircraft, aircraft parts, and aeronautical accessories purchased by the Navy Department pursuant to section 10 of said act during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942, the prices therefor and the reason for the award in each case; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

73. A letter from the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide fees to be charged by clerks of the district courts of the United States," approved February 11, 1925 (43 Stat. 857), as amended (28 U. S. C., sec. 548–555); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. PATTON: Committee on Accounts. House Resolution 41. Resolution granting a gratuity to the husband of Berniece C. Lambert; without amendment (Rept. No. 7). Referred to the House Calendar.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 19, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for Thy impartial benevolence, for Thy fatherhood, and for man's brotherhood. Grant us the strength and the assurance of that fountain from whose course the Apostles gathered their inspiration and gave to the world the promise of a new morning. In our meditation and wonder, fill us with gratitude for Thy long-suffering and unvarying providence. Rebuke us, dear Lord, when we fail to remember the message of the historic past with its injunction: "Walk humbly with Thy God and forget not all His benefits."

Our hearts often grow faint as clouds creep over us and faith and hope become confused. We pray Thee to crown us with fortitude of soul and with loyalty to our Master Teacher that we shall be led to cheer and nourish this mortal world with His eternal and undying promises. With stout hearts and with wills to serve, help us to lighten life's burden, ease life's load, and brighten life's ways. Blessed Lord, we would reflect the prayer of a great patriot: "Grant that not only the love of liberty but a thorough knowledge of the rights of man may pervade all the nations of the earth." Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution (S. Res. 63):

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be notified of the election of Hon. CARTER GLASS, a Senator from the State of Virginia, as President of the Senate pro tempore.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

1. Department of Labor.
2. Department of War.
3. National Housing Agency.
4. The National Archives.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Big Timber Pioneer, and I further ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter written by Mr. Holloway, of Pompeys Pillar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] before the Texas State Society last Saturday evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

(Mr. MERRITT asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief article appearing in the Indianapolis Star.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have just learned that Dr. George Washington Carver, the noted scientist and author, graduated from the Minneapolis (Kans.) High School. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, the monster, Frankenstein, and his cohorts are still parading over this land of ours with their clutches on the throats of every American citizen, whether that citizen be on the home front, engaged in the mighty effort of saving this country from slavery or the civilization of the world, or dressed in the olive drab and today spilling their blood on the far-flung battlefields of Africa, of the Far East, in fact, in every part of the world.

John L. Lewis, the Frankenstein, Phil Murray, and every other labor racketeer throughout this country, the cohorts through their continued pressure for a few more shekels, as Judas Iscariot accepted to betray our Saviour, so are they betraying not only those men whom they profess to control but the entire 130,000,000 people of this country. This is being sanctioned and condoned for the reason that nothing but puny efforts have been made in the past 5 or 6 years to stop their nefarious actions.

Is it because John L. Lewis threw a mess of pottage from his ill-gotten gains on the political feasting table prior to the election of the party in power, or is it because other elections are coming on and it is thought that an organized minority may control them?

When, oh when, is the leadership and the elected representatives of this great American people going to take action, and such action that will sound the death knell forever of those of their ilk and clan?

Members of Congress, in the northern section of this country of ours, mothers and babes are cold, when there is plenty of fuel. Industries will soon shut down, if this strike continues, at a time when they should be running 24 hours a day, when the workers should be warm and comfortable, to produce that which it is going to take to destroy Hitlerism. This House acted a year or so ago, but the unseen and magic hand of some power blocked its action. John L. Lewis tried to pull a strike like this during the last World War. He was then given his choice of ending the strike or going to jail. He decided not to go to jail.

Any man in any capacity who, by his action, stops the progress of the program to win this war should be tried for treason and immediately executed.

Members of Congress, let us act again and save our country from the Frankensteins.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the program of the National University School of Law for a taxation clinic.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 21, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of five Members of the House to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a study and investigation of the organization, personnel, and activities of the Federal Communications Commission with a view to determining whether or not such Commission in its organization, in the selection of personnel, and in the conduct of its activities, has been, and is, acting in accordance with law and the public interest.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) at the earliest practicable date during the present Congress the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will this resolution be read under the 5-minute rule and then be subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Do I understand from the statement of the Chair that the rule is not subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Georgia makes a motion for the previous question and that is voted down, the resolution is then open to amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand the situation, it is this: The time under the resolution is entirely within the control of the gentleman from Georgia. If the gentleman from Georgia yields for an amendment, he loses the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. So that if a Member desires to amend this resolution, it may be done only by unanimous consent, unless the gentleman from Georgia yields the floor, when the control of the time goes to the gentleman offering the amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is correct, or unless the motion for the previous question, which will probably be submitted by the gentleman from Georgia, is voted down.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Under the rules of the House, any Member has a right to offer one motion to recommit with or without instructions. Is not that correct?

The SPEAKER. Not on a matter that is reported by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the Chair hold that, under the rules of the House, no Member can move to strike out and substitute?

The SPEAKER. No motion or amendment is in order after the previous question is ordered. If the gentleman from Georgia does not yield for an amendment, an amendment cannot be offered.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and suggest that he use some of that time now.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes. This resolution is reported to the House by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Rules. In the last session of the Congress hearings were held by the Rules Committee on a similar resolution and representatives of the Federal Communications Commission were present and testified. The Rules Committee is composed of practically the same membership in this Congress with one single exception, so, with the information and the facts already presented, when this resolution came up before us the other day, the members were unanimous in reporting it out after we had heard a statement by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]. I think if every Member of the House, whether Republican or Democrat, had heard that statement, he would have favored reporting the resolution, and will probably support it on final passage.

The House of Representatives has not created very many investigating committees. The Senate, on the other hand, has some six investigating committees out, and as far as I know every one of them is doing an exceedingly valuable work. This is the first select committee of investigation that the House has created for some time and I hope there will be as many as are needed. This resolution involves a fundamental principle of American government, that of freedom of speech, freedom of inquiry, and freedom of discussion. That is the home-born fireside privilege of every American and must be preserved. The resolution provides:

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a study and investigation of the organization, personnel, and activities of the Federal Communications Commission, with a view to determining whether or not such commission in its organization, in the selection of personnel, and in the conduct of its activities, has been, and is, acting in accordance with law and the public interest.

I want now to refer briefly to one individual who holds an important post under that Commission, Prof. Goodwin Watson, Chief, Analysis Division, Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service, who comes from Warwick in my district. In 1936 he was a member of the advisory committee, Reconciliation Trips to U. S. S. R., sponsoring sending American youths to Soviet Russia for training and instruction in communism; 1937, member, advisory board, American Students Union—communistic; 1938, director, Consumers Union—radical, left-wingers, and Communists; 1938, leader of Open Road, sponsorship for trips to U. S. S. R.; 1939, signer of petition to discontinue Dies committee, sponsored by the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom; 1939, endorser for American League for Peace and Democracy, formerly the League Against War and Fascism, denounced by Dies committee as a Communist organization; 1938, asked teachers of the Nation—in a speech sponsored by Teachers College, Columbia University—to indoctrinate children to overthrow "conservative reactionaries" directing American Government and industry—New York Herald Tribune, June 29, 1938.

I assume Dr Watson refers to constitutional Democrats and Republicans whose liquidation he urges. I hope this committee, as the resolution provides for an investigation of the personnel, will likewise investigate Professor Watson and his communistic activities. On November 28, 1941, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], in a speech before the House, stated he had informed the Chairman, Mr. Fly, of the F. C. C., that Dr. Watson—

> Had probably associated himself with a large number of front organizations of the Communist Party; and, second, that Goodwin Watson had for years been a propagandist for communism and the Soviet Union.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The matter that I had in mind awhile ago is this: The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] has a resolution to also investigate the entire broadcasting system, the broadcasting monopolies, and also the very things the gentleman from New York talks about, who are using the radio for selfish purposes or for propaganda purposes.

Mr. FISH. And for smear purposes.

Mr. RANKIN. For smear purposes, and I am wondering why the Rules Committee did not accept at least some of the provisions of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama, to make this complete investigation, if it is the desire to make any investigation at all.

Mr. FISH. That was not suggested in the Rules Committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I shall take 3 minutes more. That amendment was not proposed, as far as I know, in the Committee on Rules. Of course it would mean an entirely different investigation, a very much broader investigation. This is a specific authorization to investigate only the matters set forth in the resolution but it includes the activities of F. F. C. which are extensive. I am in sympathy with what the gentleman from Mississippi says, but I would suggest an additional resolution, to investigate a much broader field, and by an entirely different committee. There is ample work for two committees to perform if freedom of speech and our free institutions are to be preserved.

Mr. RANKIN. It seems to me that the same committee could make the entire investigation.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. I would suggest that insofar as the alleged monopolistic practices in radio are concerned, very extensive hearings were had of that whole matter by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee in the last Congress. While no bill was reported, the hearings are very complete. I would not undertake to speak for the committee, but I have no doubt that in due time that particular thing to which the gentleman from Mississippi has referred will be under consideration by the proper legislative committee.

Mr. RANKIN. And let me say to the gentleman from Indiana that there are certain propagandists now broadcasting that have for their object the destruction of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FISH. And I am in accord with that statement. There has been a continuous and communistic or radically inspired program to attack and discredit Congress for the purpose of destroying representative and constitutional government.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not think we ought to wait on this snail-progressing committee, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I do not think the resolution should be gummed up by matters not under consideration.

Mr. FISH. I am in accord with that. I think the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Alabama ought to stand on the merits of their own resolution. From my point of view there is a great deal of merit to their proposed resolution, and it should have been presented to the Rules Committee—and I hope it will be in the near future—in order to protect the Members of this House, as well as the House itself, against constant abuse and vilification over the radio seeking to undermine the confidence of the American people in their elected Representatives and republican form of government.

Let me say in conclusion, as we are fighting for the "four freedoms" all over the world, we in the Congress should do everything in our power to preserve those same "four freedoms" in America. By far the most important and paramount one is the freedom of speech, which is involved in this resolution. Certainly if our sons are sacrificing their lives to maintain the "four freedoms" throughout the world, it is our duty as Members of Congress to preserve these freedoms in America, particularly freedom of speech.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am this morning bringing to you a matter in which I have the deepest possible personal interest. If the resolution I am offering is adopted, it will operate as a depressant upon the bureaucrats seeking to swallow up all legislative power which belongs alone to Congress and should be of like concern to you.

In 1939 the Albany Herald, a newspaper, the editor of which is Mr. Henry T. McIntosh, the model man of my State, its first citizen, brought to my attention that it was interested in the development of a small broadcasting station in Albany, Ga. Ours is something of a desert land insofar as radio is concerned. In Albany there is a small station, but it did not render entirely satisfactory service to the people within that territory, though it rendered a service that was valuable and appreciated.

Following this first communication from Mr. McIntosh, the Albany Herald filed its application for leave to establish a station. The Albany Herald is a daily newspaper, the largest newspaper published in the southwest quarter of my State, and is the paper of widest circulation.

The people who own and operate the Albany Herald are my lifelong friends. They are people with whom I was reared. They are my confidants. They are people whom I love and who love me. In the spring of 1940 permission to build and operate a station was granted by the Federal Communications Commission.

While the application was pending in the Commission I made many visits to the Commission. I visited with Mr. Fly, with Mr. Ring, its engineer, with Mr. Walker, another member of the Commission, with the counsel of the Commission. I consulted freely and frequently with Mr. Dempsey, its general counsel. After the license had been granted and the station had been built and had been operating for about a year, a new corporation was set up to take over the property and its operation. That new corporation was created because of advice given to me, to the counsel of the Albany Herald and to its manager, by Mr. Dempsey, the general counsel of the Commission, in which Mr. Dempsey said that because of the hostile attitude of the Commission toward newspaper ownership and operation of radio, a new corporation to take over and to operate the station should be created. Tremendous correspondence passed between McIntosh, the Albany Herald, counsel, and others interested in the station and myself. When the new corporation was set up, and without any knowledge on my part, they issued to me, upon the suggestion of Mr. McIntosh, according to the minutes, a check for $2,500, which was in turn endorsed by me and returned as payment for stock in a like amount in the new corporation. Later on the stock was issued for $2,500 in the new corporation. It may be worth $2,500 or it may not be worth a dime. It will not be worth a dime unless the new corporation is permitted to function. Friends in the new corporation insisted they wanted me connected with the station; that they wanted me to serve in an advisory capacity. They had been told that I could not represent them before the Commission or anyone connected with the Commission or any other agency of the Government. They said they did not want this; that they had their regular counsel.

When the new corporation was set up, an application for transfer of ownership of property and license to operate was made to the Commission. In March 1942, after the station had been operating for more than a year, and after the Albany Herald had filed its application for leave to transfer, about which I had nothing to do and no information, I introduced a resolution to investigate the Commission.

Neither the Albany Herald nor McIntosh nor any other person interested in the Albany property had any knowledge, much less anything to do with my introducing the resolution to investigate. The resolution which I offered was the result of representations made to me by the small broadcasters throughout the country, by newspapers having an interest in broadcasting, and by people in the Government—people connected with the Army and with the Navy, and many others, and because of the bad reputation of the Commission ever since it was first created; all these people insisted that Mr. Fly, the Chairman of the Commission, was undertaking to set up a despotic dictatorship over all media of communication. That he has been endeavoring to do that I attest to be a fact. To those of you who doubt the truthfulness of this statement, if you know anybody connected with the Commission in whom you have confidence, and will telephone them now, they will tell you. Or if you still have doubt and you know anybody in the newspaper field who in anywise is interested in broadcasting, ask them and they will tell you so.

Now, after the resolution was introduced, Mr. Fly sent his agents into my district. He did for me just what he has done for other Members of Congress. He did for me just what he has done for everybody else who has made any criticism of the Commission and of its communistic operations. He set his gestapo like a pack of hungry wolves on my trail, and they have trailed me since the day I offered the first resolution, and they are trailing me now.

As stated he sent these agents into my district. They went to the office of the broadcasters and they rifled their files. They went to the office of the Albany Herald and they rifled its files. They went to the office of the counsel of the Herald and the broadcasting company and they rifled his files. They came back and brought a bale of material here to Washington over the protest of the people whose property it was. They brought it to Washington and they have it now, and they refused to return it over repeated appeals on the part of the people whose property it is.

That was not all. They went in the banks of my district in an effort to find something on me; they went to the post offices in my district and made investigation as to registered mail that had been sent to me, and they sought to make an investigation of that. And that is not all. This man Fly, when his agents got back to Washington, went down to the Department of Justice and appealed to the Department to prosecute me or to initiate some sort of investigation. He and his snoopers and spies have in a sense sat upon the steps of the Department of Justice for a year almost making appeal after appeal that the Department initiate an investigation of me. They cited the Herald radio station to show cause as to why the license granted to it should not be revoked and as to why other applications that it had on file should not be denied. Those hearings were continued from time to time for the purpose of giving Fly further opportunity to influence the Department of Justice to investigate me, continued not once, not twice, but more than that; and following every continuance another visit by the gestapo of this man Fly, who is the worst of a bad lot, was made to the Department of Justice.

And that is not all, my friends; that is not all. This same Fly—and if I were disposed to go into his record I could bury him with filth—he sent his agents into the Internal Revenue, his gestapo into the Bureau of Internal Revenue to examine my returns from 1931 up to last year; they made photostatic copies of them. That was not all: They made a like investigation in Internal Revenue of a clerk in my office. Think of it, my friends. A clerk in my office. They went into the Internal Revenue department in my State and made a similar investigation there.

As to the stock that was issued to me, that was in the new corporation; it was issued on the basis of an opinion, furnished by their attorney, that it was perfectly ethical and legitimate for a Member of Congress to represent anybody insofar as he did not appear before any agency or agent of the Government in their behalf. From the time that stock was issued I have never communicated directly or indirectly with the Commission with reference to any interest of the broadcasting company or of anybody else; there was no irregularity in the transaction, no effort to cover up at all; and I might say to you as to what disposition was made of the stock, not made in the endeavor to cover up anything, it was transferred to a little private charity.

This resolution that is pending here now is a reintroduction of the first resolution. I am endeavoring to have a special committee set up to investigate the Commission and its operations and I say to you that of all the bureaucrats who have sought to smear Congress this man Fly is the worst. His pursuit of me has been nothing but blackmail. When he was down here in the Tennessee Valley Authority a cell of the Communist Party which was referred to as the best unit of the entire organization was set up in the Authority; and there are other things I might tell you. His whole outfit now is a nest of "reds." This man Dodd, who opposed HOWARD SMITH 4 years ago, is there; so is the man who wrote the statement that Congress was the joke of the century; he is still there, this man Dodd, who said to his draft board over in Virginia about 5 weeks ago that he was going to South Africa, but applied to the State Department for a passport to England and was denied a passport because of his communistic affiliations, he is down there now. This Commission as run by Fly is the nastiest nest of rats to be found in this entire country.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered. The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 21, Seventy-eighth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Select Committee to Conduct a Study and Investigation of the Organization, Personnel, and Activities of the Federal Communications Commission the following Members of the House: Mr. COX (chairman), Mr. HART, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, and Mr. MILLER of Missouri.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on a subject and to include a letter and newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address by Dean Ackerman, of the Columbia School of Journalism.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to speak for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. CELLER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the announcement that, immediately after the adjournment of the House today, there will be a Democratic caucus.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] is recognized for 25 minutes.

PAY-AS-YOU-EARN INCOME-TAX PLAN

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, for several days there has been a running debate on the subject of the improvement of our income-tax procedure. What brings this discussion about is that more than a year ago when the tax act of 1942 was under consideration it became apparent that, to protect the revenue, income taxes should be paid at the source out of current income. Nothing was done in the House. I introduced a bill in June which I presented to the Committee on Ways and Means, but at that time it received scant consideration. In the Senate a new tax was devised, designated as the Victory tax, payable out of current income and at the source. We now have two income taxes—one under the act of 1913, the other under the act of 1942. Both are payable out of 1943 income. One is measured by the actual income of the previous year, and the other by the current year. The principle of making payment out of current income has been recognized in the Victory tax and, therefore, needs no argument to support it. Our only difficulty is in getting our income tax under the act of 1913 over to a current basis.

The methods of assessment and collection under the act of 1913 are obsolete, resulting in loss of revenue. The fundamental principle providing for payment according to ability to pay is lacking. The income tax has been in operation for 29 years, and experience has developed its defects. Some have been corrected. It is possible to strengthen the system to avoid loss through delinquencies and avoidances by making the date of payment conform to the taxpayer's ability to pay. The necessary change requires that payment be made out of current income. This can only be done by changing our present system to provide that the tax be based on anticipated income for the current year rather than on the actual income of the previous year.

Mr. Mayne S. Howard is a distinguished authority. He was for a time director of research of the Department of Taxes and Taxation of New York. He is general editor of Tax Systems of the World. I quote from his recent book, Principles of Public Finance:

> Personal income tax is based upon ability to pay. It is intended to be personal to an extreme degree. The flow of commodities or benefits during the years, stated in terms of market value, is the precise ability upon which the personal income tax is imposed.
> The personal income tax is the tax which most closely conforms to the principle of ability. It best allows for those fluctuations in the taxpayer's means which result from the vicissitudes of life and business.
> It reaches many who do not accumulate property and who thus escape the property tax.
> It never falls upon those without resources. (Its date of payment, however, may be deferred so long that the taxpayer has no funds left with which to pay it.)
> The taxpayer may lose all his assets between the end of the taxable year and the date of payment.

In these observations Mr. Howard shows the defect in our present system—that the date of payment is too long deferred, and when the time for payment comes the taxpayer may have lost or dissipated his assets and be without the ability to pay. Such losses now occur and will become larger as the number of taxpayers increases. The date of payment should be changed so that payments will be made out of current income. As it is now, more than a year elapses before payment is demanded. Payments should be made when the taxpayer has the ability to pay, that is, out of his income on a pay-as-you-earn basis. We now designate the tax as a "tax on income." It should be a "tax out of income."

The greatly expanded power and authority of the Federal Government, to which must be added the cost of the war, create new problems in Federal taxation. We have attempted to meet the demands by a piecemeal expansion of our tax program. We have now reached a point where we must build an entirely new tax structure based on present-day needs. To modernize the administration of the income-tax law is as important as finding new sources of revenue and increasing rates.

The adoption of the income-tax amendment made available to the Federal Government tremendous resources. The personal income tax has become its principal source of revenue. In the effort to realize additional revenue personal exemptions have been reduced to increase the number of taxpayers, and the rates have been increased, until now the number of taxpayers is upward of 27,000,000, and the ability to pay is largely dependent upon current income.

The first income tax was adopted in 1913. The needs of the Government then were quite different from what they are today. Taxpayers were few, the rates were low, and the tax applied to a class of people who were well able to meet the payments any time demand was made.

These facts are probably responsible for the error that was made at the time of the adoption of the first act in basing the tax on the actual income of the previous year. Had it been based on the income of the current year we would not now be facing the problem of the change necessary to protect present-day income.

The adoption of the income tax is the principal factor in the expansion of the Federal Government and the centralization of power and authority in Washington. The inadequate revenue systems of many States made it difficult for them to finance public improvements, and resort was had to the Federal Government for money with which to provide public buildings, highways, irrigation systems, public-power developments, and other public improvements. The Federal Government became the instrument whereby moneys raised through taxation in the prosperous States could be diverted to areas less fortunate. The suggestion that we could spend our way back to prosperity in a depression period by the expenditure of large funds for public works, the idea that prices could be fixed by regulating supply and demand through subsidies to farmers, and the political advantage of these policies to those in control of the Government with unlimited means at their command, resulted in the expansion of the functions and expenses of the Federal Government. The consequences were disregarded. They are now being realized. They increased the national debt upward of $40,000,000,000 over a period of 8 years.

Wars, too, have played their part. Many of the powers conveyed to the Federal Government as necessary to national defense create Government agencies which continue beyond the emergency for which they were intended. We have had two such epochs since the advent of the income tax, and both have contributed to our expanding bureaucratic government.

The total revenue from the income tax in 1914, the first year of its operation, from both individuals and corporations, was $71,000,000. In the fiscal year of 1941 it had increased to $6,331,000,000. This tremendous increase was provided by increasing rates and the number of taxpayers. The Revenue Act of 1942 further increased the number of taxpayers and the rates, and still further increases are contemplated during the current year. Our collections are made under an administrative system entirely outmoded. The resulting loss must be considerable. These losses will be converted into savings if the taxpayers are required to meet their obligations out of current income.

Every consideration of our present-day tax problems suggests the need of economy and efficiency—a reduction in expenditures by abolishing unnecessary or duplicating agencies, and greater efficiency in the operation of those agencies which are essential. Improved efficiency is the purpose of the proposal to modernize our income-tax system. The Government will benefit by better collections, less delinquencies, and fewer tax-avoidance practices. Hence, the suggestion that personal income taxes be collected out of current earnings. This will require that the taxes for 1943 be paid out of 1943 income. But, as matters now stand, 1942 taxes are payable out of 1943 income. It follows that, with such a change, the taxpayer would face the payment of 2 years' taxes in 1. Such a burden would challenge the ability of the taxpayer to make such payments. This and the fact that there are advantages to the Government in changing to the pay-as-you-earn plan make it appropriate that some concession should be made in connection with the 1942 income-tax debt. What that concession should be is the only obstacle standing in the way of this much-needed improvement. The change must be made without too much disturbance to our present procedure and loss or inconvenience to the Treasury.

The most logical plan of the many that have been offered is that of Mr. Beardsley Ruml. It is based on the principle of ability to pay and sound principles of finance practiced in the world of business and banking. This plan would abate the taxes for 1942, and instead of using the actual income of 1942 as a basis for the tax, it would substitute the current income of 1943 and make the tax payable out of income of the current year. I am in entire accord with Mr. Ruml except as to administrative details. It is my idea, as suggested by the bills I have introduced, that, having in mind the large number of taxpayers in the lower brackets, monthly rather than quarterly payments would be in better conformity with the principle of ability to pay, and that tentative returns should be filed with the first monthly payment in February with the privilege of annual or ad interim adjustments.

What will actually happen under the basic idea of the Ruml plan is that the taxes based on the 1942 income, payable in 1943, will be abated. In their place will be substituted a tax for 1943 using as a basis the current income, and the 1943 tax will be collected in lieu of the 1942 tax.

The abatement of a tax suggests a loss to the Government and our difficulty is that such a loss is here apparent. But there are different kinds of losses, and this loss is the type that will suffer the Government no inconvenience. The flow of income to the Treasury will continue because in place of the abated 1942 tax there will be substituted the tax for 1943. The abated tax will not amount to an actual loss to the Government for much of it will be returned in course of time by the operation of the estate tax. The difference will be compensated for by various items such as improved collections, less delinquencies, and an increased income in 1943 and subsequent years from anticipated increases in incomes and the number of taxpayers.

The delinquency factor is illustrated by those who will die owing the Government for their 1942 income taxes, and whose estates will be insolvent. So the Government loses. The tax is abated and the Government will never get its money. This is an enforced abatement. These situations can be multiplied by the number of persons who will die, as well as by those who have lost their earning power through illness, accident, old age, or other causes, and who will be unable to produce the money for their income taxes. That situation will continue for years to come under existing law. By the voluntary abatement of 1 year's taxes for the purpose of putting everybody on a basis where income taxes will be paid out of current income such losses will cease.

Now, I know there are those of you who, in spite of what I have pointed out, will be unable to dismiss from your minds the thought that by the adoption of the program a whole year's personal income tax will be lost to the Treasury. Well, you must take a broader view than that. What is proposed is not for a year. Its purpose is to protect the revenue year after year for years to come, and the loss of 1 year's revenue—if it be a loss—may not be too much of a price to pay for the benefits that will result from the application of the principle. The important consideration is that collections out of current income will be money in hand in the Treasury, and will be an assurance against actual and substantial losses should the country be confronted with the vicissitudes of economic depression and the taxpayer be without the money to pay the taxes that accrued in a previous year.

Mr. Ruml points out that one criticism of his plan stems from a feeling that somehow Congress would be forgiving a debt to all taxpayers who are now subject to the 1942 tax, and as to that he says:

> It is a common practice, as evidenced by the experience of banks and other commercial institutions, to recognize debtor-creditor relations, upon the initiative of either party, whenever it becomes necessary in furthering the best continued interests of both, and certainly the canceling of debt, in order to further the welfare of all concerned, has had the high approval of age-old moral authorities.

But it can be argued that we are not forgiving a debt at all. The Treasury has never set up on its books as an asset anticipated tax collections, and tax assessments amount to nothing more than a contingent liability which Congress can increase or decrease at will. The practice of adopting retroactive tax measures, although questionable and somewhat unfair, is established and should work both ways. The Treasury is only concerned with the flow of operating revenue. The means by which it is provided is the concern of Congress, and, if an improvement in our machinery of tax collection can be made without disturbing the supply of operating revenue to the Treasury, good business practice dictates that it should be done.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. I understand from the gentleman that he favors the Ruml plan virtually in its entirety.

Mr. McLEAN. Yes; with the modifications I have stated.

Mr. MURDOCK. Including the provision to abate or cancel the 1942 taxes?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. I cannot agree with the gentleman fully in that one respect, although I do want to agree with him in others and I want to compliment the gentleman on the fine presentation of this matter which he has made. Now is the proper time, I think, to change from the year-behind scheme to the pay-as-you-go system. Will not the gentleman agree that a provision for collecting the 1942 taxes by spreading their payment over a certain definite period might be more satisfactory? I cannot favor canceling them entirely.

Mr. McLEAN. The gentleman will find that my first bill gave the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the power to make such adjustments as might be convenient for the taxpayer. My second bill has provision making the tax a lien upon the taxpayer's estate at death, but that period is a considerable time from the due date and it is in conflict with the principle of ability to pay as I see it now. The advantage being uniform to all taxpayers, we should meet this difficulty with the philosophy of the farmer who finding his barn on fire tears down another barn between the fire and his house in order to save his house.

We have reached the point where we might just as well abate these taxes for 1942, clean the slate, start all over again and get our income tax on the basis where authorities say it ought to be, so that it will be a tax out of income payable currently when the taxpayer has the ability to pay and not a tax on income to be paid or demand for which will be made at some future time when the taxpayer is without the means to pay.

Mr. MURDOCK. As I see it, an individual's debt to the Government is as sacred as the Government's debt to the individual. Both should be paid fully if at all possible.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This may sound like a facetious inquiry at first, but I mean it very seriously. If the Treasury is not concerned with matters except that it have a constant flow of money, why not let the 1943 income-tax payment which we make apply for the year 1944 and be a year in advance all the time?

Mr. McLEAN. The gentleman would not say that is a current payment; would he?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not talking about current payments.

Mr. McLEAN. I am. I say that current payments are absolutely essential.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, the Treasury receives the money or the Treasury has a constant flow of money with which to meet its outgoing disbursements and the taxpayer is put in the position where he has paid in advance, and this certainly gives him an advantage; there is no question about that. If a fellow dies before the thing materializes, let the Treasury refund it to him. I submit that question seriously, and at the same time I would like to submit another one.

Mr. McLEAN. Could I answer the gentleman's first question?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes. I was not going to insist on an answer.

Mr. McLEAN. The logical thing to do would be to provide for the filing in the month of January of a tentative return of the taxpayer's estimated income for the year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. For the year?

Mr. McLEAN. For the year; and out of the money that is earned in January one-twelfth of the tax would then be paid and one-twelfth would be paid in each successive month. The taxpayer would be given the privilege of making adjustments according to his fortune, good or ill, during the year, and at the end of the year would make adjustments to his exact income.

Death and misfortune come quickly and unexpectedly. The idea of the income tax, being so personal, is to keep it up to date and concurrent with a man's ability to pay.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with that principle so fundamentally that I have followed that custom for years in my own affairs, either by depositing the money away from my normal use or through the purchase of tax-anticipation certificates. I can prove that by actual demonstration.

My other question is this: If the Treasury is not to receive the $10,000,000,000 to $25,000,000,000 from the taxpayers on 1942 income by reason of this remitting or canceling out——

Mr. McLEAN. Abatement, I call it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will not the Treasury be put in a position currently where it must borrow that additional amount of money, whatever it may be?

Mr. McLEAN. No. Under the present system money will begin to flow into the Treasury on 1942 taxes on March 15 next. Under my system, the flow would begin on the 1st of February on 1943 taxes.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

WE HAVE TOO MANY PEOPLE ON THE FEDERAL PAY ROLL

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, throughout the country a vast majority of the people are clamoring for the drastic reduction of every item of nonessential spending of the people's money for unnecessary things. Much comment has been made regarding the huge number of employees now on the Federal pay roll. It may be of interest for the people and the country to know that quite recently it was definitely determined that there were 4,073 civilians on the Federal pay roll in the city of Indianapolis, Ind. That check was made only a few days ago, but in order to ascertain just what the present number of civilians on that pay roll may be it would be necessary to make another and a complete check again to secure the exact information on this subject. The changes in personnel and in the number of the employees is rapid. As one of the agency heads stated, upon being asked the number of employees in his department, his answer was:

> Do you mean how many were working here this morning, or do you mean how many are working here this afternoon?

Even the department heads are unable to keep pace with the numerical strength of the civilian personnel under their control. New faces appear each day in this astounding build-up of those Federal agencies.

The people are protesting vigorously against this waste and confusion. Of course, that vast number of civilians on the Federal pay roll in the city of Indianapolis covers only a small part of those employees in the State of Indiana. Every city and every county has its large group of civilians who are on the Federal pay roll; and, while I am unable to give to the Congress the exact number of those employees in the State of Indiana—I wish I had the exact number so I could impart that information to the public—but it will suffice to say that those 4,073 civilian employees in the city of Indianapolis alone are drawing an annual salary of approximately $7,800,000. This amount increases as additional civilians are added to the pay roll. Here I wish to add that of that total number of civilian employees in that city, in all agencies, only 538 are directly involved and engaged in the emergency war effort, and that number includes all the paid workers on all the local draft boards, rationing boards, and kindred agencies. All of the remainder of the 4,073 are working in departments which are presumed to constitute the cogs in the normal machinery of government.

The city of Indianapolis is a sizable city of almost 400,000 people. But the city government of that city is operated, in its entirety, by approximately 2,000 employees. These city employees, of just about one-half the number of the civilian Federal employees, operate all departments of that great city. There is no scarcity of help, but every person on the pay roll has a job, and they are responsible for that particular task and its completion.

Mr. Speaker, may I say that our State government in Indiana, with all of its governmental functions, with its hospitals, its institutions, its schools, its prisons, and with every essential department of State government, has only approximately 12,000 State employees on the pay roll. These State employees each have a job, and they are each responsible for the completion of that job. They have complete organization in every department of State government. No employee is given a job unless his or her services are necessary. While I do not know the number of civilian Federal employees in the State of Indiana, as I have hereinbefore stated, yet I am constrained to believe that the civilian Federal employees in the State of Indiana, now on the pay roll, exceed in number all of the State employees in that State.

What does the payment of the staggering sum of approximately $7,800,000 in wages and salaries to that 4,073 people who are now on the Federal pay roll in the city of Indianapolis mean to our war effort? And what does the payment of many times that amount in wages and salaries to the civilian Federal employees in Indiana mean to the war effort? Take, for instance, the sum of $7,800,000 paid annually to those Federal employees in the city of Indianapolis alone, and that sum would pay for 80,000 Garand rifles, or 1 modern submarine, or 100 pursuit planes; that sum would equip our boys on the battle front with machine guns and antiaircraft guns; it would give them food and shelter; it would give them tanks and ammunition. And we must remember these employees are only a part of the approximately 3,000,000 civilians who are now on the Federal pay roll in time of war and national emergency. With this vast number of civilian employees, all now drawing huge sums in wages and salaries from our Government, the very vital part of the lifeblood is being sucked out of our all-out war effort. These nonwar and nonessential civilian employees must be reduced to the very minimum. Those whose services are not required to carry on the necessary functions essential to our war effort must go. Business must be injected into every department of Government, and business policies must be inaugurated by all those in charge.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman has no doubt made a careful study of this subject, judging from the way he is presenting it. I wonder if the gentleman would venture to give us an opinion as to what proportion of the nearly 3,000,000 civilian employees of the Government are unnecessary to the carrying on of the functions of the Government.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I say to my distinguished friend from Kentucky, that in making a comparison between the situation existing in the present war and in World War No. 1, that the peak of employment of civilian personnel during World War No. 1 was less than 900,000, although we had an Army of more than 5,000,000 men in the field. We would have ample civilian employees if one-third to one-half of those now on the pay roll were discharged.

Mr. Speaker, unless this civilian personnel is reduced to a minimum, we may soon find it hard to secure the means with which to prosecute this war properly. We must win this war. The people of this country are willing to make every necessary sacrifice to win this war but they do not want to make untold sacrifices and find their hard-earned dollars being squandered and frittered away in the payment of high wages and salaries to useless and valueless employees on the Federal pay roll.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to my colleague the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GILLIE. May I ask my colleague if he can give us the amount paid the Federal employees as compared with the amount paid the 12,000 State employees of Indiana?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not have the exact amount of the pay roll. However, the number on the pay roll in the State of Indiana in all departments of government is 12,000. In the city of Indianapolis alone, there are 4,073 Federal employees drawing the huge sum of more than $7,800,000 per year in wages. Mark you, that number is increasing daily. The civilian Federal employees in the State of Indiana, at this moment, will equal, or exceed, the number of the State employees in that State. I am confident this same situation exists in practically every State in the Union.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WILSON. Is it not true that we are being called upon to furnish houses for these surplus employees and to supplement the transportation facilities taking them to and from work as well as the hospital facilities and all the other conveniences that go along with an increased population? If we should do without a thousand of these employees, it would also help us to save critical materials needed in the war effort that are now being used to build houses for these people.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is entirely correct, and I wish to thank him for that observation. The larger the employed civilian personnel, the greater the cost for transportation, housing, and all incidental matters. The total cost is appalling. It is absorbing the funds intended for our war effort.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has the gentleman made any particular inquiry with reference to the number of persons who have been taken off the farms in Indiana to fill these surplus jobs, in the light of the statement just made by the Secretary of Agriculture that in the 12 months ended last September, 1,500,000 persons had left the farms to go into other occupations, and in the further light of the proposal now being considered for the drafting of women and children to be placed on the farms as replacements for those who have left the farms to fill these unnecessary positions?

Mr. SPRINGER. May I say to my colleague that the migration of farm help into other occupations has been extremely high. The farmers have been left without sufficient help with which to operate their farms. The Government now asks our farmers to produce to the limit—but the help is not available; farm machinery and parts are under priorities—gasoline rationing has further impeded the farmer's progress, and our farmers are in a sad plight at this very moment. Many of those who were engaged in farming are now filling these unnecessary Government positions, we are advised.

As long as the loadstone of useless civilian employees, in various agencies of Government, is forced upon the people of this country—those employees drawing the very funds which should go into our war effort—we are laboring under a very serious handicap. This waste, extravagance, and confusion might mean disaster. This great governmental blunder might make it hard to win the victory which every American contemplates and desires.

Many of those civilian employees mentioned herein are engaged in rationing of every kind, in housing activities, in rent control, and other kindred projects, many of which could be better controlled and more advantageously handled by the local authorities, all of whom would willingly give their time and effort for the welfare of their country. You have observed the comparatively few of the total number of such employees that are engaged in the emergency war effort. The 538 civilians who are engaged on the war effort are, perhaps, essential. If they are engaged in some essential task connected with our war effort, they should be retained. However, there are 3,535 of such civilian employees who have no direct or indirect connection with any essential war work. That vast number of employees—all civilians—on the Federal pay roll in the one city is astounding. Many of them could well be dispensed with, which would result in a tremendous saving for the war effort, because their services are unnecessary and wasteful. Many of those civilian employees are young men, of military age, who are sound and well, capable of performing military duty. Many of them should be discharged from the Federal pay roll in order to aid our country in our all-out effort for victory in this war.

Mr. Speaker, the people in Indiana, and those in all of the States in our Union, want to win this war as quickly as possible. They do not want our war effort to become bogged down because of the heavy inroads made upon our finances by nonessential spending of the money which has been provided for victory in this war. They want the waste and extravagance stopped. They are sick and tired of bureaucratic government. They detest the useless and unnecessary regulations imposed upon them, and they are tired and worn from making reports of many and various kinds, many of which could not be of any worth-while benefit to any department in Washington. The tremendous overloading of the Federal agencies with civilians who are now on the pay roll may be attributed to the bureaucrats. They appear to enjoy heading an agency that is top-heavy with personnel; they want to spend the taxpayers' money. In the city of Indianapolis, where this unprecedented overloading with personnel has been developed, there are many people who are volunteering their services, gratuitously, for the war work, yet the overloading of those agencies continue without abatement.

Because of the waste and extravagance of the bureaucrats—and I might suggest the uninterrupted use of Government automobiles by them, with the running of motors while the cars are standing in order to keep the driver warm, although the public are conserving in their driving, and they are conserving gasoline—the people condemn such wasteful methods. The people are thinking of serious things—they are thinking of their boys, and their neighbors' boys, who are in this war for the very existence of this Republic.

Mr. Speaker, let us resurrect the records of World War No. 1 and compare some of those records with those of today. During the peak of the employment of civilians in that war we had much less than 1,000,000 of such employees in all departments of Government. We had a vast Army then, and those civilians performed every task and rendered every essential service. But today, in this war, we find that we have approximately 3,000,000 civilian employees, all of whom are on the Federal pay roll. The people shudder when they contemplate the result of such a policy of wastefulness and extravagance.

Mr. Speaker, this is a frightful and appalling situation. Our people throughout the land are bending their backs to earn money with which to buy bonds and stamps; they are trying to meet the terrific tax load which has been, and which will be, placed upon them; and they want to do everything within their power to aid in the prosecution of this war. Yet they want every person in high Government places to likewise bend their backs in curtailing and reducing every item of nonessential and nondefense spending of their money. They demand that their Government, and every officer and agent thereof, exert the same conscientious effort to win this war that they, the people, are doing. They want their money used to aid in the war effort and in winning the war. They protest against the spending of their money, which has been contributed for the war effort, for other nonessential uses and unwarranted purposes. They protest against the spending of their money for the purpose of paying the wages and salaries of useless and needless employees.

The people want to go forward after this war is over, Mr. Speaker, without having unnecessary burdens placed upon them which are caused by waste, extravagance, and bungling. They want to live again in the American way of life in our country, where peace shall reign and where liberty and freedom shall ever obtain. They want to go forward uninterrupted by internal obstructions against the war effort, with a clear vision, with a keen and correct understanding, and with an indomitable will and an unselfish determination to save the United States of America.

ADJUSTMENT OF EGG PRICES

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a petition from 38 citizens of Boswell, Choctaw County, Okla., protesting against a ceiling price of 32 cents a dozen on eggs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAMSPECK). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, if the citizens of Boswell, Okla., knew what price we paid in Washington for eggs they would really have a grievance. We started housekeeping here last Saturday. Our first dozen eggs cost us 69 cents. Something should be done to take up the slack between the price of Boswell eggs, 32 cents a dozen, and Washington eggs, 69 cents a dozen. If this is efficiency, if this is justice, I have the wrong conception of the meaning of those words. This is one of the difficulties confronting us today in satisfying the public that Congress is in dead earnest. If we do not give them an explanation they may want someone who will explain it to them eventually.

Mr. Speaker, the petition to which I referred at the beginning of my remarks is as follows:

BOSWELL, OKLA., January 15, 1943.

Hon PAUL STEWART,

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have been selected by the local Office of Price Administration to call your attention to the ceiling price on eggs, as compared to the prices we pay for feed consumed by hens. We have a ceiling price of 32 cents per dozen on eggs, which will be reduced shortly due to volume of eggs thrown on the market.

However, when the ceiling price was fixed, laying mash sold for $2.50 per 100 pounds, small grain for $1.35 per 100; oystershells at $1 per 100. The prices have now advanced until we are paying $3.10 per 100 pounds for mash, $2.50 for small grain, and $1 for 80 pounds of oystershells.

We are told by the dealers to expect higher prices to increase, as there is no ceiling price on feed. To those of us who have increased our poultry flocks due to helping the war effort, this is a handicap, as our eggs will scarcely pay for the feed at present price levels.

Can we hope for any adjustment? With best wishes for your success in Congress, we remain,

Yours sincerely,

Mrs. O. J. Majors, W. L. Pitts, R. H. Duncan, B. E. Pitts, Mrs. B. E. Pitts, W. W. Moran, W. G. Ruth, Mrs. W. G. Ruth, Mrs. V. H. Bryant, Mrs. O. E. Pattison, Mrs. S. D. Dobson, A. L. Middleton, Mrs. John Armstrong, Mrs. C. D. Ryburn, Mrs. J. D. Ingram, Mrs. H. L. Dewoody, Mrs. J. K. Porter, Mrs. W. Y. Morrijo, W. E. Bryant, Mrs. W. E. Bryant, Mrs. Carl Schuessler, Carl Schuessler, Maggie Wallace, Mrs. M. D. Harper, Mrs. Frank Yoe, Mrs. Paul Leader, Mrs. Charles Yoe, Mrs. A. T. Tillery, Mrs. W. C. Stephens, Eric Smith, Dixie Smith, W. C. Stephens, D. Wickwire, S. M. Danoer, J. L. Adair, O. J. Majors, Walter Webb.

AIRPLANE ACCIDENTS

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I take this time for the purpose of reminding gentlemen that tomorrow, immediately after the business on the Speaker's desk is disposed of, the committee appointed by the Congress under H. R. 125 will meet during an informal recess with the membership of the House, in executive session, to give you some facts which perforce, because of wartime emergencies, could not be put into our final report. There are many vital matters that the committee does not desire to withhold from the membership of the House, and we are taking the House not only into our full confidence, but we assure Members that we have some things to tell them which we feel they must know, and we hope there will be a good attendance.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. FULMER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

RENT CONTROL

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROLPH. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that letters to which I refer be printed at this place in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday—January 14, 1943—I addressed the House on rent control. I made reference to a letter from Joseph A. Brown, attorney for the apartment-house industry of San Francisco, which I forwarded to Hon. Joseph F. Byrnes.

Today I received a reply signed by Price Administrator Leon Henderson. To complete the record, I submit the following correspondence: Letter from Mr. Henderson, dated January 16, 1943, together with the Joseph A. Brown letter of December 28, 1942, and a letter from Price Administrator Henderson to Senator HIRAM W. JOHNSON:

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., January 16, 1943.

The Honorable THOMAS ROLPH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ROLPH: Your letter of January 5 to the Honorable James F. Byrnes enclosing a communication from Mr. Joseph A. Brown, of San Francisco, Calif., has been referred to this office for reply.

An identical letter from Mr. Brown has been directed to this office by Senator HIRAM W. JOHNSON. We are enclosing herewith a copy of our reply to Senator JOHNSON for your information.

Sincerely yours,

LEON HENDERSON, Administrator.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 28, 1942.

Hon. HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
United States Senate,

Hon. SHERIDAN DOWNEY,
United States Senate,

Hon. RICHARD J. WELCH,
Member of Congress,

Hon. THOMAS ROLPH,
Member of Congress,

MY DEAR SIRS: As the attorney for the Apartment House Industry of San Francisco, and as the representative of many apartment-house owners in the bay area, it is my belief that the suggestion herein made will be of general benefit to the owners of rental property in the United States and not in anywise interfere with the practical and effective operation of the Office of Price Administration—with reference to rent control—mainly intended to prevent inflation.

I might preliminarily observe that, with any sound proposal, law, rule, regulation, suggestion, plan, or order reasonably calculated to prevent inflation, we are heartily and unqualifiedly in accord and will support it whether compulsory or not. The grim specter of inflation hovers over the Nation in time of war and during periods of necessary enormous bond issues and governmental borrowing. It can only be curbed—if even that is effective—by universal regulation. Merely freezing rents will not suffice. The rising tide of wages, restaurant prices, meats, railroad fares, materials for building and most essential commodities for apartment-house operation, leaves rents remaining as the sole and single and absolute one thing in a grossly inequitable state.

Let us examine the subject in closer detail:

When, effective retroactively to March 1, 1942, rents were frozen on July 1, 1942, about one-half of the apartment-house operators in San Francisco were renting apartments from figures ranging from a low basis to one fairly ratable as being below cost. Since that time, city taxes have increased (although definitely we concede this should not rightly be true) and likewise every branch of repair, service, and maintenance costs has increased; furthermore, general living costs are conceded to have materially increased since March 1, 1942. There are thousands of instances requiring adjustment of real estate rentals to render a fair return to honest, conscientious, and 100 percent loyal, patriotic, and law-abiding landlords.

Under Office of Price Administration rules, no provision for curing, correcting, or alleviating in any form such inequalities, exists or has been made. These rules are inelastic and rigid. When this subject is discussed with those associated officially with the Office of Price Administration, the reply is made that neither the necessary manpower or funds to defray the cost of administering the law and giving individual attention, investigation, and hearing to each complaining owner, are available, and that the cost would be prohibitive and is, therefore, as a practical and feasible matter, out of the question.

When the reply is made that a patriotic committee of responsible businessmen, experienced in the field, volunteering for the work, sworn in under the Office of Price Administration Act as Federal officials, could be appointed to do this work—without one dollar of expense or cost to the Government—it is declared they could not be trusted or that the plan will not work—for some unexplained and inexplicable reason. To this we reply most vigorously that it cannot be true that there are not sufficient numbers of outstanding honorable American citizens throughout the United States who could, without a dollar of expense to the Government, administer efficiently and honestly this suggested feature of the law in harmony with the letter and spirit of the law designed primarily to prevent inflation. It is a most specious avoidance of the issue to contend against this plan. The United States Selective Service Act is administered by uncompensated civilian boards most successfully and competently, from local to appeal boards—and under that act the boards have a wide discretion and a vitally important duty to perform. They are not paid, and often times induct their friends and neighbors and their children, and perform their duties courageously and fearlessly. It is an unjustifiable impugning of the integrity of American citizenship to contend for such reasons against the plan herein proposed.

The plan does not contemplate encroaching o the functions or prerogatives of paid employees nor to displace them. The proposed boards would be an adjunct of the established Office of Price Administration offices in different cities and all should work in complete harmony.

It is our thought that these boards should be composed of sufficiently large numbers comparable to the population of each city concerned, for efficient and prompt investigation of injustices and inequalities. Simplified application forms could be employed by the applicants and must be prepared and formulated by themselves to obviate costs. These could be numbered and indexed and then referred to subcommittees of members residing or having their places of business in the locality concerned and a proper investigation made by such subcommittees. They would be required to report their findings in writing, whereupon they should be considered by the entire committee at a regularly scheduled meeting, with a calendar of all prepared cases, at which time the applicant and any tenant desiring to be heard could appear and present their respective cases. This would result in the fair and impartial consideration of cases and give to the American landlord and tenant the security of a fair hearing before a duly established tribunal. We feel this course will do much to create faith in the Office of Price

Administration and in the public support which is important to such a law, and will materially foster the Government's purpose.

The writer is firmly for the enforcement of all Office of Price Administration rules while they are in force, and always will be so disposed. It is the duty of an American citizen to abide by and support all law and order. Laws must be obeyed regardless of agreement or disagreement with them. American citizenship calls for and demands such obedience, and the writer has pledged his devotion and full adherence to the requirements of the Office of Price Administration rules and orders.

However, with equal determination, it is the considered opinion of the writer that the suggested relief plan is the only workable one for equity and justice in the premises. Won't you be good enough to strive for the enactment of appropriate legislation by the Congress to accomplish the purpose herein advocated? If the Congress can be positive the alleged and claimed obstacle to a full and just administration of the law can be effectively eradicated by entrusting the herein discussed proposed law to sworn uncompensated citizens, loyally desirous of administering justice under the Office of Price Administration without any cost or expense of any kind to our Government, then we earnestly and sincerely ask that the Congress enact the required legislation to effect the suggested plan.

That endless individual cases of injustice exist is beyond doubt. Even the most ardent Office of Price Administration administrative officers will concede the existence of such instances calling for remedial legislation—even though they are equally unwilling to concede the practicability of the proposal herein considered.

I feel certain the Nation's renters of multiple dwellings will deeply appreciate relief as herein suggested.

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH A. BROWN,
Attorney for Apartment House Industry of San Francisco.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION,

The Honorable HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR JOHNSON: We acknowledge receipt of your communication enclosing a letter from Mr. Joseph A. Brown, of San Francisco, setting forth certain suggestions concerning rent control.

This letter suggests that there has been an increase in wages, meats, railroad fares, materials for building, and other essential commodities, leaving rent as the one thing in an inequitable state. This argument is based on an essentially unsound comparison. It derives from the assumption that an increase in rent normally represents the same proportionate increase in a landlord's net income. This assumption is contrary to fact. A landlord's net income in the operation of rental housing is only a relatively small part of his gross rent income and a small percentage increase in gross rent income, whether from increased rates or increased occupancy, combined with relatively stable expenditures, results in a far larger percentage increase in net income. The contention with respect to the position of landlords neglects these factors.

In keeping with what we believe to be the intent of Congress, the effect of rent control upon the operation of real estate is under constant study. It is clear from these studies that the operating position of landlords will be considerably better under rent control than it was during 1939 and 1940, the 2 years immediately prior to the sharp impact of defense activities. It was not the intent of Congress, nor is it the purpose of the Administrator, to guarantee the landlords or any other class of persons a better financial position than they would have enjoyed in the absence of the peculiar economic conditions created by the war.

The proposal is made that the rents initially established by the regulation should be subject to adjustment upon application of the landlord through submission to voluntary panels. The letter does not attempt to set forth the standards which such panels would use in guiding their determination. In substance, this idea is not new. It was originally considered by Congress and rejected during the course of the House debates on the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942. The following amendment to the bill was proposed:

"When rents have been established as is herein provided, the same shall be adjusted upward or downward upon the application of the owner or the tenant so as to produce a gross rental which after payment of taxes and other costs of ownership, management, and operation, including depreciation and an allowance for vacancy, will provide a net return which is reasonable upon the value of the property."

This amendment was rejected because it was recognized that there is no satisfactory standard for measuring "reasonable return" and because of the tremendous administrative burden which it would entail. The impossibility of arriving at a determination of a satisfactory value of rental property which constitutes a "reasonable return" even as a follow-up measure may be briefly pointed out.

Valuations by tax authorities are useless. In some localities, as a matter of custom and practice, assessed values are fixed absurdly low. It would be grossly unfair to property owners to make their rents dependent upon such valuations. In other localities, assessed values are by custom and practice even higher than the prices at which properties are commonly bought and sold. To base rentals on such values would permit inflationary rises inconsistent with the purposes of the act.

It has been suggested that the value of a rental property for purposes of fixing a "reasonable return" might be determined by establishing a theoretical sales value or by applying the principle of prudent investment. However, both of these are largely dependent upon how much rent the property will produce. Thus, either of these devices requires the assumption of a point in controversy.

Other suggested devices by which value might be determined are cost of reproduction and actual cost less depreciation. Use of the reproduction cost device would reflect recent increases in building and material costs and would result in unduly high rents as to owners who built their properties when lower prices prevailed. In the case of owners whose properties are not favorably located in relation to transportation facilities or otherwise, reproduction cost as a basis for determining value is wholly irrelevant. Many owners of rental property keep no books so that the necessary figures as to actual cost less depreciation are not available. In this case, also, due to factors such as the shifting desirability of neighborhoods and location with reference to transportation facilities, the test of actual cost less depreciation will in many cases bear no relation to actual rental value.

The proposal that all rents be adjusted to the generally prevailing level for comparable housing accommodations has a plausibility which is only superficial. This suggestion presupposes that there are a substantially large number of every type of dwelling units which are alike for purposes of rental value, are rented at substantially the same rental, and are comparable to the dwelling unit in question. Actually a comparable dwelling unit is a very rare thing. Intangible factors such as subtle differences in appearance and surroundings, the lay-out of the rooms, the direction in which they face, the scenery, and other factors will, in a normal market, result in a higher rental for one dwelling unit than for another which is in many respects comparable. It has been observed that the rent for the dwelling unit which is most comparable to the one in question is the rent charged for the one in question. The maximum rent regulation issued by the Administrator, it is true, uses this device for determining a maximum rent in those cases in which there was clearly no rental value arrived at by the processes of ordinary economic forces on the freeze date. This is only because in this limited class of cases some artificial basis must be resorted to, and no better device is available. This standard is one which at best results in a crude approximation of fair rental value and should be used in only a relatively small number of cases.

All of the alternative devices above discussed, even if used only as follow-up devices for establishing fair or reasonable maximum rents, would require detailed and complex investigation and study of data regarding every one of the millions of properties for which it is necessary to establish maximum rents. Protracted litigation would result in many cases. It would take years for such determinations to be made. The judicial or administrative processes by which they were made would break down or lag far behind. In the meantime, some owners would have rents giving them a so-called fair or reasonable return while many would remain on the date basis. The Administrator and his staff would be so absorbed in the task of determining reasonable return that they would have neither the time nor the facilities to make those adjustments which are really necessary nor would they be able to devote themselves to the proper and effective administration of the act.

A further and important objection to both the reasonable return and the comparability standards, whether used initially or as follow-ups, is that they require a departure from the fundamental concepts of the American competitive system. In a normal rental market, differences exist in the rents and the rates of return which different landlords receive for comparable dwelling units. As has been pointed out above, this is due to a great variety of factors, including differences in the terms on which the owners obtained their properties or capital, differences in efficiency of management, vagaries of fortune, and differences in rental policies of the individual landlords. To equalize all rents or income from rental properties without regard to these varying factors, would raise some owners to a rent or income level which, for one reason or another, they did not attain under ordinary competitive conditions and would reduce others from a higher level which they had attained under the same competitive conditions. Such a process would be inflationary insofar as it would result in tenants paying higher rents than the landlord would have obtained in the absence of the abnormal pressure created by war activities. For the more fortunate or competent operators, it would be regimentation in its worst aspect. It would amount to equalizing by Government action incomes of landlords and incomes from rental properties which had been unequal under normal market conditions. No authority is granted in the act, and it is inconceivable that the national peril should be utilized, for equalizing differences which have always existed in American economy resulting from differences of policy, differences of fortune, and differences of ability.

Sincerely yours,

LEON HENDERSON, Administrator.

THE PRICE OF EGGS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes, to explain the matter of the price of eggs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. STEWART] about those egg prices. It was with a little amusement that I listened to him and his complaint about the high price paid for eggs, because he is an old, experienced legislator. He has been for years in the legislative body of Oklahoma. I am sure if he had thought a moment he would have caught on to this. No one feels sorry for a Congressman; no one should. There is no law which compels one to be a Congressman and pay 69 cents a dozen for eggs. I will tell you how it works out in Michigan. The Hamilton co-op markets two or three carloads of eggs a week that they ship by truck. What kind of eggs were those that you had? Were they pullet eggs?

Mr. STEWART. No. 1 eggs.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, those would be good, big eggs. Now, up in Michigan we get three or four carloads of eggs at Hamilton every week to ship to Chicago. Those eggs pass inspection both by Federal and State inspectors in Hamilton, in Allegan County, Mich. But when we start to send them to Chicago, then we have to pay to the union $50 for every truck driver. But he only gets halfway to Chicago. He gets down to the Indiana State line and then the co-op has to pay $50 more. We must have two drivers. Then when the eggs come to Chicago the union wants $1.10 to inspect those eggs over there, after they have already been inspected up in our country.

Now, a lot of that money goes to these union truck drivers or to the union. The farmers do not get it. So do you not see you are not paying the farmers when you pay 69 cents a dozen, when your farmer down there only gets 32 cents. Some of the money paid for the eggs goes to these fellows who are riding the trucks, more of it goes to the union. The result, the country over, is less for the farmer, less for the consumer. Remember this, the administration protects those unions and compels a man to join a union whether he wants to or not, and then along comes election time and the union kicks in to the New Deal campaign fund. So it all comes back to the majority for a remedy.

That is the fact, and that is one reason why you have to pay that 69 cents for the eggs the farmer sold for 32 cents. You should not kick about it because, indirectly, even though you do not like it, you are contributing to the New Deal campaign fund when you buy a dozen eggs.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I wonder if the gentleman knows of any instance in which somebody jumped onto a wagon and drove in and collected this $50, and the Supreme Court of the United States upheld them?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, yes; I know that the stand-by practice was upheld in the case of U. S. v. Local 807, I. B. C. T. & H., March 2, 1942. While one Justice characterized the practice as highway robbery, the others held that Congress did not mean that kind of racketeering—just intended to stop the Dillinger type of robbery. Those fellows up there who do not have any meat have charged the farmers $25 to get into Detroit with a truckload of meat. So I do not feel too bad about them not getting any meat.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I think you might be right at that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; by accident—perhaps by accident.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix by printing an editorial from the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. PLUMLEY (at the request of Mr. GEARHART), for 2 days, to attend a funeral in Vermont.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 20, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 20, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious Father, who in all ages hast been revealing Thyself to man as the Child of God, we approach Thy throne of grace. We would humble ourselves before Thee because of our unworthiness, confessing our sins and asking Thy forgiveness. We rejoice in Thy care and patience which lasts from day to day and never grows weary. We pray that we may always seek the higher ideals—a quiet home, a number of friends worthy of being loved, wholesome pleasure which brings no pain, devotion to the right which will never swerve, and a simple faith full of trust, hope, and love.

O Divine Spirit, as watchers of the night so ominous, we wait for the morning and rejoice at the radiance of the sun which is destined to gild the sky. The future will surely strip the fragile might of human power and the angels' song, with its consoling message, will roll across the wide spaces of this dark earth; hasten the hour in which the tyrant's ambition to reign shall be supplanted by the passion to serve. In the name and for the sake of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article on the Tolan committee report written by Felix Morley.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SMALLER WAR PLANTS CORPORATION

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, according to today's press, Lou Holland, Chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, has been replaced by Col. Robert Johnson. I sincerely trust that the replacement of Mr. Holland will also be followed by the replacement of several of the directors of the Corporation. When that Corporation was first formed and its directors were appointed, I sent the following telegram to Donald Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board:

Today's New York newspapers carry announcement of appointment of directors of Smaller War Plants Corporation. Regret failure to appoint New York man on board who would be familiar with industrial and labor problems of New York City. With all due respect to your ability to appoint competent executives, and without reflection on ability of gentlemen appointed directors, can frankly see little hope of workable plan being devised by directors from Kansas City, Louisville, York, Murphysboro, and Chelsea to utilize in war effort New York's industries and unemployed skilled and unskilled labor. Urgently suggest appointment as director New York man familiar with New York's industrial and labor problems who will be able to submit first-hand information to board of directors on situation in New York.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein a letter from Mr. Donald Nelson.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

WAR PRODUCTION BOARD,
Washington, D. C., July 13, 1942.

Hon. WALTER A. LYNCH,
House of Representatives,

DEAR MR. LYNCH: This will acknowledge receipt of your telegram of July 11 in which you expressed regret that a New York man had not been appointed to the board of directors of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, and urged that a man familiar with New York labor and industrial problems be appointed as New York director.

The members of the board of directors of the Corporation were selected with considerable care and are, I believe, not only sympathetic with the objectives of the legislation, but are familiar with the problems of the smaller businessmen in the various parts of the United States.

The various regional and local offices of the War Production Board, through which the Smaller War Plants Corporation will function, are being staffed with the same concern for maximum utilization of the productive capacity of small plants, and you may be sure that every effort will be made to get the most competent employees possible.

Sincerely yours,

DONALD M. NELSON.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, my fears in connection with the Smaller War Plants Corporation have been confirmed. In all the months of its existence not a single prime contract has been let by the Smaller War Plants Corporation to any industry in New York City; as a matter of fact, it has apparently been the policy that because New York City is a large city it therefore does not need aid in connection with its smaller industries. I sincerely trust that when the new directors are appointed a New York man will be placed on the board, so that the people of my city will feel that the Smaller War Plants Corporation has been organized for the benefit of all small industries, not to the exclusion of New York.

I do not desire to be overcritical of Mr. Holland and his associates on the board of directors of Smaller War Plants Corporation, but when this Corporation has been in existence for more than 6 months, and with an available fund of $150,000,000, it has failed to let a single contract in New York City, the most distressed area in the country, it is about time that a change of directors and a change of policy are made.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEOGH. Today an employee of the House, George Taylor, leaves to join the armed forces. He is a capable son of a very distinguished citizen of Brooklyn, a father who during his public career served his district in the State legislature, served his city as comptroller of the city of New York, and as welfare commissioner. He also served as sheriff of his county and is presently a commissioner of the Port of New York Authority. George does credit to an already distinguished name, and he goes, I am sure, with the good wishes of all the membership of this House and with the hope and prayer that he will have a speedy return with the victory to which we all look forward.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CAPOZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain letters published in an Italian daily paper under date of January 18.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Tuesday after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in two separate insertions—in one to include an editorial and in the other resolutions recently adopted by the Kansas State Board of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by Governor Earl Snell to the Oregon Legislature.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit two requests: One, to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article; and, secondly, that I may address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COTTONSEED CAKE

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the president of the State board of agriculture of my State called my attention to a recent order of the War Production Board limiting, not to exceed 2 weeks, the supply of cottonseed cake to any one individual operator.

To anyone who pretends to know anything about the cattle industry, especially in the range country where thousands of head of cattle winter on nothing except grass and oil cake, such an order is of course impractical and nonsensical, and additional evidence of the absurdity of giving authority to someone to formulate policies and prepare orders promulgating such policies or making regulations under such policies, who has no practical knowledge of the subject matter being considered or the regulation being promulgated with respect to the same.

A few months ago someone who knew nothing about the milk and cream business made effective an order fixing and limiting the number of days in the week and designating the particular days that farmers could sell and deliver their cream to the dealers in the various towns throughout the country. Naturally, the order created such a furore among both buyers and sellers, that it had to be repealed.

It is unfortunate that during these critical times it seems necessary to be constantly criticizing these agencies which have been set up to administer the legislation made necessary by the exigencies of the war. But until those in authority make practical knowledge and experience a major qualification for competency in selecting those who formulate policies and make the rules and regulations governing the same, we may expect these inconsistent and farcical orders to keep recurring.

WHY NOT RATION USE OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES]?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, in these days of rationing tires, gas, farm machinery, household goods, clothing, food, and manpower, all in interest of the war effort, the Government has given little consideration to rationing one of the things that does not contribute to the winning of the war, but consumes food and manpower so essential to the war effort.

Mr. Speaker, why does not the Government ration alcoholic beverages of all kinds? Why not cut down the time during which it may be sold? Why has the Federal Government not acted in this regard? It will be said that most distilleries of hard liquor are now making industrial alcohol. The fact is, it is estimated there is 3 or 4 years' supply of hard liquor on hand. The manufacture and sale of beer and similar products continues practically as usual.

Let me quote some figures. The total consumption of alcoholic beverages in this country during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, was more than 2,000,000,000 gallons. It cost approximately $4,000,000,000. The labor and transportation costs are estimated at $2,000,000,000. It took 15,000,000 tons of grain, more than a million tons of fruit, and 70,000 tons of sugar and sirups, to produce it. Even a share of that food would go a long way to help feed people who are hungry.

Mr. Speaker, it is estimated there are more than 400,000 liquor sellers in the United States. While we are asking people to cut down the use of fuel and lighting in their homes and in the schools and churches, drinking places in Washington and in cities throughout the country are well heated and well lighted until early hours in the morning.

Mr. Speaker, before the Manpower Commission gives too serious consideration to requiring women to leave their homes for employment in industry, it may well consider utilizing the services of a good share of a half million persons engaged in the liquor business.

Mr. Speaker, here is a place for some real rationing. It will do good in more ways than one, if the officials have the courage to do it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by inserting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a sermon delivered by Rev. Paul Little, D. D., at the American Legion memorial services conducted in All Saints Episcopal Church, San Francisco, on Sunday, November 8, 1942.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH]?

There was no objection.

OATH OF OFFICE ADMINISTERED TO HON. MARY T. NORTON

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with your designation of me, pursuant to House Resolution 45, Seventy-eighth Congress, adopted by the House of Representatives, to administer the oath of office to Representative-elect MARY T. NORTON, of the Thirteenth District of New Jersey, I have the honor to report that on the 16th day of January 1943, at Jersey City, N. J., I administered the oath of office to Mrs. NORTON, form prescribed by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, being the form of oath administered to Members of the House of Representatives, to which Mrs. NORTON subscribed.

Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution (H. Res. 62), as follows:

Whereas MARY T. NORTON, a Representative from the State of New Jersey, from the Thirteenth District thereof, has been unable from sickness to appear in person to be sworn as a Member of this House, but has sworn to and subscribed to the oath of office before the Honorable EDWARD J. HART, authorized by resolution of this House to administer the oath, and the said oath of office has been presented in her behalf to the House, and there being no contest or question as to her election: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the said oath be accepted and received by the House as the oath of office of the said MARY T. NORTON as a Member of this House.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE]?

There was no objection.

REGULATION OF UNIONS

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, it is unfair and in the long run it never pays to give one group of citizens privileges that are denied to others simply because the favored group seems to be in a position to blackmail the public. A little more than a year ago this Government, under threat of a shut-down of all in heavy industry, extended unfair privileges to Mr. John L. Lewis and his fellow hijackers. All coal miners were forced into his union regardless of their wishes and were required to pay tribute in the form of dues fixed not by the men themselves but by Mr. Lewis and his fellow officials. The dues were deducted from the workers' pay and turned over to the Lewis organization by the mine operators. In return for the closed shop and the check-off Mr. Lewis agreed that there would be no more strikes. That agreement which the Government so ruthlessly imposed on the miners and the mine operators was binding on everyone except the group of blackmailers who got the cash. Has Mr. Lewis made good? Has he stopped strikes in the coal mines? Not only is the war being unnecessarily prolonged today by the strike of thousands of miners whose labor and personal freedom Mr. Lewis assumes to offer for sale in the market place, but we are now threatened with a much more far-reaching strike in April, and Mr. Lewis indicates that he will aid and abet this contemplated treason.

In the meantime, why has not Mr. Lewis and his United Coal Miners been held accountable for their breach of their contract? Simply because years ago the Congress exempted labor unions from the responsibility for their acts that is enforced on any other group of citizens engaging in business, and under recent decisions of the Supreme Court this exemption in the irresponsible hands of Mr. Lewis has been for practical purposes converted into a license to steal.

I hold no brief for the striking miners. They probably would not personally shoot American soldiers in the back, as those soldiers crept through the jungles of Guadalcanal or over the hills of North Africa, but the action of these Pennsylvania miners is surely allowing the Japs and the Germans to shoot a needless number of our boys. The most charitable thing that can be said about these strikers is that they are more interested in their own welfare than they are in the welfare of the Nation. At the same time it is unfair to place all the blame on the miners. The blood of American boys is not only on the hands of these selfish strikers, but it is also on those who created the un-American peonage in which Mr. Lewis holds these men. This strike originated as a protest on the part of the men against the action of Mr. Lewis' union itself. Under the undemocratic check-off system whereby a worker could not draw the wage that had been promised him even though the employers paid it, there was no recourse left to the men. With the apparent sanction of Government, Mr. Lewis exercised the right to take wage money already earned by the worker and divert it to himself. In the State of Texas our solicitude for the laborer goes so far that no writ can touch the current wages of the worker even though the courts have already found the worker indebted in the amount sought to be withheld, nor can even the State itself take tax money in this manner. Why, then, should an irresponsible group like the officials of the United Mine Workers be licensed to levy tribute on all those who toil in the coal mines of America without so much as the right on the part of the worker to vote on the question of increased dues or to have an accounting at the end of the year?

After all, the grievances of the miners against Mr. Lewis and his coconspirators are serious. They do not justify the miners in jeopardizing the safety of our fighting men by striking, but they do demand prompt and honest action at the hands of the Congress and the President. The least we can do is to pass legislation to make labor unions responsible for their acts just as all other business institutions are responsible for their acts, and liable for damages when they break their contracts. Today Mr. Lewis can make any kind of contract. The employee will be bound, but the union cannot be compelled to either carry out its promises or respond in damages for its failure to do so. This condition cannot continue.

In addition, we should make the unions responsible to their own members. We can require free secret-ballot elections of union officers, and on questions like dues and strikes. We can require union officials who handle money to make bond and to account for the funds they handle.

If we do not do these things, the people of America are going to put Congressmen in this Chamber who will destroy labor unions entirely. In years past labor unions were looked upon as purely voluntary organizations which a worker could join or not join as he saw fit, and it was felt that their internal affairs were of no public interest. Somewhat the same feeling existed as to privately owned utilities and even political parties. Today it is recognized that public utilities should make full disclosure of their operations in order that the public may not be overcharged and yet surely no one would contend that the Northern Pennsylvania Power Co. exercised as direct control over the welfare of as many citizens as the United Mine Workers of America. It is admitted by all that the States have the right to set up regulations covering the manner in which political parties conduct their primaries and spend their funds. Membership in political parties is purely voluntary, and they do not charge dues. Why does not government have as much right and duty to see that the rights of union members are protected as it does to see that small and minority stockholders of private corporations are protected?

In the last session of Congress we had the opportunity to do these things. Our colleague, the gentleman from Virginia, Judge SMITH, offered legislation covering these points. Certain members of the labor committee did their best to prevent consideration of the legislation by this House and to a large degree succeeded. We were, however, able to send some helpful legislation to the other body where it suffered an untimely demise. I supported these reforms last session. I still support them. I believe in justice for our workers, and in justice for the people of America. I have no desire to persecute anyone, but I cannot sit idly by and see this war needlessly prolonged and American lives needlessly lost simply because some hijacker who lives off of the organization of distrust and prejudice among workers may be offended or even for fear that some honest members of honest unions will be misled and brand me as a "labor-baiter." I am more interested in America than I am in any group of Americans, and I call on this House to rally to the prompt passage of a fair and honest program of union responsibility as being the only method of preventing an increasing wave of treasonable strikes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after disposition of business on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS]?

There was no objection.

FLORIDA CANAL

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, last July this Congress passed a bill providing for the construction of a canal across Florida which would connect the intracoastal waterways of the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic seaboard. Procrastination is the thief of time. Someone has been stealing time. This work has not been started after 7 months, and as a result not only our Military Establishment but millions of our civilian population have been suffering.

I am today introducing a bill providing for an appropriation of $44,000,000 to complete this waterway. I expect to have more to say about this matter later in the week. I believe I can convince you that if we start now, our people who are having to do without fuel and without the things they need and also our Military Establishment can be provided with the fuel and other materials which are necessary, and this in a very short time. I hope that I will be able to explain this to you tomorrow.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. TOLAN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes on next Monday, at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

REGULATION OF UNIONS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] was bemoaning the fact that the last Congress failed to pass legislation which would curb strikes. The administration and all the agencies of the administration are asking us, all of the people, over the radio, and through the press, day and night, to do more to aid in the war effort. As the gentleman said, the administration is also forcing every workingman into the unions.

This is the situation: The administration insists that those engaged in war production join a union, preferably the C. I. O.—workers in shipyards, in the aircraft industry—yes, in the employ of Montgomery-Ward, which is not engaged in war production. It forced Americans to come under the jurisdiction of the C. I. O.

Then what does the C. I. O. do? I hold in my hand a card issued by Local 793, U. A. W., affiliated C. I. O., address, 601 Ship Street, St. Joseph, Mich. On that card is printed this:

Join now for (1) union shop contract; (2) wage increase; (3) better vacations; (4) real safety—stop speed-up.

Then it reads—

Being interpreted, that means join the union and sabotage any effort to increase war production.

The administration is backing that union and insisting that everybody go into it. Then the union, into which war workers have been forced, has as its objective the defeat of any effort to speed up war production.

Is that good news to our fighting men in Africa and the southwest Pacific? Talk about destroying the morale of our fighting men. Could Hitler himself issue a statement more disheartening to them as they sit in their foxholes or seek shelter from the enemy in the desert sands?

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement by Mr. Paul, of the Treasury Department, on taxation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial on pay-as-you-go taxes by David Lawrence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects and to include in each a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of Indiana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I find from various letters I have been receiving from my district that the Office of Price Administration is assuming the three prerogatives of government and is taking over the three branches of the Government that were defined in our Constitution, namely, the legislative, judicial, and executive. Today I am introducing a bill which will prohibit the O. P. A. from proceeding with sanctions, taking away licenses and ration coupons, as penalties which they have prescribed under rules and regulations. Unless the Congress passes some sort of legislation authorizing it, such action is illegal. An agency of government has no authority under the Constitution to proceed as policeman and judge of its own law. I think the time has come when the House should take some step to safeguard the rights of the folks back home. Now is not a time to put a damper on patriotism by pushing the people around and denying them their rights.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement from the National Association for the Deaf, and I further ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein newspaper editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain correspondence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, in order to ask the majority leader if he can tell us the program for tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I have just been informed by the chairman of the Committee on Rules that four resolutions were reported out of the Committee on Rules this morning. I do not believe there will be any controversy over any of them. My intention is to call them up tomorrow, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

One of the resolutions involves continuing into this Congress the authority of the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs to carry on the very fine work they have been doing in connection with war contracts and in investigating improper activities in connection with such contracts.

There is also a resolution giving the Committee on the Civil Service power to investigate certain conditions, a matter with which we are acquainted.

Then there is a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], giving the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries certain powers of investigation. There is also a resolution continuing the life of the Select Committee on Conservation of Wild Life Resources, of which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] is chairman.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. They are all continuing resolutions?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. I know of no opposition to them. It is my intention to call them up and dispose of them tomorrow. I doubt whether there will be any roll calls, but if there are it will be with the understanding that they will take place at some later date.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file reports on the four resolutions which the majority leader has stated he desires to have considered tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

House Resolution 16

(Rept. No. 10)

Resolved, That the Committee on the Civil Service, acting as a whole or by subcommittee or subcommittees appointed by the chairman of said committee, is authorized and directed (a) to conduct thorough studies and investigation of the policies and practices relating to civilian employment in the departments and agencies of the Government, including Government-owned corporations; (b) to study and investigate the effect of such policies and practices upon the conduct of the war, with the view of determining whether such policies and practices are efficient and economical; (c) to determine the number of employees in each department or agency (including Government-owned corporations), whether such number of employees is necessary, and whether their skills are used to the best advantage; (d) all other matters relating to the recruiting and the efficient and economical use of the civilian employees; and (e) to make such inquiry as said Committee on the Civil Service may consider important or pertinent to any matter coming within the jurisdiction of said committee.

For the purposes of this resolution, the said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books or papers or documents or vouchers by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony and records as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or by any person designated by him, and shall be served by such person or persons as the chairman of the committee or subcommittee may designate. The chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives during the present Congress the results of their studies, inquiries, and investigations with such recommendations for legislation or otherwise as the committee deems desirable.

(Rept. No. 11)

Resolved, That the Special Committee to Investigate All Matters Pertaining to the Replacement and Conservation of Wildlife is authorized to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 237, of the Seventy-third Congress, continued under authority of House Resolution 44, of the Seventy-fourth Congress, House Resolution 11, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, House Resolution 65, of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and House Resolution 49, of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 237, of the Seventy-third Congress, and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1945, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, for necessary legislation.

House Resolution 30

(Rept. No. 12)

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs, respectively, each acting as a whole or by subcommittee, are authorized and directed to conduct thorough studies and investigations of the progress of the war effort insofar as it relates to matters coming within the jurisdiction of such committees, respectively, with a view to determining whether such effort is being carried forward efficiently, expeditiously, and economically.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs shall report to the House during the present Congress the results of their studies and investigations, together with such recommendations for legislation as they deem desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution, the respective committees, or any subcommittees thereof, are authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places whether or not the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise, and to take testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairmen of the respective committees and shall be served by any person designated by such chairmen. The chairman of each committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

SEC. 2. The heads of the various executive departments and agencies are hereby requested to detail to such committees such number of legal and expert assistants and investigators as such committees may from time to time deem necessary, or, in case such detail is not authorized by law, to grant leave of absence without pay to personnel who may request such leave to serve with such committees, without prejudice to any rights or privileges to which such personnel would be entitled if such leave had not been granted.

(Rept. No. 13)

Resolved, That effective from January 3, 1943, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, acting as a whole or by subcommittee or subcommittees appointed by the chairman of said committee, is authorized and directed to continue the study, inquiry, and investigation begun under the authority of House Resolution 281 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and for such purpose shall have the same powers and duties as those conferred upon it by House Resolution 281 of the Seventy-seventh Congress. The committee shall report to the House during the present Congress the results of its studies, inquiries, and investigations with such recommendations for legislation or otherwise as the committee deems desirable.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] for 15 minutes.

EARLY HISTORY AND IMPORTANCE OF THE SOO LOCKS IN TIME OF WAR

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, from what was described as the folly of the white man and a project "beyond the remotest settlement of the United States, if not the moon" to the greatest artificial waterway in the world, carrying 123,000,000 tons of commerce in a single year, is the unique and romantic history of the locks in the St. Marys River at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

In 1840 when a bill was introduced in Congress in accordance with a memorial from the first Legislature of the State of Michigan asking for an appropriation of a hundred thousand acres of land to aid in the building of the locks, the famous orator and statesman from Kentucky, Henry Clay, addressed the Senate against the bill, characterizing the proposal in the words above indicated, and the bill was defeated.

The building of canals and locks at the Soo, Mich., as the city and locks are commonly known and called, unlocked the largest and greatest freshwater sea on the globe—Lake Superior. It also provided an unbroken and continuous water highway 1,000 miles in extent with the lowest cost for waterborne commerce known to the world.

Contrary to common opinion, generally accepted and believed, the State of Michigan and not the Federal Government recognized the importance of building a ship canal and locks around the rapids in the St. Mary's River at the Soo. Gov. Stephen T. Mason, known as the Boy Governor of Michigan, as well as the first Governor of the State, in his message to the first legislature of the State on January 2, 1837—24 days before Michigan became a State—called attention to its great importance and urged the construction of the locks and canals. That legislature appropriated $25,000 to make the first survey and maps of the location.

It should be noted that the first canal and lock at the Soo were not built either by the State of Michigan or the Government of the United States. The first canal lock was built on the Canadian side of the falls—the St. Mary's River forms the international boundary line between the United States and Canada—in 1797 by the Northwest Fur Co. This company was later merged with the Hudson Bay Co. That canal lock was less than 9 feet wide, 38 feet long, and probably was the first canal lock built on the continent of North America. It was constructed to accommodate and to make possible the passage of the birch-bark canoes of the Indians and the bateaux of the French voyageurs, with their cargoes of furs destined for the markets of the Atlantic seaboard and to adorn the ladies of the courts of Europe. This canal was destroyed during the War of 1812 by United States troops. With the passage of time, it was covered with debris and hidden from human view. Eighty-three years later, in 1895, it was discovered, and is now restored and preserved as a truly historical landmark.

From 1855 to 1881 the locks were operated and maintained by the State of Michigan. Strange as it may now seem, the records of the State show that reports were made annually to the State government on the amount of tonnage, cost, and other details in connection with the locks. From the very beginning of the locks, its importance is reflected in the amount of commerce that passed through that narrow water channel or commercial highway. From 100,000 tons of commerce that passed through the lock in 1855, being the first year that the lock was opened and operated by the State of Michigan, to 123,000,000 tons in 1942, a span of 87 years, is the amazing and unparalleled record of the world's greatest and most important water highway.

I have with me today photographs of the first State locks, given to me by Nellie M. Donnelly, residing at Mackinac Island, Mich., whose father helped, with pick and shovel, to build those locks. I shall be glad to pass them around among the Members of the House for their inspection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Those locks were made of wood, were they not?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes; and I will touch on that.

The earliest photographs, taken about 1855, of the first State lock and canal at the Soo, show that it was operated by hand, of wooden construction, and only the towering spires of the great white fleet of sailing vessels are in evidence together with a straggling village of the Indians who still inhabited the land made famous in Longfellow's Hiawatha.

A very large proportion of the tonnage passing through the locks consists of iron ore from the mines of the great Northwest. Out of the 123,000,000 tons of commerce passing through the locks during the navigation season of 1942—about 8 months—92,000,000 tons consisted of iron ore. This colossal tonnage represents approximately 85 percent of the steel industry of the United States.

It should be said that the locks at the Soo have been greatly enlarged and expanded in order to meet the growing needs of navigation and commerce, and at the present time the old Weitzel lock built on the site of the first lock constructed by the State of Michigan, is in the process of being widened and deepened to meet the new needs of commerce. And may I say in this connection that the Nation owes a debt of gratitude to our friend and colleague from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] for his insistent demands and determined efforts to bring legislation to the floor more than a year ago to make that possible.

From the time that these famous locks were taken over by the Federal Government in 1881 to the present, our Government has expended on them approximately $60,000,000. If a toll charge of 50 cents a ton had been made on the commerce passing through those locks during the navigation season of 1942, the entire cost of that famous project would have been paid in full. These figures indicate the enormous importance of water-borne commerce on the inland waterways of the Nation and particularly the low-cost transportation on the Great Lakes. It also brings to the attention of the people of this country the economic importance of our inland waterways and of this particular project with its strategic importance to the welfare, security, and defense of the Nation in time of war.

It is known that the enemies of our country know the great value of those narrow channels of water, to the war effort of the Nation, and adequate and proper steps have been taken to safeguard them against damage and destruction.

It is not too much to say nor is it idle to predict that some day, in the not far distant future, the locks at the Soo, Mich., will form a link in an unbroken chain of connected waterways more than 2,500 miles long which will lead through the Great Lakes and the mighty St. Lawrence River to the seven seas and the ports of the world. When this is accomplished, an inland empire inhabited by 40,000,000 of our people will be given low-cost water transportation to the markets of the earth.

In order that we may have comparative figures on the importance of the locks and canals at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., I include a table of other noted and famous canals of the world in concluding this brief presentation, I call attention to the fact that the tonnage through the Soo Canal totals more than the other six famous canals of the world:

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AIR ACCIDENTS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SMITH of Virginia). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I am taking this time at the suggestion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] to remind the Members of the House that following the adjournment of the House today the members of the Select Committee to Investigate Air Accidents would like to present to them some facts we feel it is unwise to present publicly. Therefore, if Members will do us the honor of remaining quite a little while after the session, we will be pleased, and I think they will hear some things in which they will be greatly interested themselves.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Indianapolis News.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in two respects.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, Mr. BLAND was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 21, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of all grace, Thou has taught us that in quietness and in confidence shall be our strength.

We turn to Thee for refuge from the noise and hurry of the world without and from the tyranny of selfish moods and motives within. May we fear only to be disloyal to the best we know, to betray those who love and trust us, and to disappoint Thy expectations concerning us. In a world where we see the fearful penalties of our selfish human separations, dedicate us in this anguished generation as builders of bridges across all the dividing gulfs which mar and rend this embattled earth.

Help us this new day to meet its joys with gratitude, its difficulties with fortitude, its duties with fidelity. Grant us to accomplish whatever tasks lie before us with cheerfulness and sincerity of heart. Deliver us from petty irritations which dim the far look. Bring us to the ending of the day unashamed and with a quiet mind. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 18, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the Federal Bureau of Investigation for the period October 1, 1942, through December 31, 1942, of an investigation of Federal employees who are members of subversive organizations or advocate the overthrow of the Federal Government by force (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL PARK TRUST FUND BOARD

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the National Park Trust Fund Board for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

REPORT OF WAGE AND HOUR AND PUBLIC CONTRACTS DIVISION

A letter from the Administrator of the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Division (a consolidated division), United States Department of Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Division for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Education and Labor.

SURVEY ON THE WATERSHED OF WOLF CREEK, TEX. AND OKLA.

A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of a survey on the watershed of Wolf Creek, Tex. and Okla. (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Commerce.

SURVEY ON THE WATERSHED OF PAJARO RIVER, CALIF.

A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of a survey on the watershed of the Pajaro River, Calif. (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD

A letter from the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board, transmitting, pursuant to law, the fourth annual report of the Board for 1942 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION—NEED FOR LEGISLATION RELATING TO SAFETY

A letter from the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, stating that the annual report of the Commission on the need for legislation relating to safety of life and property, required by the Communications Act of 1934, will be submitted later; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution of the Popular Democratic Party of the Municipal Committee of Toa Alta, P. R., endorsing the administration of Rexford G. Tugwell as Governor of Puerto Rico; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. GERRY:

A resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island; to the Committee on Commerce:

"STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
"IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
"January Session A. D. 1943.

"House Resolution 552

"Resolution requesting the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to take all necessary steps to provide for proper, substantial recognition of the status of the men of the American Merchant Marine Service.

"Whereas one of the most dangerous of all the fighting services is the work of the merchant marine in keeping vital supplies moving through submarine infested waters; and

"Whereas we know that time and time again after torpedoing by the enemy and escape from seas of blazing oil, men of the merchant marine immediately reenlist for similar tasks upon other merchant ships; and

"Whereas these indomitable, courageous hearted mariners are the unsung heroes of these turbulent times in this surely most dangerous of all services: Now therefore be it

"Resolved That this general assembly does hereby respectfully request the President of the United States of America, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to take all necessary steps to provide that official, governmental status be given the officers and men of the American merchant marine in order that during and after World War No. 2 their standing shall have all proper recognition in the ranks of those who have not hesitated to give their lives to safeguard the life of this Nation; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded by the secretary of State to the President of the United States of America, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States."

PROHIBITION OF LIQUOR SALES AROUND MILITARY CAMPS

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I should like to have it noted in the RECORD that I have received petitions signed by several hundred members of the Ladies' Aids of the Aberdeen Circuit of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America protesting the sale of intoxicating liquors in and around military and naval centers, and urging the passage of the bill for the control of the sale of intoxicating liquors in and around such places. I ask to have the petitions appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions presented by the Senator from South Dakota will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RESOLUTION OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF GEORGIA—PRICES OF PEANUTS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I present a memorial from the Legislature of Georgia protesting against double prices on the same farm products, under the quota and nonquota provisions, and also asking for legislation to correct that situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be printed in the RECORD under the rule and appropriately referred.

To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas there now exists in this State, as well as in the entire Peanut Belt of the Nation, a system of dual prices for peanuts and products obtained therefrom; and

Whereas there has been set up by the Department of Agriculture of the United States, under Federal legislation, a system designating certain acreage of peanuts as "quota peanuts" and all above said designated acreage as "excess peanuts"; and

Whereas at this particular time it is utterly impossible to have such a thing as excess peanuts when practically all of the foreign vegetable oil supply has been cut off by the war and peanut oil is being used to replace said foreign oil; and

Whereas the Department of Agriculture of the United States has called for the planting of 5,500,000 acres to supplant the deficiency in foreign oil; and

Whereas the planting, harvesting, and marketing of said peanuts is absolutely necessary as a contribution to the war effort; and

Whereas the farmers of Georgia and the entire Peanut Belt are patriotic citizens, eager to do their part to help win this war; and

Whereas the cost of production, in past experience, has exceeded the price which is paid for so-called excess peanuts and it is impossible to produce peanuts for oil at the prices paid for the same in 1942; and

Whereas there can be no possible excuse for the differential in price of $82 per ton for so-called excess peanuts and $190 to $200 per ton for quota peanuts when said peanuts were actually grown in the same field, fertilized with the same fertilizer, picked with the same picker, and sold in the same market; and

Whereas the prices being paid for so-called excess peanuts in Georgia are not reflected in the prices paid by consumers for peanut oil made from said so-called excess peanuts; and

Whereas there can be no possible excuse for the differential between the present prices being paid for so-called excess peanuts and the oil products therefrom, which is utterly out of proportion, unreasonable, and unwarranted, since there can be no possible justification for $1.75 per gallon cooking oil made from $82 per ton peanuts: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that the Congress of the United States and particularly the Congress delegation from Georgia be memorialized that the situation relative to the planting, production, gathering, and marketing of peanuts in Georgia and in the entire Peanut Belt is urgent; that the peanut farmers cannot possibly continue to produce peanuts for oil at the prevailing prices and that unless action is speedily taken farmers cannot and will not continue producing so-called excess peanuts for the reason that although farmers are patriotic and willing to do anything that they can to contribute to the winning of this war it is unreasonable, unwarranted, and unjust to expect them to produce such peanuts for prices below the cost of production and marketing; be it further

Resolved, That the Congress be memorialized to speedily enact such necessary legislation as will abolish the dual-price system and place a floor under the price of all peanuts in order that the farmers may be insured a reasonable and just compensation for their labor and that they might expect to earn a livelihood from their business and that they be not expected to indulge in a losing proposition when labor, industry, and everything else connected with the war effort is booming; be it further

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House shall immediately transmit a copy of this resolution to each Member of Congress from the State of Georgia and to the Senators from Georgia.

CARE OF RETURNED DISABLED SOLDIERS — LETTER FROM NORTH DAKOTA

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to call to the particular attention of the Committee on Military Affairs a letter I have received from Oscar E. Erickson, commissioner of insurance of the State of North Dakota. I shall read the letter, omitting the names:

Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Just for your information and to satisfy my own curiosity I am wondering why the Government gives honorable discharge to soldiers brought home from the South Pacific and unloads them onto their parents to take care of, when these same soldiers have become shell-shocked and must immediately be sent to the asylum at Jamestown. It seems to me it should be the Government's duty to take care of these boys.

I have in mind one of the ——— boys here in Bismarck, one of the ——— boys, also from Bismarck, and a ——— ———, of Fargo. These were all given honorable discharge and sent home, only to be sent to Jamestown—with the exception of the last one mentioned. The folks at Fargo are trying to care for him, but the mother herself says she would rather have had word that he had fallen in battle than to have had him return home in his present condition.

That is, to the insane asylum—

Isn't there anything that can be done for these boys?

Yours truly,

OSCAR E. ERICKSON,
Insurance Commissioner.

I suggest to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who I see is now in the Chamber, that thousands of soldiers from the Northwest were sent to the Solomon Islands and to Guadalcanal, and, as I understand from the military authorities, up to the present time that has been one of the very worst places for soldiers in this war. I ask that the letter be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The letter will be so referred.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. RADCLIFFE, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

S. 12. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes," as amended, by authorizing loans for mineral development purposes in time of war; with an amendment (Rept. No. 14).

By Mr. SCRUGHAM, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

S. 381. A bill to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to those desiring to engage in producing minerals of value to the United States in time of war; without amendment (Rept. No. 17).

By Mr. MURDOCK, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

S. Res. 20. Resolution continuing Senate Resolution 187, Seventy-fourth Congress, agreed to August 16, 1935, as amended by Senate Resolution 261, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to June 29, 1942; with an amendment, and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

By Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

S. J. Res. 12. Joint resolution to amend the act entitled "An act to protect the public health by the prevention of certain practices leading to dental disorders; and to prevent the circumvention of certain State or Territorial laws regulating the practice of dentistry"; without amendment (Rept. No. 18).

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia:

S. 17. A bill to provide for a temporary adjustment of salaries of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, the White House Police, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia; with an amendment (Rept. No. 19); and

S. 18. A bill to provide for a temporary adjustment of salaries for teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, for the duration of the war and for 6 months thereafter; with an amendment (Rept. No. 20).

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk two reports from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, one dealing with the bill introduced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] (S. 40) which has to do with the tenure of office of the Governor of Puerto Rico, and the other dealing with a resolution submitted by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] (S. Res. 26) for the continuance of his investigation into the administration of affairs in Puerto Rico.

By Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

S. 40. A bill to provide that the term of office of the Governor of Puerto Rico shall expire upon the enactment of this act and at the end of each 2-year period thereafter; with amendments (Rept. No. 15); and

S. Res. 26. Resolution to investigate economic and social conditions in Puerto Rico; with amendments (Rept. No. 16), and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM — FARM MACHINERY AND EQUIPMENT (PT. 2 OF REPT. NO. 10)

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I wish to present a report on farm machinery, a unanimous report of the special committee of which I am chairman, and I should like to read just a few paragraphs from the introduction to the report, with the permission of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. What is the nature of the request? There is some confusion, and I was not able to hear what the Senator said.

Mr. TRUMAN. I am filing a report on farm machinery from the special committee of which I am chairman, and relative to the situation with regard to that very necessary product at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator desire to make some comment on the report?

Mr. TRUMAN. I wish to make a few comments on the report, if I may.

I read from the report:

America faces the grave danger of not reaching its food production goals for 1943 and 1944, instead of obtaining the increases required by wartime demands. The effect of the farm labor shortage has been intensified by the drastic limitation on production of farm machinery in 1943. Responsibility for this limitation rests squarely on the Office of Civilian Supply of the War Production Board. This Office erroneously regarded farm machinery as semiessential. In fact, farm machines are the machine tools of agriculture. An adequate supply is vital to maintain an increased food production. Before weapons can be produced or used, we must first have food.

I should like to read the conclusions which the committee came to on that subject:

The committee recommends that (a) Food Administrator Wickard's determinations of nonfood materials required for the food production program be given maximum consideration in allotting materials; (b) the proposal to manufacture present quotas of farm machinery by June 30, 1943, instead of by October 31, be adopted; and (c) a new and more adequate program for farm machinery production for the year beginning July 1, 1943, be developed and issued as soon as requirements are ascertained and that concentration provisions be eliminated.

The extended wrangling over the 1943 program between the various governmental agencies establishes the need for a single control over the food goals to be set and the methods of achieving them. Despite the apparent general power of the Foods Requirements Committee of the War Production Board, this group did not have sufficient power to resolve the controversy, or if it had the power, it did not exercise it.

The committee believes that the views of those responsible for food production must be given a position of importance in drafting the new program and that sufficient material should be made available to produce the amount of equipment which they deem essential to obtain the food goals.

Secretary of Agriculture Wickard's appointment as Food Administrator is a step in the right direction. In addition, there has been transferred to his control all agencies concerned in determining requirements to meet the food goals, including farm machinery. While he will represent agricultural needs directly as a claimant for critical materials on the Requirements Committee of the War Production Board, his order of appointment provides, however, only for his recommendations to the Chairman of the War Production Board on the nonfood materials needed to carry out the food program.

He might as well not have any power unless he can order the carrying out of his recommendations.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Has not the Secretary of Agriculture used that same power heretofore in making recommendations, and is he not practically in the same position in which he has been heretofore?

Mr. TRUMAN. So far as the tools and equipment necessary to make farm machinery are concerned, that is true.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to ask the Senator another question with respect to the general quota about which he is speaking. Am I to understand the quota has been set now by the War Production Board, and if so, what is the quota?

Mr. TRUMAN. It has not been set. The only quota which has been set is under L–170, which gives the farmers 23 percent of the new machinery, based on 1940 purchases, and then the allotments for repairs have been increased from 137 percent of the 1940 repairs to 167 percent.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, I wish to say that I agree with him in what he has said in the report with respect to farm machinery, and I believe that from my own personal experience, not only with those who manufacture farm supplies and equipment, but the farmers as well, that the Secretary of Agriculture is absolutely correct in his constant attempt to obtain more of the vital materials which are necessary for the making of farm machinery.

I am constrained to say that in my humble judgment the War Production Board has utterly failed to see the great necessity for the production of the machinery and the tools and the equipment to raise the basic commodities of this country, which is the first thing necessary to carry on the great war effort throughout this country. I myself have been to the War Production Board, and I have talked to various members of the Board about this very critical problem, and my only regret is that the Secretary of Agriculture himself does not have the full power and authority to make the allotments of the necessary machinery for the purpose of carrying on the greatest industry in America, which is agriculture for all—for civilians, for the war effort, and for everything else.

Mr. TRUMAN. I thank the Senator from Illinois, and I wish to say to him that farm machinery allotment for the crop year of 1942 was 83 percent of the 1940 purchases of new farm machinery, and that when the quotas for the 1943 farm machinery were being made up, the Secretary of Agriculture used the reports from 3,000 counties in the United States, on which he based an estimate that the very smallest amount that could possibly be gotten along with in 1943 anywhere nearly to meet the calls that are necessary, was 50 percent of the 1940 purchases. The Office of Civilian Supply in the War Production Board first decided that 27 percent would be enough, and then when the final allotment was made it was made on a 23-percent basis. I do not see how we are going to increase the production of food in 1943 by 18 percent over the food production in 1941 unless we can obtain the machinery or the manpower to do it, and we must have one or the other.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, the Senator realizes another thing—that the allotment which is now fixed by the War Production Board, insofar as the quota of machinery is concerned, comes too late to do anything, insofar as the spring crops are concerned throughout this country. In other words, if the farmer was going to get any relief, this quota should have been increased along last November or December, in order for the manufacturers to deliver the machines and other necessary equipment.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is true. Too much time has been spent in wrangling as to who was right and who was wrong, and how much the farmer ought to have, and the farmer did not have anyone to look after his interests in the War Production Board.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri if his very useful committee has any jurisdiction to inquire into the deferment of necessary mechanics to keep farm machinery or equipment going and in use.

Mr TRUMAN. That goes along with the inquiry into the manpower problem which we are making now.

Mr. GEORGE. If we are to have production of a sufficient amount of food, it is absolutely essential that such deferments be made. If those charged with the responsibility for this situation do not have common sense enough to understand it, unless we have allocation of materials out of which to make the machines, and mechanics to keep the machines and equipment in going condition, and a deferment of enough manpower to operate the American farms, the people throughout the country will suffer.

Mr. TRUMAN. I hope the able and distinguished Senator from Georgia will read the report in toto because it goes into that question.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be very happy to read it, and I compliment the Senator from Missouri on his usual clear conception of these problems.

Mr. TRUMAN. The report goes into that question.

Mr. GEORGE. When the full effect of the committee's report is properly evaluated, it will be found that there is no more vital problem today in the United States, and in the world also, than the production of ample supplies of food. If there are any restrictions in the Department of Agriculture on the production of food, those restrictions should be lifted, so far as our present production of food is concerned. Such a policy of restriction is a short-sighted one. Those of us in the Senate who are charged with the responsibility—and all of us are—ought to make it perfectly clear that if common sense methods cannot be adopted in allocating raw materials for the production of farm machinery, the deferment of absolutely necessary labor, and the deferment of mechanics who are able to keep farm machines in operation, we cannot produce the food we are called on to produce, and which is an absolute and irreducible minimum in the great war effort we are making.

Mr. TRUMAN. The Senator from Georgia is absolutely correct. As a result of what has been done in connection with farm machinery, the farmer has come to have an inferiority complex. Blanket deferments are made of mechanics in war plants, but when the farmer comes along to ask for deferment so he can raise a little food he is treated like a slacker. The farmer is just as necessary in the meeting of the war effort as the man who makes guns and bullets, for if the man who makes guns and bullets cannot eat, he cannot very well make those guns and bullets.

I have one or two additional paragraphs of the report to read. I hope the Members of the Senate will read the report carefully. We shall have a report on the manpower situation in a very short time, which will cover the subject to some extent.

I continue reading from the report:

> After the committee had begun its investigations and had made inquiries concerning the possibility of increasing production of farm machinery and repair parts for 1943 to relieve the crying need therefor, the Farm Machinery and Equipment Branch urged an increase in the production of repair parts under Limitation Order L–170 from 137 to 167 percent of 1940 production. The Office of Civilian Supply concurred and cooperated to get action on the matter. After the appointment of Secretary Wickard as Food Administrator, he repeated the request and obtained the increase. The branch also developed a plan to accelerate production under Limitation Order L–170 so that all the new machinery authorized by such order might be manufactured by June 30, 1943, instead of by October 31, 1943—i. e., in 8 months instead of 12.
> Such acceleration in the program—

It will not solve the problem, but it will help—> should prove of material assistance. A new order to take effect on July 1, 1943, must, however, be formulated for issuance as soon as possible.

That is because the manufacturer of the machinery has to start from "taw," and the manufacturers must have plenty of time to get it ready if we are to have a crop for 1944.

> The committee recommends that the concentration provisions be omitted from the new order and that allowable production of new machinery be greatly increased. The amounts of iron and steel for the machinery needed to do the job of food production required by the war program must be made available to the manufacturers.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRUMAN. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the report issued today states as its main conclusion that increased allotments of critical materials should be made to the farm-equipment industry for the prompt production of increased amounts of farm machinery. With this conclusion, I concur. Since we have decided to use food as an instrument of war, we must make sure that we obtain enough of it. I join with the chairman in calling on the Chairman of the War Production Board to take the necessary action forthwith.

However, the concentration of the farm-equipment industry carried out by order L–170 of the War Production Board is designed to accomplish two purposes. First, to release labor from areas where there is a critical labor shortage. Second, to preserve the existence of the small manufacturers by giving them a larger proportion of the necessarily reduced total volume of farm-equipment business. Because of the accidental location of the various plants it happens that the fulfillment of one purpose automatically accomplishes the fulfillment of the other. The large manufacturers on the whole have much war work and are able to continue in business with usefulness to the Nation and profit to themselves. In addition to their war work they are the sole manufacturers of large farm machines such as tractors and combines, which are not subject to the concentration program. Their future is assured. On the other hand, if there were no concentration of production, more than 1,500 small manufacturers would inevitably be forced to drop out of business or to raise the price of their farm equipment to levels that the farmer could not afford to pay.

To overcome this difficulty, the War Production Board has assigned to the small manufacturers a large amount of the total machinery business. This decision seems to be sound in theory and in accord with the mandate of Congress in the smaller war plants bill. It was urged by the Under Secretary of War, the Commanding General of the Services of Supply, the War Manpower Commission, the Labor Production Division, the labor committee of the industry, and the deputy for smaller war plants, acting with the Office of Civilian Supply under the mandate of section 1 of the Smaller War Plants Act.

Mr. President, while I heartily concur in the conclusions which have been expressed in the report just read by the able chairman of the special committee investigating the national defense program, I desire to say that in carrying out the program the Office of Civilian Supply is experiencing some difficulty with respect to the laws enacted by the Congress, as well as the proclamations and directions issued by the authorities.

For example, the Congress enacted Public Law No. 603, Seventy-seventh Congress, which contains, among other provisions, the following:

> It shall also be the duty of the Chairman of the War Production Board, and he is hereby empowered, through the deputy so appointed by him, to cooperate to the fullest practical extent with the Director of Civilian Supply and other appropriate governmental agencies in the issuance of all orders limiting production by business enterprises, with a view to insuring that small business concerns will be most efficiently and effectively utilized in the production of articles, equipment, supplies, and materials for both war and essential civilian purposes.

The Office of Civilian Supply was forced to carry out that mandate of the Congress. I realize, as does the chairman, that in concentrating civilian activities in small industries by taking them away from the larger manufacturers, who can be more readily transferred to war activities, at times adequate supplies are not forthcoming for the particular trade in which the supplies are needed. It follows, therefore, that there sometimes exists the necessity of balancing the production between larger manufacturers and smaller manufacturers.

However, I believe the able chairman will admit that in trying to carry out the mandate of the law, the Office of Civilian Supply attempted to divert to small enterprises as much manufacturing of farm machinery as possible.

Mr. TRUMAN. I believe that is true.

Mr. MEAD. In doing so it encountered difficulties.

Mr. TRUMAN. It encountered difficulties, and tied up the program to such an extent that it could hardly be carried out even on a 23-percent basis. That is what I am quarreling about.

Mr. MEAD. In our report we stated that—

> An impractical plan for concentration of farm-machinery production in smaller concerns not only delayed action on the 1943 farm machinery program but threatens to destroy Nation-wide dealer and repair service organizations essential to the farmer in maintaining food production.
> There was injected into the picture the issue of concentration of production. This plan, laudable in purpose, sought to require large manufacturers of farm machinery to convert to the production of war materials so as to permit small manufacturers to produce the bulk of the curtailed amounts of farm machinery to be allowed.

I believe that in the main our chairman, and the remaining members of the committee, are very anxious to concentrate as much as possible on small industry.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. MEAD. However, we expect an adequate job to be done, and we expect that the smaller industries will be given materials which they need to produce machinery. It is easily seen that the larger corporations can more readily convert to war manufacture, and it is easily agreed that if we keep small business alive we must see to it that there is made available to small industries the greatest possible amount of civilian supplies which can be allotted to them.

Therefore, there is a delicate situation, which requires a constant study in order to maintain a proper balance between large and small enterprises. I believe that we sympathize with the Office of Civilian Supply in its efforts to carry out the mandate of Congress as expressed in one of the laws enacted by it at the last session, and the recommendations contained in our report as submitted today.

I wish to say, however, that the labor committee having to do with this problem has recommended that where plants are located in a "tight" labor area, the work might well be transferred to areas where surplus labor is available. It has also suggested that there be a continuous and progressive shift from larger to smaller plants in order that the larger plants may do war work and the smaller plants may manufacture farm machinery.

It also suggests that there be a progressive concentration in the smaller plants so that the smaller plants may have a larger volume of work, which in turn will permit them to meet the competitive prices in any given activity.

I know that our chairman and the members of his committee agree with the program so far as it can be carried out, and so far as the attitude of our committee and the legislation enacted by the smaller business committee can be harmonized.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is true; but I wish to say to the distinguished Senator from New York that what this committee is particularly interested in now is getting farm machinery on the farms. Unless we get it on the farms we shall go hungry in 1944.

Mr. MEAD. We cannot get too much machinery on the farms if we are to be the granary as well as the arsenal of the world.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is correct.

Mr. MEAD. However, in aiming for an adequate supply we can also continue the process of shifting from larger to smaller enterprises so there will be no destruction of our small-business economy.

Mr. TRUMAN. That is true; and I will say further——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, may I answer the able Senator from New York?

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. The report will be printed.

Reports of committees are still in order.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION AND RECLAMATION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 67, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 67), submitted by Mr. BANKHEAD on January 18, 1943, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 69, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 69), submitted by Mr. BILBO on January 18, 1943, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 70, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 70), submitted by Mr. OVERTON on January 18, 1943, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAPPER:

S. 455. A bill granting a pension to Eliza Lightle;

S. 456. A bill granting a pension to Ella Kahler;

S. 457. A bill granting a pension to William Edward Fugatt;

S. 458. A bill granting a pension to Josephine Morton; and

S. 459. A bill granting a pension to Addie M. Mandeville; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 460. A bill to provide for uniform regulation of marriage and divorce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DOWNEY:

S. 461. A bill to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended; to the Committee on Civil Service.

S. 462. A bill for the relief of Primo Giordanengo and Angie Giordanengo; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 463. A bill to confer to certain persons who served in a civilian capacity under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster General during the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition the benefits of hospitalization and the privileges of the soldiers' homes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 464. A bill to fix the compensation of substitute employees in the Postal Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

S. 465. A bill to prohibit the mailing of certain classes of unsolicited merchandise; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. ELLENDER:

S. 466. A bill for the relief of C. T. MacNeille, Andrew L. Yerger, Edna M. Yerger, William Yerger, Edward M. Yerger, Maxwell Plantations, Inc., and Moberly & Son; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 467. A bill relating to the citizenship of Belle Soltz; to the Committee on Immigration.

S. 468. A bill to provide for the establishment of the Tensas Swamp National Park, La., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. VAN NUYS:

S. 469. A bill to implement article 28 of the convention signed at Geneva on July 27, 1929, relating to the use of the emblem and name of the Red Cross;

S. 470. A bill to implement article 28 of the convention signed at Geneva on July 27, 1929, relating to the use of the coat of arms of the Swiss Confederation for commercial or other purposes;

S. 471. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the act creating the circuit court of appeals in regard to fees and costs, and for other purposes," approved February 19, 1897 (29 Stat. 536; 28 U. S. C. 543); and

S. 472. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide fees to be charged by clerks of the district courts of the United States," approved February 11, 1925 (43 Stat. 857), as amended (28 U. S. C., sec. 548–555); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NYE:

S. 473. A bill to provide for the settlement of claims for compensation for damage done to farmers' crops by migratory water fowl from the Lower Souris Migratory Waterfowl Refuge in North Dakota; to the Special Committee on Conservation of Wildlife Resources.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

S. 474. A bill for the relief of Clarence Atkins; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BONE:

S. 475. A bill to amend the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, so as to make insurance under such act available to merchant seamen; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 476. A bill to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Mount Vernon, Alexandria & Washington Railway Co., a corporation; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CLARK of Idaho:

S. 477. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Christine Hansen; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 478. A bill to provide for the further improvement of the Snake River between its mouth and Lewiston, Idaho; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 479. A bill relating to the sale of public lands granted to or vested in the State of Idaho by the act of July 3, 1890; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

(Mr. LANGER introduced Senate bill 480, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. LANGER:

S. 481. A bill authorizing payment to the Devils Lake Band of Sioux Indians of the Devils Lake (N. Dak.) Indian Reservation, at the Fort Totten (N. Dak.) Indian Agency, for damages for wood and timber used and destroyed by the armies of the United States while maintaining a military post at Fort Totten, N. Dak., between the years 1867 and 1890, and for which damages the said Indians have not been heretofore compensated;

S. 482. A bill authorizing payment to the Devils Lake Band of Sioux Indians of the Devils Lake (N. Dak.) Indian Reservation, at the Fort Totten (N. Dak.) Indian Agency, for 64,000 acres of land of which said band of Indians was deprived by the erroneous survey made by the United States Government under the treaty of February 19, 1867, between the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands of Sioux Indians and the United States (15 Stat. L. 505), ratified April 15, 1867;

S. 483. A bill referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjustment and settlement; and

S. 484. A bill authorizing payment to the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands of Sioux Indians for certain lands ceded by them to the United States by a treaty of July 23, 1851; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 485. A bill to adjust the basis of compensation for overtime service of certain employees in the Postal Service, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. STEWART:

S. 486. A bill for the relief of Mrs. C. A. Lee; and

S. 487. A bill for the relief of Robert T. Groom, Daisy Groom, and Margaret Groom; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKELLAR (for himself, Mr. STEWART, Mr. GEORGE, and Mr. RUSSELL):

S. 488. A bill to provide for flood-protection works at Chattanooga, Tenn., and Rossville, Ga.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GILLETTE:

S. 489. A bill authorizing the payment of half-rate Army pensions in certain cases; and

S. 490. A bill to equalize the pay of retired enlisted men of the armed services in accordance with grade and length of service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 491. A bill to authorize the acquisition, improvement, and maintenance of the Gulf County Canal, Fla.; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 492. A bill for the relief of Frank L. Amistead; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 493. A bill for the relief of Emiliano Lopez and Eliza R. Lopez; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HILL:

S. 494. A bill to provide for retired pay for retired officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

S. 495. A bill to establish a Women's Army Auxiliary Corps for service in the Army of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

S. 496. A bill to prohibit the employment of persons by the United States at a compensation of $1 a year, and to provide that persons employed by the United States shall be compensated on a reasonably adequate basis; to the Committee on Appropriations.

S. 497. A bill for the appointment of a police commissioner for the District of Columbia, to authorize said commissioner to reorganize the Metropolitan Police force to increase its efficiency, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 498. A bill to extend the provisions of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, to the Cumberland River and its basin;

S. 499. A bill to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, with respect to the manner of the exercise of the power of condemnation by the Tennessee Valley Authority and to require the receipts of the Authority to be covered into the Treasury; and

S. 500. A bill for the relief of W. T. Martin Luckett; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 501. A bill for the relief of Claudia F. Banks and Edna B. Towner;

S. 502. A bill for the relief of Joe D. Dailey;

S. 503. A bill for the relief of the city of Memphis, Tenn.;

S. 504. A bill for the relief of Drs. W. S. Davis, P. A. Palmer, H. S. Oakes, and J. M. Ousley;

S. 505. A bill for the relief of Fred C. Lindsay;

S. 506. A bill for the relief of Rent-a-Car Co.;

S. 507. A bill for the relief of John B. Dow;

S. 508. A bill for the relief of N. F. Clower and Elijah Williams;

S. 509. A bill for the relief of the Dixie Margarine Co., a Tennessee corporation, of Memphis, Tenn.;

S. 510. A bill for the relief of Inez Smith;

S. 511. A bill for the relief of Davis-Mize & Co., Inc.;

S. 512. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of Dr. R. N. Harwood," approved June 10, 1935;

S. 513. A bill for the relief of the legal guardian of Howard Burkette;

S. 514. A bill for the relief of Blanche H. Karsch, administratrix of the estate of Kate E. Hamilton;

S. 515. A bill for the relief of Janie McCord Watson, James Scott Howell, Alice Ruth Howell, and Houston Thomas Howell;

S. 516. A bill for the relief of the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway;

S. 517. A bill for the relief of Vodie Jackson;

S. 518. A bill for the relief of Robert T. Groom, Daisy Groom, and Margaret Groom;

S. 519. A bill for the relief of Thompson and McKinney; and

S. 520. A bill for the relief of Freddie Sanders; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 521. A bill requiring that persons holding certain positions under the United States be citizens of the United States; and

S. 522. A bill providing for separation from the classified civil service of persons absent from their official duties for certain periods; to the Committee on Civil Service.

S. 523. To authorize the submission to Congress of a comprehensive plan to provide local flood protection for the city of Nashville, Tenn.; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 524. A bill to avoid unnecessary appropriations, to eliminate wasteful expenditures, to prevent duplication of functions, and to provide for efficiency in the making and execution of plans, by consolidating and coordinating various activities of the United States relating to housing, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

S. 525. A bill authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Sergt. Alvin C. York as a colonel in the United States Army and then place him on the retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 526. A bill authorizing negotiations and providing for the construction, maintenance, and operation of an interoceanic canal over Nicaraguan territory, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

S. 527. To amend section 1 (b) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

S. 528. A bill for the relief of Nicholas Constantine Cotrotsos (Cotros); to the Committee on Immigration.

S. 529. A bill to establish a new judicial circuit of the United States, with a circuit court of appeals, hereafter to be called the eleventh circuit; and

S. 530. A bill to amend section 107 of the Judical Code, to change the statutory terms for the District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee;

S. 531. A bill to provide that no person shall be barred from serving in the military or naval forces of the United States because of conviction of a felony for which he has been pardoned;

S. 532. A bill to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation with respect to crimes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. 533. A bill to change the times for holding terms of the District Court for the Eastern Division of the Western District of Tennessee; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAYMENT OF OVERTIME RATES OF COMPENSATION TO POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I am today introducing a bill which I believe justice and equity demand should be given thorough and immediate consideration by the Congress. It is not by any means a new bill or an innovation in established policy in dealing with labor in general. In private industry the Government has insisted for some time that employees should be paid time and one-half for all services performed in excess of 40 hours per week, or on the basis of the actual number of days worked per year.

Recently we have enacted legislation which purports to extend the same fair treatment to all Government employees, but which, in fact, falls far short of that objective. In my opinion, all those who labor, either for the Government or in private industry, should be accorded the same fair treatment in this respect.

The bill I am introducing provides for payment for overtime to all postal employees at the time-and-a-half rate based upon the actual number of days worked per year. It is my understanding that separate legislation will be introduced carrying this same provision for all Government employees, which I shall also wholeheartedly support.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill introduced by the Senator from North Dakota will be appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 480) to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution extending until April 30, 1943, the period fo which overtime rates of compensation may be paid under the acts of June 28, 1940 (54 Stat. 676), October 21, 1940 (54 Stat. 1205), and June 3, 1941 (55 Stat. 241), and for other purposes," approved December —, 1942, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

UNIFORM MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE LAWS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I am introducing a proposal in the form of a joint resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States to provide for a uniform Federal marriage and divorce law. The amendment I propose is a simple one, but highly important. It would add this amendment to the Constitution:

> The Congress shall have power to make laws, which shall be uniform throughout the United States, on marriage and divorce, the legitimization of children, and the care and custody of children affected by annulment of marriage or by divorce.

I have been urging for 20 years the adoption of such an amendment as highly desirable. Since a decision by the United States Supreme Court last month, the adoption of such an amendment and the enactment of appropriate legislation has become highly necessary.

The effect of the decision, in the language of Justice Jackson, is that it "repeals the divorce laws of all the States and substitutes the law of Nevada" in cases where the husband and/or wife can afford a trip to and a 3 weeks' stay in Nevada.

To allow one State to write a national divorce law, even if it applied uniformly to everyone—which it does not, because not all our people desiring divorce can go to Nevada to get one—I say is not sound practice or good public policy.

Personally, I should prefer that the 48 States should enact laws governing marriage and divorce, and the care and custody of children affected by annulment or divorce, which would be uniform. But I do not see any possibility of that happening, so I must come to the conclusion that national uniform laws on the subject are required. To allow Congress to enact such uniform laws it seems that an amendment to the Constitution is required.

There are many statements made and views held as to what constitute the bases of our present day civilization, particularly in the United States. But I believe that most will agree that 2 of the cornerstones are the family and the right to hold property. Both of these are threatened by the 49 different and conflicting sets of laws on the subject of marriage and divorce.

A man and woman may be law abiding citizens, and their children legitimate and entitled to all rights, including property rights, in the community where they live. But if they move across the state line, even a few miles or a few rods, perhaps, they may be held guilty of bigamy or adultery, their children held illegitimate, and not legally entitled either to the father's name or to inherit their parents' property. I doubt if the decision in the Nevada case can cure this situation, even if it were desirable to cure it in such fashion.

I shall not take the time of the Senate today to discuss the confusion caused by these varying statutes; I shall do so later in the session. For the present, I merely urge that committee hearings be held promptly on the proposed amendment, and that we have an early vote on submitting the amendment. The problem will be more acute during and immediately following the war, on the return of millions of American youth, and the only remedy is a uniform marriage and divorce law for the entire Nation. I ask that the resolution be printed as part of my remarks at this time.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 24) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to marriage and divorce laws was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"The Congress shall have power to make laws, which shall be uniform throughout the United States, on marriage and divorce, the legitimation of children, and the care and custody of children affected by annulment of marriage or by divorce."

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR MEN AND WOMEN—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, in just a moment I propose to send to the desk a joint resolution relative to what is popularly known as the equal-rights amendment to the Constitution. The resolution is under joint sponsorship, and I am submitting it for introduction and reference to the Committee on the Judiciary. I understand that several Members of the Senate wish to refer to the matter in addressing the Senate later, after the routine business has been concluded. I merely wish to say at this time that the amendment is the same as, or similar to, the proposal which has been before the Congress at various times, and was on the Senate Calendar at the time when the Seventy-seventh Congress went out of existence. It is a proposal to amend the Constitution of the United States by the following amendment to be submitted to the States for ratification of three-fourths of the legislatures:

ARTICLE —

Men and women shall have equal rights throughout the United States and every place subject to its jurisdiction.

Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

Mr. President, I merely wish to say that this seems to me to be a particularly appropriate time for expecting and anticipating prompt favorable action on this matter. We are witnessing the mobilization of women in all enterprises, military and civilian, in the ranks, at the lathes, at the drills, at the assembly lines; and this final step in the upward course of women from the status of chattels to the dignity of human beings is one which should very appropriately be taken, in the opinion of the speaker.

So, Mr. President, on behalf of the following Members of the Senate, the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON], the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL], the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and myself, I introduce the measure and ask to have it appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be properly referred.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting equal rights to men and women was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, following the remarks of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], a telegram I have received from Cecil Norton Broy—Mrs. Charles Broy—political chairman, National Woman's Party, of Washington, D. C.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 11, 1943.

Senator ROBERT RICE REYNOLDS,
Chairman, Military Affairs Committee,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

As chairman of our Military Affairs Committee of the Senate I know, of course, how very, very busy you are. However, it is necessary for me to communicate with you at this time on a matter that is considered by many of best citizens to be of great importance to our country. On Thursday, January 21, there will be a Woman's Day in the Senate. Senator GILLETTE will reintroduce the equal-rights resolution; the following Senators will be cosponsors with him. They are as follows: Senator BARBOUR, of New Jersey; Senator CAPPER, of Kansas; Senator CHAVEZ, of New Mexico; Senator GUFFEY, of Pennsylvania; Senator KILGORE, of West Virginia; Senator LUCAS, of Illinois; Senator NYE, of North Dakota; Senator PEPPER, of Florida; Senator RADCLIFFE, of Maryland; Senator ROBERTSON, of Wyoming; Senator THOMAS, of Oklahoma; Senator THOMAS, of Idaho; Senator TUNNELL, of Delaware; Senator TYDINGS, of Maryland; and Senator WHEELER, of Montana. Senator GILLETTE and the National Woman's Party are asking you to be a cosponsor for the resolution when it comes up on Friday. We have arranged a program of 5 set speeches by Senators for Thursday. Other Senators have stated that they will make impromptu remarks in favor of the resolution on January 21. Women have the vote, but there are still 1,000 discriminations against the women of our country in the various States. I am hoping that you will feel like saying something on this important subject on Friday so that your word may go out to the people of this great land along with the words of these other fine gentlemen of the Senate. The press has promised its cooperation, and, of course, the 30,000 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD copies reach the people of our land daily. News of this Woman's Day in the Senate will strengthen those loyal women who are now carrying heavy burdens on the farm and in the factories, as well as in the home. As you will remember, in some States of the Union women do not have equal control of property, nor equal control of their earnings, nor equal rights to make contracts, nor equal opportunities in the profession and industry nor in government service, nor equal pay for equal work, nor equal control of National, State, or local government. Any fair-minded, just man knows in his heart that God created 2 sexes both equal in his sight and that women should, therefore, have equality of rights before the law in our great Republic. Surely no man will say that the mothers of men are inferior to the men themselves. If the principle of equality between men and women is right—and it is—then no one fear the consequences of establishing it in the law of the land.

Yours for the women of America,
CECIL NORTON BROY,
(Mrs. Charles Broy),
Political Chairman, National Woman's Party, Washington, D. C.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. REYNOLDS, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 413) to authorize the President to purchase certain lands in Arlington County, Va., and it was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET

Mr. WILEY submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3) which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a Joint Committee on the Budget (hereinafter referred to as the "joint committee") to be composed of —— members of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and —— members of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and —— members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and —— members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a full and complete study and analysis of the Budget of the United States, and to make such other studies and investigations concerning governmental revenues and expenditures as it may deem necessary, with a view to assisting the Congres in formulating a comprehensive fiscal program. The joint committee shall report, from time to time, to the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives from which the membership of the joint committee was appointed, and, in its discretion, to the Senate or House of Representatives, or both, the results of its studies and investigations together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 3. The joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words.

SEC. 4. (a) The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation prescribed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The joint committee is authorized to request the use of the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government.

(b) The expenses of the joint committee, which shall not exceed $——, shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives, one-half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. WILEY submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4), which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a Joint Committee on Social Security (hereinafter referred to as the "joint committee") to be composed of —— members of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and —— members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the need for and advisability of modification or enlargement of the present social security program, and to consider any proposals submitted to the Congress in connection therewith. The joint committee shall report, from time to time, to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, or, in its discretion to the Senate or the House of Representatives, or both, the results of its studies and investigations together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 3. The joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

SEC. 4. (a) The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation prescribed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The joint committee is authorized to request the use of the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government.

(b) The expenses of the joint committee, which shall not exceed $——, shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives, one-half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

JAMES D. REILLY

Mr. McNARY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 78), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint James D. Reilly a messenger (acting as an additional assistant doorkeeper), who shall be paid at the rate of $2,400 per annum from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

SHOWING TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS THE MOTION PICTURE, PRELUDE TO WAR

Mr. HOLMAN submitted a resolution (S. Res. 79), which was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby requested to make the necessary arrangements for showing to the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives the motion picture entitled "Prelude to War," which is the first of a series of motion pictures to be prepared and released by or under the authority of the War Department under the general heading "Why we fight."

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is further requested to fix a time and place for the showing of such picture, and to notify the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives at least 5 days in advance of the time and place so fixed.

PRODUCTION OF INDUSTRIAL ALCOHOL, SYNTHETIC ALCOHOL, AND SYNTHETIC RUBBER

Mr. GILLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 80), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolved, That the authority of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, under Senate Resolution 224, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to March 5, 1942, and Senate Resolution 318, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to November 30, 1942 (providing for an investigation with respect to industrial alcohol, synthetic alcohol, and synthetic rubber), is hereby continued until the end of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

DENIAL TO CERTAIN MUSICIANS OF RIGHTS IN CONNECTION WITH MECHANICAL REPRODUCTION OF MUSIC

Mr. CLARK of Idaho submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 81), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 286, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to September 24, 1942 (authorizing an investigation of the action of the American Federation of Musicians in denying its members the right to play or contract for recordings or other forms of mechanical reproduction of music), is hereby continued until the end of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. DOWNEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 82), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. BYRD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 83), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I wish to ask unanimous consent——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not make the request at this time. There are several of us who wish to speak briefly, and we have been waiting until after the routine morning business shall have been concluded.

Mr. BARBOUR. I am perfectly willing to wait, but I did desire to discuss the proposal submitted by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] gave notice Monday that as soon as he could get the floor today he wished to speak on the utilization of manpower, and we have all been deferring taking up the time until the morning business could be concluded. I have no disposition to cut the Senator off, but I thought that perhaps he was not aware of the fact that the Senator from Alabama had been waiting to get the floor.

Mr. BARBOUR. I did wish to say a word following the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I made a point of order a few moments ago against the Senator from New York and the Senator from Missouri proceeding. I think we should complete the morning business before any speeches are made or any permission is given for the making of speeches.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The submission of concurrent and other resolutions is in order.

TRANSFERS AND REDUCTIONS OF PERSONNEL IN THE CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. BYRD. I send to the desk a Senate resolution asking for certain information from the Civil Service Commission, and ask that it lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 84) was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the Civil Service Commission is requested to prepare and submit to the Secretary of the Senate detailed monthly reports for the month of January 1943 and each month thereafter up to and including April 1943 with respect to (1) the number of employees of the various executive departments and agencies released or transferred to other departments and agencies pursuant to section 2 of the joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution extending until April 30, 1943, the period for which overtime rates of compensation may be paid under the acts of June 28, 1940 (54 Stat. 676), October 21, 1940 (54 Stat. 1205), and June 3, 1941 (55 Stat. 241), and for other purposes," approved December 24, 1942; (2) the number of vacancies which have been allowed to remain unfilled subsequent to the date of enactment of such joint resolution; (3) the savings in salaries resulting from such reductions in personnel; and (4) the instances in which such reductions were made possible by the adoption of a 48-hour workweek.

[Mr. REYNOLDS asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article from the State magazine of January 16, 1943, by Carl Goerch, editor, entitled "Unfulfilled Predictions," which appears in the Appendix.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded.

ROBERT E. LEE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BAILEY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, many very eloquent speeches have been made about Robert E. Lee, but few, if any, excel the speech made by the brilliant senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] before the Kiwanis Club in Raleigh, N. C., on January 15.

As long as there is a South, the memory of Robert E. Lee will live in the hearts and spirits of the southern people as the noblest and most beloved man the South ever produced.

This speech which was delivered by my colleague the Senator from North Carolina is so outstanding in expression and in the concise review of the career of this great American that I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The speech is as follows:

It is fortunate that the highest tribute to Robert E. Lee has come from Stephen Vincent Benét, the son of a colonel in the United States Army, of Spanish descent, born in Pennsylvania, educated at Yale, and a resident of New York City—and not in the highly emotional period of the war period but under date of 1927. He cannot be suspected of sectional prejudice or partisan enthusiasm. I quote from his memorable epic poem, John Brown's Body:

"Broad-foreheaded, deep-eyed,
Straight-nosed, sweet-mouthed, firm-lipped, head cleanly set,
He and his horse are matches for the strong
Grace of proportion that inhabits both.
They carry nothing that is in excess
And nothing that is less than symmetry,
The strength of Jackson is a hammered strength,
Bearing the tool marks still. This strength was shaped
By as hard arts but does not show the toil
Except as justness, though the toil was there.
And so we get the marble man again,
The head on the Greek coin, the idol-image,
The shape who stands at Washington's left hand,
Worshipped, uncomprehended and aloof,
A figure lost to flesh and blood and bones,
Frozen into a legend out of life,
A blank-verse statue—
How to humanize
That solitary gentleness and strength
Hidden behind the deadly oratory
Of twenty thousand Lee Memorial days,
How show, in spite of all the rhetoric,
All the sick honey of the speechifiers,
Proportion, not as something calm congealed
From lack of fire, but ruling such a fire
As only such proportion could contain?
The man was loved, the man was idolized,
The man had every just and noble gift.
He took great burdens and he bore them well,
Believed in God but did not preach too much,
Believed and followed duty first and last
With marvelous consistency and force,
Was a great victor, in defeat as great,
No more, no less, always himself in both,
Could make men die for him but saved his men
Whenever he could save them—was most kind
But was not disobeyed—was a good father,
A loving husband, a considerate friend;
Had little humor, but enough to play
Mild jokes that never wounded, but had charm,
Did not seek intimates, yet drew men to him,
Did not seek fame, did not protest against it,
Knew his own value without pomp or jealousy
And died as he preferred to live—sans phrase,
With common sense, tenacity and courage,
A Greek proportion—and a riddle unread.
And everything that we have said is true
And nothing helps us yet to read the man,
Nor will he help us while he has the strength
To keep his heart his own.
For he will smile
And give you, with unflinching courtesy,
Prayers, trappings, letters, uniforms, and orders,
Photographs, kindness, valor, and advice,
And do it with such grace and gentleness
That you will know you have the whole of him
Pinned down, mapped out, easy to understand—
And so you have.
All things except the heart.
The heart he kept himself, that answers all."

Fully agreeing with Mr. Benét, I here undertake not to add to his portrait of Lee but only to utter certain impressions of a lifetime concerning him intended to be of timely import.

Robert E. Lee was a Virginian, a Christian, a gentleman, and a soldier; a Virginian rather than an American or a southerner, a Christian rather than a pagan, in that the God he worshipped he also served, seeking nothing for himself save that he should know and do his duty; a gentleman to the manner born, equally at home in camp or parlor, kind, patient, and considerate of others not only in bearing but in his heart, he could respond as graciously to the salute of a slave as to a king, and none could feel ill at ease in his presence; a soldier by inheritance, by instinct, by choice, skillful and courageous, a captain by reason of gifts of the heart and mind, resourceful in attack and unequalled in all the annals of the defeated, in retreat, and at last overwhelmed by an ever-increasing tide, in capacity to endure, to lead and to triumph. In the final phase the man himself was more than Virginian, more than Christian, more than gentleman, more than soldier—the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, the leader of his generation and the generations to come—an epic figure of infinite inspiration to all men everywhere, destined, I think, to live in the company of Achilles and Agamemnon. In that final phase it may justly be said that he added to his earlier titles that of rebuilder, educator, statesman, southerner, and American.

One looks from a western window of the United States Capitol upon a vista of unparalleled significance. Before him stretch the great plaza, Constitution Avenue, and Pennsylvania Avenue, in the foreground the historical Peace Monument, the Grant Memorial, the National Art Gallery, then the series of immense Government buildings, the monuments to Washington and Lincoln, and beyond the Potomac, fully 2 miles distant, the National Cemetery, the Flag lifted high, and Arlington—a colonial mansion—overlooking the Memorial to the Unknown Soldier, and surrounded by the graves of thousands of American heroes who served our country in battle. That mansion presiding with timeless grace over the moving scene was the home of Robert E. Lee, and it speaks a message all its own. The home of the chieftain of the Confederacy is the resting place of our Federal warrior dead: Itself a living monument to a civilization passed away, the shrine of duty and its sword—all the glory of Old Virginia serenely looking down upon the great Capital of the Nation that sprang from Old Virginia's loins.

It was here that Lee made his great decision; here he offered himself a living sacrifice to duty and his State. He was a Federal soldier, with the rank of colonel. He had won distinction in the war with Mexico. A great career in the United States Army lay before him. But he was not governed by ambition. Neither fame nor fortune tempted him. As between the call of the Federal Government and the call of Virginia to defend her against invasion by that Government, he could not do other than respond to his native State—be the consequences whatsoever they might be.

Lee's decision was not as between the United States, on the one hand, and the Confederate States, on the other. It was a choice as between the command of the Army of the United States and his duty to the State of Virginia, as one of its citizens. He was a soldier of the United States, and trained at West Point for that service. He was opposed to secession and to the war. He was happy in his career and in his home and his prospects. He could not be neutral under the circumstances. He chose to dwell in the tents of his people rather than in the high places of the Nation, and thereby without intention won the highest place in the hearts of men. None understood better than he the meaning of his choice—none realized more fully than he the desperate weakness of the Confederacy as a fighting power—without industries, without organization, and without army or navy.

But he lived in a day when loyalty to one's State was the first loyalty of a citizen, and in a State that demanded precedence over the Union as one of the thirteen creator States. It was said of North Carolina's foremost statesman, Nat Macon, that he pursued his studies at Princeton with little thought of duty in the Revolution until Cornwallis reached Cowpens, S. C., whereupon he said—"I do believe the British are about to invade North Carolina"—and at once volunteered. That was the old concept, doomed from the beginning to play out at length. But in Lee's day it had not played out anywhere in the United States; the Nation that you and I know had not been born—it was only entering, in 1861, the travail of its birth.

Until 1861 our country was a Republic of States under a Constitution, but within the terms of the powers granted in that great instrument the States were first and were each a sovereign. Lee would have obeyed Virginia even though she had stood alone. He would have resisted a Federal invasion of Virginia with his life. He was loyal to the Constitution, and he believed as did many another, that it provided for a superior loyalty to his State. His choice required no impairment of his oath to support that Constitution, and, therefore, no dishonor, no disloyalty to the Government under whose flag he had fought and whose uniform he had honored in war and in peace. He considered only that his clear duty was to defend Virginia against invasion, and he hoped to avoid secession. We have too long neglected to weigh the import of his solemn statement to the Governor of Virginia as he accepted command of his State's armed forces—"I hope this ends secession." Emphatically he was not against the Federal Union, but only against armed invasion of his State by that Federal Union. It was this statement that caused President Davis to dislike him and to delay his elevation to supreme command until the last days of the struggle.

Nor was his decision odd, abnormal, or sentimental. It was such a decision as he was sure Washington, his ideal, whose life and standards were quite real to him, would have made—a decision in accord with the principle asserted by Woodrow Wilson in 1919 in his declaration of the right of self-determination for small states and nations and his proposal to organize a league of nations to maintain that right of self-determination against the whole world. It did not seem odd to Lee—or in any degree traitorous—to maintain the inviolability of Virginia against invasion from any source. He even thought that that could be done without secession.

We yet have a domain of duty and self-determination for the States of the United States. God forbid that that domain shall ever be questioned by armed force from any quarter, but should any State or group of States find themselves invaded, or threatened with invasion from any quarter, to impose policies calculated to break down their social and political structures against the will of the people, there would arise again this principle of self-determination under the Constitution, and any State would be fortunate to have a Lee to assert and defend it. The more our Republic respects this principle, the greater its unity and power will be.

I have taken time to make clear the consistency of Lee's choice with honor and duty not by way of defense, but because there has been and there continues to be misunderstanding, and because hundreds of thousands of southern men and women were actuated by the same motives as Lee.

We do have now a mighty Nation, and loyalty to it is supreme. There are none more loyal than the people of the South. I have no question as to where Lee would stand today. I have no doubt that he would defend our flag with his life against all who would lift a hand against it—at home or abroad. And I am equally clear that in casting aside the command of the Federal Army and taking his stand with the State of Virginia he did his duty—even that to have done less was to do less than his duty. I question whether, as he meditated his decision there in Arlington and in sight of the Nation's Capitol, he considered the consequences of his choice or weighed the value at stake. He knew that he must yield up his proud station won by valor in battle and constant application in peace. He knew that he must give up Arlington, his home, his comrades in arms, and all his cherished prospects. But he knew also what his duty was, and that was enough; for as he himself declared, "Duty is the greatest word in the English language." It was the sole word in his vocabulary—the touchstone that resolved any problem, that shaped every decision. There was for him only the inner voice—the heavenly voice—and no earthly power could be heard to the contrary.

Elevated to the command of the armed forces of Virginia, General Lee had at once to create an army to command and to provide defenses on her coasts. And what an army he did create. In dash, in striking power, in tenacity, in fortitude, in gallantry, not since the days of Caesar's imperial legions has this earth beheld its equal. Within 18 months that army was in sight of victory; within 2 years it had driven McClellan from the peninsula and out of Virginia; and in less than 3 years it was in Pennsylvania and had victory in its grasp in the decisive battle of Gettysburg. Lee had all but succeeded in his task of repelling invasion.

He might have won that battle. The outcome hung 3 days by a thread so slender and events so fell that there are many who attribute it to that Providence which from the outset had determined that this country of ours was to be a mighty union, a great nation of one people, blest far above all others and charged with a peculiar destiny—which even now it is fulfilling. In all probability that outcome was determined by the accidental death of Stonewall Jackson at Chancellorsville.

In the hour that Gettysburg was lost, Vicksburg, far down the Mississippi, fell. The Confederacy was done for July 3, 1863. Either event alone might have been sustained, but the two at once meant the end.

The great captain of attack was now to prove himself the master of retreat. The Southern States were surrounded on all sides; aid from abroad was out of the question. Lee's generals were quarreling—one laying the blame for the Gettysburg failure upon another; one even blaming Lee. He settled the question, saying, "It is all my fault—I expected the impossible of my men." He had expected too much when he sent Pettigrew's and Pickett's men across the open plain in full view of the Federal guns. But it was not that order which lost the battle—the famous charge was rather the last and only available recourse to retrieve the battle that had been lost by the failure of Ewell to strike as Jackson would have struck and of Longstreet to come up as expected. It was impossible only because there were no reinforcements for the immortal soldiers who swept across that open plain and fought hand to hand on Cemetery Ridge. It was ordered by Lee because he had never retreated when attack was apparently possible.

Notwithstanding the fatal blows of Gettysburg and Vicksburg, Lee did not consider capitulation, nor did his associates. It was proposed to exhaust the last resource. Perhaps it was argued that Frederick the Great had been overwhelmed in defeat but had held on without a hope until circumstances far beyond him wrought alterations that brought victory and enabled him to win his war and found an empire, and there were those who believed that a cause so glorious could not be lost.

From Gettysburg to Appomattox stretched 21 months. The world will always wonder not that Lee would not admit defeat but that he could maintain his army in the field so long. He was never again to have the initiative. Grant and his ever-increasing Army came upon the scene, the Federal power always increasing, the Confederate power always waning—and Lee's army fighting great battles but always falling back. Lee's great distinction is that he held this army and the Confederate States together not only by skill in arms that kept hope alive but by faith of his soldiers and his people in himself that nothing—not even the surrender at last—could quench, a faith that was as spontaneous as the light of day.

The war was over at length. Lee was in private life without funds and without occupation, and without a country, political disability having been imposed. If he took note of the great parade of triumph at Washington and the national acclaim accorded Grant and Sherman, there is no evidence that he regretted his decision at Arlington or that he envied them. Grant became President, and well may Lee have reckoned that had he taken the position of Chief of the United States Army when President Lincoln tendered it to him he himself would have been in Grant's high station. But there were no regrets, there was no repentance, no explanations. He had done his duty and he accepted the lot fate had assigned with serenity and dignity. It was enough, perhaps, to be at home again in the bosom of his family to which he was devoted as husband and father. His problem was to earn a livelihood.

He was offered a business connection in New York with ample compensation. But his fame and the confidence of all the South were not assets which he would capitalize. At length Virginians offered him the presidency of Washington College. He saw therein his opportunity to serve and to achieve. It is now an institution of national fame and bears his name with that of Washington; and there he rests. He not only laid the foundations of the rebuilding of this institution but he gave to it and to all his countrymen new ideals of peace—of reconciliation, of rebuilding the South, of culture and of serenely facing the new day and the new conditions, with heads unbowed, with hearts unbroken, in triumph over defeat in war by daily living in an unconquerable faith and a changeless self-respect. He led an innumerable host and continues to lead them from disaster through suffering to triumph and reunion. Events had set him free to serve the United States once more.

There are those who hold that in this last phase Lee won his highest title and did his greatest work. He was the hero of the South, its leader and ideal, and never was his power in the field of warfare greater than his influence as a private citizen. The purity of his life, his devotion to duty, and that greater loyalty to his God and country which moved him not only to accept the national decision of arms but to lead the southern people in rebuilding for themselves in the new nation, won for him an ever-widening acclaim, until now, at length he has no critic or detractor in all the land. If the South worshipped him as the knightliest of a knightly race, the North honored him for his great character, his military genius, and his leadership in the rebuilding of the once-divided nation. All men everywhere recognized his greatness as a captain and his goodness as a man. Whether he realized this can never be known; it is not unlikely that his native modesty made the realization impossible, that an inherent humility of spirit forbade that he should gather to himself the harvest which he had earned and deserved. Perhaps he considered that it was enough for him to recall that as he rode down the lines his men could not forbear to cheer; enough to reflect with quiet satisfaction that he had kept the faith and had done his duty day by day and hour by hour, and that now in the fading hours of life he had work to do suited to his character, worthy of his spirit, and of highest import to the people who had loved him and trusted him. It was said of Moses that he knew not that his face shone when he returned from converse with the Most High. The truly good man does not know that he is good. The truly great man does not suspect that he is great.

History's halos in literature and art have never been and never will be for those who walked the earth in proud assurance of their superior gifts or station, but only for those who did not suspect themselves to be worthy to be honored above others and walked the lowly path. The most unrighteous are not the publicans and sinners, but the self-righteous; the most exalted are the humble in spirit. Theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven.

Time, with healing in his wings, has brought throughout our land understanding and appreciation. Everywhere the goodness and the greatness of Lincoln is cherished as the common heritage of us all. Grant has taken his place as a great military leader. Andrew Johnson is remembered as the brave statesman and Democrat who offended the South by standing out for the Federal Union and thereafter offended the North by demanding just policies toward the South after the war. Sherman is no longer regarded in the South as the monster he was painted during his memorable march from Tennessee to Atlanta, from Atlanta to Savannah, and Savannah to Raleigh, where he framed terms of surrender so sound and considerate that all the North accused him of throwing away the Federal victory in the hour of triumph. We know now that he was a masterful general who had proceeded upon a theory of war intended to avoid the slaughter of battles and based upon the destruction of supplies and communications. On the other hand, Jackson has taken his place in the hearts of all Americans as one of the greatest captains of all time—and as good as he was great. And Lee is honored as a master of strategy, a genius in tactics, great in attack, greater yet in retreat, and greater yet in his capacity to endure and to fight against overwhelming odds—greater still in the serene dignity with which he accepted the verdict of war and led a devoted people by example and precept to rebuild the South as a part of the great Union of States that the whole world knows as America, the mightiest of nations, devoted to peace but capable of war in the highest degree.

And now in the hour of our greatest test these and many more are the cherished possessions of a united people. We carry with us against our enemies Lincoln and Lee, Grant, Sherman, and Jackson. In his memoirs after the first World War, the greatest of German generals, Von Hindenburg, wrote it down that "the American people understand war." They do, and it is because of their inheritance of the spirits of men, from Washington and Andrew Jackson until now. There are nations to the west and to the east of us who are soon to realize that the present generation of American people understand war—even modern, mechanized, total war—even as its predecessors understood the wars of their time. We are now again to bring forth new Washingtons, new Lincolns, new Grants, new Shermans, new Jacksons, and new Lees, new armies of the South and of the North worthy of the heritage which is theirs.

It is said that on the night of the burial of Stonewall Jackson a Confederate captain stood at the foot of his grave and addressed him:

"General Jackson, if you see Caesar tonight, tell him we still make war."

Today all Americans can invoke the departed spirits of Washington and Andrew Jackson, Lincoln and Grant and Sherman, of Lee and Stonewall Jackson and Joseph E. Johnston and call upon them to bear witness to the heroes of the past and the future that the new Army of our sons and brothers, our daughters and sisters, ourselves, we mothers and fathers—North, South, East, and West—still make war after the manner of a people inspired by warrior heroes unsurpassed in all the annals of men.

UTILIZATION OF MANPOWER

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, last Monday I gave notice that I intended to address the Senate today on the subject of the utilization of manpower, and I desire to proceed at this time.

For 3 years we have moved from a normal peacetime economy to a position of enormous production for war purposes. During 1940 and 1941 we moved reluctantly and without positive and definite objective. The hope that we would not be obliged to go to war still influenced countless thoroughly patriotic men and women, there was lacking a cohesive unanimity of understanding and belief that horrible war was just ahead of us. We progressed toward a war status as fast as it was feasible for a representative government of a divided people to take the drastic steps required to prepare us for active participation in a global total war. When the unspeakably cruel, cowardly, murderous, and villainous assault was made on us by Japan while her representatives were treacherously in conference with our Secretary of State, presenting pleas and protestations that Japan desired to find a formula that would preserve peace, all citizens of the United States instantly said in their hearts, "War, war to the hilt with Japan and her hateful Axis associates," and in spirit answered the first reveille call to arms.

Since December 7, 1941, the people of our country have without division, without reluctance, and without fear been anxious to do everything within their power to conduct a successful war against our enemies.

When war develops it is natural that primary attention be given to the organization and training of combat forces—Army, Navy, Marines, Air Corps, and submarines. The very word "war" promptly suggests armies, training, marching, shooting. Since December 7, 1941, young men, prompted by valorous courage, patriotism, and love of home and the American way of life, have volunteered for services in our combat forces by the hundreds of thousands. Millions of our young men, actuated by the same noble and inspiring motives, have gladly joined the colors for war duties anywhere on earth that they may be sent by their superior officers in the management of our war effort. The response to every call for more soldiers has been wonderful and comforting. When called to leave their homes and loved ones to go to some unknown assignment in the United States or Europe or Asia or Africa or Australia or the islands of the seas, the young men from cities, towns, and farms have marched away with intrepid courage and fortitude and without objection or protest—to win or to nobly die if that end should come to them.

We now have about 7,000,000 physically fit men, withdrawn from the occupational pursuits of our national economy, many of them scattered over the face of the earth and many more in training camps throughout our country. The number of our warrior soldiers, sailors, and marines who are now on foreign soil and in immediate or prospective contact with our enemies has not been publicly disclosed. All of them, with very few exceptions, had at least 1 year's training before they were sent abroad. They were sent in American troop transports, convoyed by suitable American warships. Supplies, equipment, arms, and other instruments of warfare have been sent across the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans many thousands of miles away, and must continue to be sent so long as our soldiers remain on foreign soil. Many companies and divisions of our armies are destined yet to sail the dangerous seas.

While our combat forces were being mobilized, a multitude of industrial workers from all urban and rural areas have been assembled to work in war production plants throughout the country—producing airplanes, guns, ammunition, chemicals, ships of every description, uniforms, equipment, and instruments of war of every character and description. Production in some spheres of our war activities has not equaled the desired volume. More workers are needed, and with the abnormally high wages being paid it is inevitable that very large numbers will be drawn from town and cities and from the farms.

As the size of our armies sent to foreign countries is increased, additional production workers will be required to provide them with the combat equipment required to conduct a successful campaign. Additional food for export will be required; additional shipping facilities for transportation and protection of troops, and for furnishing food and arms and everything necessary to equip and maintain large armies thousands of miles across the oceans in foreign countries.

What about food? The imperative need for adequate food for our armed forces wherever located, for the millions of war production workers, and for our civilian population is universally recognized. It is not clear, however, that there is a realization and full understanding of the farm production problem. While the demand for food has been steadily increasing, due to lend-lease requirements and shipments to our armed forces abroad, there has been a terrific drain of farm labor for Army duty and industrial employment. The crops produced in 1942 were quite sufficient for normal purposes. The bread crops supplied the surpluses, but the meats and oils and fats developed deficiencies which resulted in food shortages and widespread rationing. It is now evident that during 1943, even with weather conditions above normal, rationing of foods will be extended to the point that the average standard of living may be substantially reduced; and still the reduction in the number of farm workers continues, thereby increasing the number in our armed forces and among our war production workers.

I submit a table from the Bureau of the Census showing the farm population, the total population, and the percentage of the total population on farms in the United States, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Population of the United States

| Year | Farm population | Total population | Percentage of total population on farms |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1920 | 31,614,269 | 105,710,620 | 29.9 |
| 1930 | 30,445,350 | 122,775,046 | 24.7 |
| 1940 | 30,546,911 | 131,669,275 | 23.3 |

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, this table shows that from 1920 to 1940 the farm population had decreased 1,067,358, while the total population of the United States during the same period had increased 25,958,655. In 1920 the percentage of population on farms was 29.9 and in 1940 it had decreased to 23.3 percent. Thus it appears that in spite of the reduction of 6.6 percent in the percentage of farmers, they produced in 1940 ample food for the civilian population. How much further can that reduction go in view of the increased demands for foods, especially if we are going to supply any food to our allies?

The Secretary of Agriculture has recently stated that during 1942, 2,000,000 farm workers left the farms. The President in his recent address to Congress stated:

> While we have been achieving this miracle of production, during the past year our armed forces have grown from a little over 2,000,000 to 7,000,000. In other words, we have withdrawn from the labor forces and the farms some 5,000,000 of our younger workers.

In the President's message transmitting the Budget for 1943, he said:

> During the calendar year 1943 approximately 6,000,000 people will be needed above present requirements for the armed services and war production.

The President did not break down these figures but I believe it may be stated with accuracy that the present plan for enlarging the Army calls for a monthly addition of 400,000 selectees. If this plan is continued throughout the year, 4,800,000 young men will be drawn from civilian life for armed service. If the same percentage of the farm population is selected that the farm population bears to the total population, there will be approximately a million more farm workers removed from the farms as a part of the increased armed service. These figures are sufficient to cause thoughtful citizens, and especially public officials who are entrusted with responsibility, to stop, look, and listen, and probably to reappraise the entire program if there is such a program at this time for the division of our manpower.

There are at least four major groups to be considered: The armed forces, the war production workers, the industrial production workers, and the agricultural workers. The fact that the last named group must produce food and clothing for all the other groups as well as for themselves, and are expected to provide large quantities of food and fiber for shipment to our allies, makes it necessary in the development of any sound distribution of manpower to give primary consideration to the subject of agricultural production.

It seems to me that the time has been reached when Congress should, consistent with its constitutional responsibility, make a complete survey of all the important factors which properly enter into a division of our manpower resources for the most effective conduct of the war and the maintenance of the health, morale, and national economy of our civilian population. If the present rate of increasing our armed forces continues, we shall have at the end of this year approximately 12,000,000 men working under the national colors. That raises directly the question of how many civilians are required to support each person in the armed forces. It is a subject upon which intelligent opinion differs, but estimates of from 10 to 17 and more civilians for each man in the service have been made. If the minimum of 10 only is required, then we could not support an armed force in excess of 13,000,000. If 15 are required, then we could not support an armed force in excess of 8,600,000.

The first draft law, approved September 16, 1940, authorized the President to induct into the land and naval forces of the United States for training and service such number of men as in his judgment is required for such forces in the national interest. An act making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, states that the appropriations contained shall not be subject to any limitations as to the strength of the Army, as to the number of flying cadets in the Army Air Corps, as to the number of assistant superintendents in the Army Nurse Corps, or as to the number and grade of Reserve officers who may be ordered to extended active duty with the Air Corps. An act approved August 18, 1941, provided that limitations on the number of men who may be in training and service at any one time are suspended.

From the acts quoted it will be noted that the President has been granted the power, without limitation, to determine the number of men in the land and naval forces required in the national defense.

I made no complaint against that unlimited grant of power when conditions were so chaotic and the probable requirements were so nebulous. I do not intimate that there has been any abuse by the President of power granted to him. It seems to me, however, that the time has now arrived for the Congress to aid the President by advising with him as another year of unlimited control of eligible manpower between 18 and 38 years of age is now with us.

I shall make bold to venture an expression of some of my views on some phases of our manpower problems. Every cog in the entire war machinery would promptly weaken if the food supply were too greatly reduced. We must watch food production with anxiety and deep concern. Ordinary judgment prompts action that will avoid jeopardizing adequate food production. If the draft of farmers is allowed to continue, and if war contractors continue to lure labor from the farms with wages so high that farm workers are unable to resist them, the American people may sometime, when it is too late, realize that a food shortage of dangerout proportions confronts them. The current farm-labor supply should not be reduced.

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics has prepared tables from which it appears, using the average of 1935 to 1939 as a basis and counting the farm labor and industrial labor supply during that average period at 100, that for 1942 farm labor supply has gone down to 63 percent, while the industrial labor supply has gone up during the same period from 100 to 150 percent.

After accounting for all the men who do not have the physical and mental requirements, it is estimated by capable persons that only about 14,000,000 men between 18 and 38 years of age are available for military service. Of this figure, 7,000,000 men are now in the service, and the remaining reservoir would be 7,000,000, out of which the additional 5,000,000 are to be inducted. That development would leave a thin line of only about 2,000,000 for other services and eventualities. These are not official figures, but I believe they are fairly accurate. From what labor pool are the 5,000,000, yet to be inducted, to be drawn? Where are the men coming from to increase war production? How many of the 5,000,000 new inductees will be withdrawn from war production plants? From what reservoir will they be replaced?

At this time there are about 44,000,000 men engaged in war, civilian, and agricultural production, and in the armed services. They are divided substantially as follows: War production thirteen and one-half million, civilian production fifteen and one-half million, agricultural production eight and one-half million, and armed service 7,000,000. There are no known figures to show the number of men engaged in civilian production who by reason of age, physical infirmity, or other reasons do not possess the necessary requirements for military service.

It is essential that the economy of this country be sustained as far as possible. It is necessary to continue the required standard of living in order that our civilian population may be fed and clothed and supplied with other necessities of life and in order that we may maintain our local and State governments and preserve our domestic organization, and at the same time contribute to the support of the Military Establishment through taxation.

In view of the absolute necessity of at least continuing, and if possible increasing, the production of war materials and instruments and implements, it is apparent that it will be too dangerous to withdraw from war production many more men for service in the armed forces. When we recall that we have pledged our faith and credit to become the arsenal for the democracies of the world who are allied with us in this life-and-death struggle, we should shrink from the adoption of any program which endangers in the slightest way the production of all of the things that our armed forces and our allies need in conducting this terrible war to a speedy and successful conclusion.

The soldiers who are supplied by Russia and China are in immediate contact with our enemies. The soldiers supplied by Great Britain and her Dominions are in large measure in the same situation. Soldiers to be furnished by the United States, if sent across the Atlantic Ocean, must travel a distance of more than 3,000 miles and be confronted with the hazards of the German and Italian flotilla of submarines and airplanes. Our soldiers who are sent across the Pacific must travel six or seven thousand miles and encounter the dangers of destruction from the fleet, submarines, and airplanes of the Japanese.

In addition to the transportation of our soldiers such long distances, we must also send with them guns of every kind being used in the war, including rifles, machine guns, antiaircraft guns, cannon, and tanks. We must also send food and clothing to supply their requirements. A large number of ships will be needed for conveying and convoying the soldiers as well as the supplies; and if the size of our armed forces sent abroad increases from time to time, an equivalent increase in shipping facilities and convoys will also be needed.

It seems to me that the practical solution of this, the most important problem confronting us, is to continue in position to serve ourselves and our allies as an arsenal for the production and supply of food and instruments of war, and call upon our allies to furnish the additional manpower necessary to constitute any sized army that may be used to our advantage. Russia is supposed to have a population of around 130,000,000 outside of the German-occupied areas. Russia has from the beginning stated that it was not necessary for her allies to send her any manpower. She has frequently asserted that if we would furnish the war tools she would furnish the men to use them. I submit that it would be infinitely better and safer from every standpoint to equip 5,000,000 Russians with exactly the same equipment that our soldiers would use if sent to fight with the Russian Army on foreign soil or anywhere else in Europe. The Russians are adjusted to the ways of life in the climate of their country. They know its topography. They have proven themselves to be valiant and courageous soldiers. They are already there, and do not need long ocean transportation. All they want is the proper amount of the needed supplies and equipment—food, ammunition, weapons of all sorts, and all necessary instruments of war.

China has millions of men ready to give their lives in conducting the heroic struggle to defeat Japan's aggression. A statement was widely published that on November 1, 1941, China had an army of 2,900,000 well-seasoned troops who had been fighting 6 or 8 years. There is little doubt about China's ability to raise an army of 25,000,000 men. Their great need is arms, including tanks, cannon, antiaircraft guns, and airplanes in sufficient quantities.

Dr. Soong, brother-in-law of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, very recently stated while in this country that China did not ask for troops; that it had almost unlimited manpower; and that all China asked for was the up-to-date weapons of war. He gave assurance that if furnished such weapons, China would do the rest and would not quit until she had annihilated the Japanese. After the patient and heroic struggle of the Chinese for 6 or 8 years to preserve their liberty and to overcome the barbarous Japanese invaders, with the odds against them because of lack of suitable instruments of war, no one can doubt the courage of the Chinese or their devotion to democratic principles and the protection of their homeland.

Great Britain and her dominions are reported to have a total population of 504,000,000. The Japanese Army is in China and in close proximity to India. It is understood that India has now at least a million organized and trained soldiers. I do not know why these troops, who, I understand, are under the control of Great Britain, have not been pitted against the Japanese invading army. The Axis countries, including the population of the Japanese Empire, have a total population of 229,934,823. Counting only the United Kingdom's population, which is 46,213,169, and China, with 458,000,000, and India, with 353,000,000, and Russia, with 193,000,000, and the United States, with 132,000,000, the Allies have a combined population of 1,182,213,169. Thus it appears that manpower is not a deciding factor in favor of the Axis. The combined population of the Axis Powers is only about one-fifth of that of the Allies.

Of all the countries in the world, China and Russia are in the best position to furnish men, while America is in the best position to furnish equipment. Why should we not accept these undisputed, fundamental facts, and apply to them the rule of sound reason and unanswerable logic?

The War Department has not kept figures on the cost of paying and maintaining each soldier. The best obtainable figures, however, show that based upon the pay of the lowest-paid private, together with food, clothing, and equipage, it costs about $1,000 a year per man. If the Army is increased by 5,000,000, that will add $5,000,000,000 to the expense of maintaining the Army for those items alone. There are many other items, of course, that must be considered. Of course, our Government would not refuse to incur that additional expense if it appeared to be reasonably necessary in the successful conduct of the war. If it is not reasonably necessary, however, it should not be considered in reaching a decision as between using 5,000,000 more of our young men and using the same number of young men of our Allied countries.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAYBANK in the Chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. The Senator has frequently stated that 5,000,000 men will be needed this year. I understand that that figure does not include any replacements for casualties. If the number of casualties is in accordance with the normal expectation, virtually every able-bodied man between the ages of 18 and 38 must expect to be called within the next 12 or 13 months.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, that will depend upon the number of fatalities, but whatever that may be, I think the Senator is right.

Mr. AIKEN. The natural assumption would be a million men.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have been using the most conservative estimates, and have stated that if there is any such number of replacements because of casualties as has been suggested by the Senator there will not be sufficient men in this country between the ages of 18 and 38 years to do any work on the farms or in plants producing materials and equipment for war use; because, as the Senator has suggested, all of them would be required in order to attain the objective of 5,000,000 new troops this year.

Mr. AIKEN. Certainly. I think the Senator from Alabama is performing a service in calling the attention of the Senate and of the people of the country to that fact.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Constitution vests in Congress the power to raise and support armies, and for an additional safeguard it provides that no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer time than 2 years. Congress has delegated the power to the President to prescribe the number that we should have in our armed forces for this year. The President has exercised that power from time to time by authorizing the drafting of additional men for the armed forces. He has not, so far as I know, exercised the power to the extent of fixing the maximum number to be inducted into the armed forces. It seems to me that Congress, in view of the specific authorization in the Constitution to raise and support armies, should now reappraise our entire manpower program with special reference to fixing the maximum number to be inducted into the Army and the number to be left on the farm. I do not deem it necessary at this time to undertake to withdraw any of the powers heretofore granted to the President on this subject, but it seems to me that the President would welcome a study of this subject in all its phases, provided such study is undertaken in a spirit of national unity and of helpful cooperation in the conduct of the war.

I am therefore offering a resolution which authorizes the Senate Committee on Appropriations to enter without delay upon hearings, to be followed by recommendations by the committee. I have named the Appropriations Committee because it is the only Senate committee which deals in a direct way with the money to be expended for each of the war purposes. That committee is composed of more than one-fourth of the entire membership of the Senate. Its membership has a very wide geographical distribution, and most of its members have had the opportunity to examine and pass on all the appropriations heretofore made for the conduct of the war.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution, which I send to the desk, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 85) is as follows:

Whereas the subject of a proper division of the manpower of the United States for the best interest of the conduct of the war is of great importance and deserves the attention and consideration of the Congress; and

Whereas an improper division of manpower may endanger our food supply, or may endanger our production of implements and instruments for the conduct of the war, or may bring about an army of undue and excessive size, or may imperil our national civilian economy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations is hereby authorized and requested to consider the subject of the best division and distribution of our Nation's manpower in order to secure the speediest and most successful conduct and conclusion of the war;

Resolved further, That the said committee is hereby authorized and requested to hold hearings and to make a study of the subjects mentioned in this resolution, and thereafter to submit its findings and recommendations to the Senate, and, if it decides that legislation is necessary, that it present appropriate bills to the Senate in line with the committee's recommendations.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I congratulate the Senator from Alabama upon bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate. I concur in his thought that there should be a thorough investigation by the Committee on Appropriations.

When the Senator called attention to the number of men it took to support a man in the Army, he said it ranged from about 10 to 17. We have had testimony before some of our committees, as a matter of fact there was testimony given before a committee this morning, and I have had the information from authoritative sources, that what is needed in Russia today, more even than ammunition, is food; that the Russian people, who have made such a tremendous contribution to the United Nations' war effort, are actually in dire need of food, and that unless they get food this winter, and get it immediately, millions of Russian people are likely to starve to death.

It so happened that I was in Russia on two occasions. I was there once right after a tremendous drought in the Ukraine. When the grain of the Ukraine was lost because of that drought, millions of people starved to death. Now they have lost that territory, and lost part of the Caucasus region, so far as the production of anything is concerned, and millions of people will be starving to death. We here in the United States will have to furnish them with food.

Not only that, but we will have to furnish England with food; we will have to furnish South America with food; and it has been represented to me that at the present time, unless some of the South American countries can get food, they will be faced by a very serious situation.

Our problem is not merely to feed our own Army. If that were the only problem, that would be one thing, but when we take into consideration the fact that there are 130,000,000 people in Russia who have to be fed, not according to our standards, but who have to be given enough food to keep their bodies and souls together, and that, on top of that, we have to furnish the Russians who are fighting with munitions in order to keep them fighting, we see what faces us. We also have to furnish munitions of war to the Chinese, and to furnish munitions of war to England. We also have to furnish them to India, and we have to furnish the people in India with tires. I was amazed at the number of tires and the amount of rubber we have to furnish to India and to various other countries in order to enable them to carry on the war.

Notwithstanding these things, we hear it said in the United States that we can build up an army of 12,000,000 men, and unless I am badly mistaken, furnishing them the necessary food and ammunition would wreck the economy of the United States, I do not care who says we can support an army of that size. To be sure, we can support them; we can even support a bigger army, provided they are fighting on our own soil. We could probably support a bigger army if we did not have to furnish the food to other nation.

I want to see the Russians given the necessary food to keep them from starving; I want to see them given the materials, the machinery, the guns, the powder, and everything else, to enable them to keep fighting. I also want to see the Chinese furnished the necessary supplies. A representative of the Chinese Government said to me not long ago, "If you people will just give us the equipment, we will lick the Japs. We do not need anything except the equipment." We cannot furnish them with the equipment, and we cannot give the Russians the food and the materials they need if we are going to strip our American factories of workmen and take all our married men and men with families and with children and put them into the armed forces.

It seems to me it is time that the Congress of the United States spoke up, and used the power provided by the Constitution, as pointed out by the Senator from Alabama, and made an inquiry into the facts. If we come to the conclusion that what we are asked to do cannot be done, let us exercise our power and put a stop to taking the number of men it is claimed will be taken, namely, 400,000 every month. As I said, that would take not only the boys off the farms, but it would take fathers away from their children, it would take men away from their homes. If we do that, we will break down the morale of the country, and break tant problem confronting Congress and the President and the American people.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In order that the RECORD may be more complete, I think it should contain at this point a statement of the division of power. Is it not a fact that, under the Constitution, the responsibility falls upon the Congress, first, "To declare war"; second, "To raise and support armies"; and, third, "To provide and maintain a Navy"? These are constitutional provisions. Therefore the responsibility rests upon Congress alone for the raising and equipping and supporting of an army. After the army is provided for; that is, after the army is raised, uniformed, and furnished with fighting equipment, then the President, as the Commander in Chief, is in charge of the strategy or of the operations of the Army.

I should like to ask the Senator this specific question: Is it not a fact that the larger we build our Army the more difficult it will be for the remainder of our people to provide equipment in the way of ordnance and food?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, there can be only one answer to that question. The answer is that, of course, it will be more difficult.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is it not also true that if the Army of the United States should be developed to a 12,000,000-man Army about the only persons left in the United States to provide and furnish equipment and to furnish food will be elderly men and women, and younger women and children, and boys under 18 years of age?

Mr. BANKHEAD. There will be a percentage of boys or men between 18 and 38 who are physically or otherwise unfit for Army service who will be rejected, and will not be sent to the Army. They may be able to do some work. Of course, they cannot have the vitality and strength possessed by those who are sent to the Army.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the Senator from Alabama for taking the present occasion to call this issue to the attention of the Congress and the country. I wish to say that his resolution is most timely, and I feel certain it will be given the consideration which the importance of the subject matter entitles it to receive.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I submit the resolution which I stated in my speech would be presented, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I did not understand the request made by the Senator from Alabama. To what committee did the Senator ask that the resolution be referred?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator requested that it be referred to sometimes think we do not take into consideration the various factors involved in a global war, such as transportation, production, and distribution. Of course, I should like to see an investigation made of the questions raised by the Senator. Such an investigation is needed. I was wondering if the Committee on Appropriations is the proper committee to make such an investigation, however, because it appropriates public funds, whereas other committees are known as legislative committees, and all matters appertaining to legislation should be referred to them for action.

Mr. President, again expressing my very deep sympathy with the attitude of the Senator from Alabama and with the remarks he has made, and again complimenting him on the careful attention he has given to this very important matter, I question the appropriateness of the reference requested by the Senator. I should like the privilege of asking the Senator if he thinks the resolution should go to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I appreciate the kind reference to my remarks made by the Senator from Oregon. I may say that I am not particular as to which committee the resolution is referred. My thought was that if the resolution were sent to the Committee on Military Affairs it would be sent to a committee which deals directly with the Army, and the committee may have some predilections on that subject. If the resolution were sent to the Committee on Naval Affairs we would have the same situation. Of course, it might be sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not conversant with the early provisions of the resolution, as my attention was distracted when it was being read at the desk. I ask that the resolution again be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think another resolution of the same tenor was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and a subcommittee was appointed to consider it, and that subcommittee has been giving its attention to the subject of manpower. I know that the Secretary of Agriculture, Manpower Commissioner McNutt, and General Hershey appeared before the subcommittee. Inasmuch as the subject dealt with in the resolution is legislative in character, I think it should not go to the Committee on Appropriations, and I make that suggestion in the most kindly manner.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Oregon, I should suggest that the resolution lie on the table until we have had time to think further about the matter of reference.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the resolution should go to some committee which

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, there is one other reason for my request that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, a reason which I did not have time to state, and that is that the Appropriations Committee, of course, must pass on every dollar of money paid out of the Treasury for all war purposes. The Appropriations Committee has had before it from time to time appropriation bills for war agencies. Generals and officials in charge of various agencies have appeared before the committee from time to time. So in a general way that committee has been passing on this subject by virtue of the amount of money it has appropriated. I have no objection to the resolution going to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is not a sufficient answer to my objection. Of course, the Appropriations Committee passes eventually upon the question of supplying of funds in connection with all legislative bills. But the Appropriations Committee does not act on proposed legislation. It has enough to do in looking after the fiscal policies of the Government. That is the reason for my objection. The committee is perfectly competent to deal with the subject, of course. It has a strong personnel. But I am trying to keep the jurisdiction of other committees well defined. I have no objection to the resolution lying on the table for the present, but, I repeat, I do oppose reference of it to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not insist on the resolution being referred to the Appropriations Committee. I am willing to have it lie on the table for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table.

ATTACKS ON RELIGION BY NAZI LEADERS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, the religious-minded people of the world were shocked to learn of the attacks made upon all religions by the Nazi leaders of Germany. When we realize the philosophy of nazi-ism as propounded by the Hitler puppets we realize what the people of that stricken country are up against. As this philosophy unfolds, as we become acquainted with its many sides, we come to the conclusion that the world cannot live with Hitler or with his philosophy. We also realize that it took years of preparation for Hitler to subdue his own unfortunate people. We realize, likewise, that the Nazi philosophy was given to the infants of Germany as they fed at their mothers' breasts; that it was inculcated in the minds of the youths in those impressionable years; and that it became the motivating principle of all those who embraced nazi-ism within the German Reich.

Occasionally there came out of Germany a word of rebellion, a word of denunciation, a heroic utterance, which led us to believe that no matter what Hitler and his spokesmen may accomplish, religion, democracy, and eventually justice, would survive, and surmount all the obstacles of the Nazi leadership.

To explain in a brief word the religious philosophy of the Nazi, let me read a statement made by the Nazi Commissar of Thann to a gathering of civil servants, which sums up their position concisely, although blasphemously. He said:

A good Catholic—

He might just as well have said a good Protestant or a good Jew—cannot be a good national socialist, but the officials of the Third Reich must, before all things, be good Nazis.

They must choose either one thing or the other: Either Jesus Christ or the Fuehrer.

Mr. President, from time to time outstanding religious leaders in Germany, men who tower like giants in the Christian world, have taken issue with this philosophy. They have struck out against its progress, only to find themselves in the concentration camps of their own country. We all recall the utterances of the Reverend Niemöller, of Archbishop Innitzer, and of Cardinal Faulhaber.

I have quoted on this floor a sermon delivered by Bishop Clemens, august count of Galen. However, of all the religious utterances coming out of Germany the most startling, perhaps the most heroic—the most defiant—is the pastoral letter delivered recently by an outstanding German cleric, the Bishop of Berlin. This pastoral letter was written and distributed during the Christmas season. What has happened to that cleric is a mystery to me, and perhaps to many of his friends.

Mr. President, because of the startling information which this statement contains, because of the revelation it will be to those who have opportunity to hear it and read it, I have asked the O. W. I. to give this speech all the publicity its national defense importance warrants. I trust that it will be publicized throughout the Americas, because it points out the effects of a Nazi victory, no matter where that victory may be.

Mr. President, there is a force in Germany today that is fighting the Nazis as determinedly as are our own soldiers in North Africa, the defenders of Russia, and all the other men of the United Nations who on land and sea and in the air are battling Hitler's henchmen. This force is not any underground movement. It is not composed of those brave but suppressed people who meet in dark cellars and secret hiding places to discuss Hitler's downfall—and all honor to the heroes who chose physical darkness rather than spiritual darkness. No; this force is in the open. It has refused to take cover. It is the one head which rises to challenge Hitler in his own domain; it is the one head in his own country which has refused even a semblance of an obeisance, the one head he has not been able to bow to his will. Hitler fears this force, perhaps more than any other.

This force, Mr. President, is religion—the force of Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish religion.

Mr. President, I have here one of the most remarkable documents of this war. I am going to read part of it to you. It is, as I have explained, a pastoral letter—a Christmas pastoral letter—written by the Roman Catholic bishop of Berlin, Conrad Count Von Preysing, written to his flock and circulated throughout Nazi Germany. It has just been received in this country. It was relayed through neutral channels. I cannot, of course, make public the exact way it got here. I have asked the Office of War Information to make copies of the complete letter available to the press, to the radio, and to individual Americans. This force, Mr. President, is on the side of right and justice; it is on our side. We should fight better—all of us should fight better—for knowing that it is with us.

The letter begins:

My dear diocesans; the Christmas season for us has always been, and is particularly so this year, a time for self-examination. We see before us the great figure of St. John the Baptist, the proclaimer of truth and the champion of external rights, and we hear his appeal: "Metanoeite—change your mode of thinking." It seems to me appropriate therefore that the present Christmas season gives us an opportunity to ask ourselves in what respect should the world change its mode of thinking, particularly in view of the fact that its present principles have resulted in misery and woe.

Mr. President, who should know more about misery and woe than the people of Germany under Hitler?

The letter goes on:

"Justice and right are the foundations of your throne," proclaims the psalmist. As little as the rebellion of the renegade angels could shake the throne of God, just as little will mankind be able to upset the foundations of the dominion of God; the worth of each individual and of the nations will be determined by the foundations of this dominion, and every departure from right and justice will sooner or later be broken against these foundations of God's domain.

You, Hitler—

Bishop Preysing is saying—

You, Hitler, will also be broken against the foundations of God—and you and all Godless Nazis.

Mr. President, Bishop Preysing said that to Hitler right in the capital city of Germany—Berlin.

Then the letter says:

Justice is essentially a quality based on eternal foundations. It does not depend upon the arbitrary actions of mankind. One of its principles is: "Do as you would be done by."

Let me read that again:

It does not depend upon the arbitrary actions of mankind. One of its principles is: "Do as you would be done by.

Arbitrary actions of mankind—arbitrary actions of Hitler, Bishop Preysing means. Hitler, who put Pastor Martin Niemöller in a concentration camp for telling the truth, Hitler, whose followers parade through the streets as priests and carrying aloft the Nazi symbol on a false altar to make a mockery of religion. Hitler, who has persecuted Protestant, Catholic, and Jew—Hitler, who for all his evil power cannot still the voice of religion, even in Germany.

What has Hitler to do with the motto, "Do as you would be done by"?

Now I want you to note this next part of the pastoral letter. You know that the Nazi principle is that the state is supreme, that everything must be subordinate to the state—even if this means killing by abortion an unborn child of Jewish parents, or the murder of old, helpless German persons who are of no more use to the state.

Another such principle—

is that the life of an innocent individual, be it an unborn child or an old person, is holy, and that the innocent may not be punished with or in place of the guilty. To take the life of a man is only permitted to the authorities as punishment for a crime or in defense of the home country or in justified self-defense.

Those thousands of innocents slain by Hitler's orders have a voice in Bishop Preysing and in those others who speak without fear of torture or death. Hitler cannot stop those tongues. Their words reach him through his strongest ring of guards.

Bishop Preysing cries:

Right cannot be determined by the criterion whether it is useful or otherwise. The rights of the individual, as those of the community, are limited by eternal justice. The individual cannot impose his rule against this eternal right—and neither can the community do so; even the community is obligated to observe the rights whose principles are graven in every man's heart.

Those words are addressed to Hitler. Bishop Preysing says:

Right is something which must be enforced even against the interest of the individual and the Nation.

How does that sound to Hitler, who has announced that right is anything which furthers the Nazi cause? And how dare Bishop Preysing fling those words into Hitler's teeth, from the pulpit of a church in Berlin? Perhaps, after all, there are some Germans who are not afraid of Hitler. Perhaps, after all, Hitler is not supreme in Germany—perhaps he is beginning to feel the strength of those who owe allegiance to someone higher than Hitler.

Bishop Preysing proceeds:

The resistance against God's sovereign rule occurred to a large extent in the eighteenth century—the century which proclaimed the primacy of human intelligence, the individual as an autonomous being and as his sole judge, and that all right was to be derived from this intelligence independently of God's law. The church has met this opposition as it has met all other temporary errors. In its syllabus it has condemned the temporary errors of liberalism. Its deepest error does not consist in the overemphasis of the right of the individual at the expense of the community; it exists in the denial of God's sovereign rule and the separation of humanity from the eternal law. This is the root of the teaching of the licentious liberty and the self-determination of man.

That, Senators, is not the voice of one who has been conquered. It is not the voice of pacifism. It is a fighting voice—the defiant voice of the church militant.

In the course of evolution—

philosophy has developed individualism to a kind of collectivism. It no longer attributes to the individual but to the community, whether that be considered as all mankind or as individual nations the privilege of complete sovereignty in right and custom. The state was conceived as the manifestation—more than that—as the very incarnation of this God. It was a deity which had nothing but the name in common with the true God.

This denial of God's sovereign rule is directly responsible for the uncertainty and bewilderment surrounding the idea of right. Power rules in place of justice and profit in place of right. The moment this standpoint is adopted the word "justice" loses its connotation. The moment mankind—whether as individuals, as larger communities or as nations—no longer feel bound by an immutable eternal law the result can only be strife and discord, hatred and disunion, disorder and chaos.

Imagine the courage of a man saying or writing publicly those things in Nazi Germany. But listen to this:

If power creates and represents right there can be no peaceful communion between individuals or smaller communities or nations and a fight of all against all will result.

How could Bishop Preysing say any plainer: "You started this war, Hitler, by a lust for power. I, the representative of religion, dare tell you this. We are your enemies, and there are a great number of us, and we are strong, for we have God on our side—we have right, and justice on our side. Even in your own Capitol I dare tell you this."

Mr. President, that is the force which Hitler must reckon with. Have we, in this country, realized that there is such a force? I do not believe we have. I do not believe we have recognized the potentialities of such a force. Bishop Preysing's letter—there are other parts of it I want my colleagues to hear also—is not an isolated case of the revolt of religion in Germany, and in the countries occupied by the Nazi armies of Germany. Religion and Hitler are deadly enemies. There is not room in the world for both. And members of all religions—Catholic, Protestant, Jew—wherever they live, whatever their country, know that to survive Hitler must be defeated.

I say that there are some religious persons in this country—not many, but some—who do not believe this war must be fought through to a finish—and when I say "finish" I mean the finish of Hitler. There are some who do not understand what it would mean to their religion if Hitler were left with power—who prefer pacifism and isolationism to taking part in a conflict, even when that conflict will decide whether freedom, religion, and civilization will live or die.

To these I say: Read the letter from the bishop of Berlin to his people. If that man, standing in a pulpit in the capital of Nazi Germany, will risk his life for his God, can you do less than join him, with all the strength of which you are capable, in the battle against the enemy of God?

Hear Bishop Preysing further:

The most powerful will win until a still greater power arises and crushes him; the result is an existence devoid of all human dignity—a fight for existence on the level of creatures deprived of human intelligence.

Listen, Mr. Hitler, to the bishop's further word:

The individual cannot and must not be permitted to be completely absorbed by the state or by the nation or by the race. Whoever the individual may be, he has an immortal soul and an eternal destiny. He is and will remain responsible for each of his deeds. God has endowed him with freedom and he must remain free.

I want to repeat that last sentence:

God has endowed him with freedom and he must remain free.

The man who said that may join, or he may have already joined, Niemöller in a concentration camp. But he said it—and if he is taken away others will come who will say it after him. I am sure other German clergymen will come to leadership and will say it again and again.

One thing is certain—

no power on earth may venture to force an individual to make declarations or to commit acts which would be against his conscience or against the truth. It is certain that in such case the words of St. Peter would apply which became the foundation of the freedom of the Christianized western world. When called before the high council and cautioned never again to speak to anyone in the name of Christ, St. Peter and St. John replied, "Judge for yourselves whether it is right before God to obey you more than God."

That is what Bishop Preysing tells Hitler. That is what all the Protestants and Jews and Catholics—all members of all religions—tell Hitler:

Judge for yourself whether it is right before God to obey you more than God.

That is why Hitler has not been able to conquer religion, why all the concentration camps and penitentiaries, all the whips, and all the headsmen in Germany cannot conquer religion.

The rights of the family are age-old.

Says Bishop Preysing—

No hierarchic worldly community can deprive it of these rights, because they were not conferred on the family by a worldly power, but by God Himself. Parents have privileges and duties toward their children, and these cannot be assumed by a hierarchic worldly power. These privileges and duties include—and this is an idea which the Holy Father has proclaimed over and over—the religious instruction and training of children. It is a holy task which no other power may usurp. Parents have the right and the duty to raise their children as Christians, and every endeavor either inside or outside the family to aggravate or nullify this right is an injustice.

Mr. President, it is an injustice that cannot be tolerated.

Even the ears of the Hitler youth will hear that—and so will their parents, who have been forced to give up their children to state control, who have watched them march off with a hand raised to heil Hitler, to their deaths in Russia or in other lands which Hitler has futilely marked for conquest.

Now, Senators, listen to Bishop Preysing on Hitler's most cherished ideal—the idea of race superiority, the idea that Germans are destined to be the rulers of the world. Bishop Preysing writes—

Since the least principles of rights are not of merely temporary duration and cannot be the quintessence of racial peculiarities, the rights and the application of such rights and the use thereof cannot be the privilege of a single nation. Every human being enjoys privileges of which no worldly power can deprive it. It is an honorable page in the history of mankind that the rights of aliens have been more and more developed and that the laws of nations define and establish these rights. All primeval rights enjoyed by mankind—namely, the right to live, to exist unharmed, to be free, to have preferences, to contract marriage—the existence of which does not depend upon the arbitrary dictum of governments, may not be taken from anyone who is not of our blood or who does not speak our language.

Mr. President, those are strong words directed against that pet idea of nazi-ism. The bishop continues:

A certain German philosopher who has been the guiding spirit of a great many people has exerted a harmful influence over the German Nation by proclaiming that as far as specially endowed individuals and highly gifted nations are concerned, there can be no good or evil, no right or wrong, and that they are dispensed from respecting any questions of right or morality and that it is one of their privileges to deprive weaker nations or peoples on a lower cultural level than themselves or races which really or seemingly do not enjoy as many advantages of every right.

That is the Nazi philosophy as it is stated in the bishop's pastoral letter. The bishop continues:

And it is intimately connected with this terrible creed that this philosopher, unlike any other, denies God's existence and incidentally that of universally acknowledged rights.

My dear diocesans—

Continues the bishop—

I must seriously warn you against such theories.

The bishop is warning the people against Hitler's pet theories—

Especially in wartime, when might confronts might and when power seems to be supreme, we are in danger of despising justice. As yet only by acknowledging and respecting right can we hope for a better future for everyone and a just peace for all. Let us examine ourselves and see how far the idea of an eternal, immutable right lives in us and how strongly we are convinced that certain primeval rights may not be denied any man, regardless of his origin. We must be perfectly clear that the absence of such rights or even a violation of the rights of our fellow man is an injustice toward the alien nation as well as against our own nation. "It is the curse of an evil deed that it must continue to conceive more evil" was never more true than it is in this case.

My dear diocesans, metanoeite! Change your mode of thinking. This is my appeal to you. No single erroneous theory which the world adopts ever fails to influence even the faithful children of the church and those who would be true disciples of Christ. Let us cling to the faith that everyone is entitled to his rights, and let us also cling to the faith that these rights protect everyone who is innocent of personal wrongdoing. And let us furthermore cling to the faith that these rights are universal and applicable to us all. We do not want to claim for ourselves things to which we are not entitled; neither do we wish to refuse anything to which others may be entitled. We wish to cultivate the spirit of justice and fairness. Let us always remember that by respecting alien rights we acknowledge and profess God's sovereign rule.

Our Almighty God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost be with you. Amen.

So proclaimed in Berlin on December 12, 1942.

(Signed) Conrad Bishop, of Berlin.

Responsible for the publication and production: Dr. Conrad Graf von Preysing, Berlin, W 8.

That, Members of the Senate, is the Christmas pastoral letter of the bishop of Berlin, Conrad Count von Preysing, a brave man. May we, who live in a land of freedom, be no less brave in preserving it.

Mr. President, this great churchman takes his place among the heroic churchmen who are fighting the battle for religious freedom in our age. He stands proudly along with the heroic men who have been able and willing and unafraid to strike out for religion, and for justice, even in Nazi Germany.

Mr. President, when the bishop spoke to his people, the mature people of Germany heard him, the religious population of Germany listened to him. They have no sympathy for this new paganism, this revolting despotism which has been forced upon them by these idolatrous followers of Hitler. The bishop struck a popular chord in their hearts. They thirst for the freedom of their fathers.

Mr. President, I believe that these utterances will continue to come out of Nazi Germany. I believe they will increase, both in number and in effectiveness, until the day comes when the people will break off the shackles which hold them to this false and pagan philosophy, when they will assume again that dignity and that democracy for which they were noted in the past.

JOINT COMMITTEES ON BUDGETARY CONTROL AND SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, earlier today I submitted two Senate concurrent resolutions which I should like to discuss very briefly at this point.

On Tuesday of last week, January 12, as a newly appointed member of the Senate Rules Committee, I wrote to the distinguished chairman of that committee, the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] with respect to a modernization of congressional machinery so that we can more adequately meet the challenges of the present.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my letter to the Senator from Virginia be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYDEN in the chair). Without objection, the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, my proposals were for an adequately staffed single Joint Budget Committee, a Joint Committee on Social Security, and a Committee on Aviation.

The measure relating to the Committee on Aviation was introduced on January 7, 1943, and I propose to speak on this subject at a later date.

The measures relating to the single Joint Budget Committee and the Joint Social Security Committee were introduced today pursuant to the outline which I submitted to the chairman of the Senate Rules Committee on Tuesday, January 12, 1943.

On Monday of this week, January 18, I listened with extreme interest to the able presentation made by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] and by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with reference to a proposal for a joint committee on budgetary control which was submitted by the minority members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, those Senators very effectively outlined the reasons behind the creation of a joint committee on budgetary control. The resolution they submitted provides for a joint membership drawn from the committees on appropriations of the respective Houses.

My only reason for today presenting my proposal for a Joint Budget Committee, as outlined in my letter of January 12 to the Chairman of the Rules Committee, is because I feel that the proposal which was made on Monday of this week is not adequate because it provides only for an integration between the Appropriations Committees of both Houses. However, I agree wholeheartedly that such an integration is not only desirable, but absolutely vital in these days of staggering and astronomical budgets.

There is no excuse and no reason for the lack of integration between the Appropriations Committees of both Houses at the present time. That is in no sense a criticism, but is merely an observation of a glaring inadequacy.

I submit, Mr. President, that the integration of the two Appropriations Committees is, however, not enough to remedy the situation.

It is almost inconceivable that there should be no correlation and no integration between revenue-raising and the spending committees of Congress. There is not a business in the land which could function on that kind of a basis and survive; and in normal times, at least, it is doubtful whether any government could long survive on that kind of a basis.

I realize, Mr. President, that in wartime some of the reasons for correlating the revenue-raising committees with the spending committees have vanished. Wartime calls for big-scale spending, whether we can raise the money or not.

Nevertheless, that does not lessen the necessity for an intelligent, workable approach, not only for wartime, but for the post-war period.

In other words, there is still a necessity for integrating the work of the Finance Committee and the Ways and Means Committee with the Appropriations Committee. That is just plain ordinary common sense, and it is good business, which government needs.

Therefore, I feel that such proposals as have been discussed relating to joint budget committees are essentially inadequate if they do not attempt to correlate along with the Appropriations Committees of both Houses, representatives from the Senate Finance Committee and the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives.

I believe that such a joint committee should make a full and complete study and analysis of the Budget of the United States and should make such other studies and investigations concerning governmental revenues and expenditures as it may deem necessary with a view to assisting the Congress in formulating a comprehensive fiscal program.

I believe that the joint committee should report from time to time to committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives from which the membership of the joint committee was appointed. I believe that this joint committee at its discretion should submit its recommendations and studies to the Senate or to the House itself.

I believe that this joint committee should be authorized to subpena witnesses, to print reports, and to have an adequate technical staff.

Mr. President, if this war has demonstrated one thing it is the need for a unified governmental control. We tried all sorts of makeshift expediencies in our production front earlier in the war, but we found that we could not get production out of that kind of governmental crazy quilt.

We also found out, as this war progressed, that it was not exclusively a military war; it was also an economic war.

That brings me to the very obvious conclusion that we need some kind of an economic high command—not merely an economic high command in the executive or administrative branch of Government. This is not an executive or administrative war—it is a people's war and that is why the people's representatives should set up a coordinated, integrated group to deal with the Budget and our revenue-raising activities, so that they can correlate our spending and our revenue raising in some kind of a comprehensive over-all fiscal program which would be good economic warfare during the war and good business after the war.

Earlier in this war we saw the muddle on the production front which resulted from overlapping authority, duplicated work, and a general lack of centralization. In order to get adequate production we needed a unified control, and we are still working toward that objective.

I submit, Mr. President, that in order to get an intelligent fiscal program which will enable us to win this war and to win this peace, it will be necessary for us to have some kind of an integrated fiscal planning.

I submit, Mr. President, that it must not be merely an economic high command centered in the executive branch. It must have its roots deep in the legitimate constitutional authority of the Congress; and that, Mr. President, is the reason why any joint committee on the Budget should embrace, not only representation from the appropriations committees, but also representation from the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee.

Among the functions of the Bureau of the Budget we find that it is supposed "to aid the President to bring about more efficient and economical conduct of Government service as well as to assist the President in the preparation of the Budget and the formulation of the fiscal program of the Government."

Those words set forth commendable objectives. Does anyone think that if the Bureau of the Budget had been completely adequate to realize these objectives pursuant to the language I have quoted, we should have had all this inefficient and uneconomical conduct of Government service?

We are talking now about a Budget of $109,000,000,000 for a 12-month period. Judging from the experience of the past, we know that billions of dollars can be saved out of that Budget. The single item of $97,000,000,000 for war requires that we of the legislative branch of government set up more adequate machinery to insure efficiency and economy. That is why I am suggesting this budget committee.

Let me re-emphasize, Mr. President, that my suggestion is in no sense to be considered as a reflection on the work of the Appropriations Committee of either House. The fact of the matter is that these committees, as the junior Senator from Massachusetts and the senior Senator from North Dakota pointed out last Monday, are today confronted with a problem for which their committee set-up is no longer adequate. The present Appropriations Committees can function ever so diligently, but with their present machinery can still be inadequate to the tremendous task which confronts them.

We can sit here and can talk day after day and can spend our time in discussing matters which probably occupy the public interest. However, no one seems to be interested in trying to ascertain a way or a means by which to reduce the tremendous cost of this war. Today we heard a discussion by a distinguished Member of the Senate implying that we on the home front are not meeting the challenges as are the men on the battle front; and to me that is absolutely a true statement. Men are loafing on the job in the production lines. I desire to ask the question whether we in the Congress of the United States are loafing on the job, whether we have allowed ourselves to fall into a rut and follow along the same line and dissipate billions. When we make a suggestion, is it acted upon? Well, we shall see.

The Appropriations Committee of the Senate probably does not get more than 3 or 4 months to deal with total appropriations. This year we shall deal with appropriations of $109,000,000,000. The House Committee is, of course, working at the present time on appropriation measures, but these measures will not reach the Senate before March or April. That requires an almost incredible speed of the Senate committee, and it sets up a very difficult task for them. It means also that the Senate Committee spends most of its time considering new requests or requests which have already been denied by the House, and it means in effect that frequently the Senate committee cannot go back to a consideration of some of the matters already disposed of by the House.

It is obvious that concurrent action by the Appropriations Committee would be desirable, particularly if such a concurrent committee functioned in cooperation with representatives from the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committee with an independent staff of experts who would be able to effect many worth-while economies in government.

Mr. President, I am very much concerned about the Budget of $109,000,000,000. As I have stated on previous occasions, the total cost of the last World War to the United States has been estimated to be $42,000,000,000. Now, in 1 year—between July of 1943 and July of 1944—the Executive requests us to spend $109,000,000,000.

Why am I concerned? Well, Mr. President, let me ask the question, How long can this Government go on spending as it has and as it will spend if it spends at the rate of $109,000,000,000 a year? With less and less civilian goods being manufactured, with more and more small businesses going out of existence, with criminal wastage of the Nation's resources, and in many places men idling on their jobs, as was intimated today by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], is there not a tremendous need for seeing that efficiency and economy are brought into the picture?

Has not the time arrived for the leaders in government to call a spade a spade? Every one of our boys in uniform in Africa, in the islands of the south seas, on the seven seas, in the air, and in the submarines is asking that we stop fiddling while the world burns. The letter which was read to the Senate today is typical of letters which every Senator has received from folks overseas. They are asking us to get down to brass tacks. Think of it, Mr. President. Hundreds of those boys are giving their lives every day—by the hundreds, and perhaps before long by the thousands—and we at home—those of us who are supposed to preserve this America for those who come back—are voting billions, working short hours, and living life as usual, and think we have done our part.

It should be the function of Congress to see that every dollar spent results in a dollar in value in return. If we do not do so, what will happen if Japan and Hitler succeed in dragging this war out for 3 or 4 years? I ask that question most seriously. What kind of a world will our boys come back to, if they do come back? Yes, Mr. President, I think such a budget committee had better be brought into existence quickly so it can begin its job.

I believe it is imperative that Congress create such machinery as will enable it to consider the recommendations of the Executive with the assistance of an adequate expert staff, so that Congress will not be compelled to rely so largely upon Executive recommendations or recommendations from the Bureau of the Budget.

At this point, Mr. President, I ask that the resolution on this subject which I submitted today be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a Joint Committee on the Budget (hereinafter referred to as the "joint committee") to be composed of —— members of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and —— members of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and —— members of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and —— members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the Hoouse of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same mananer as the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a full and complete study and analysis of the Budget of the United States, and to make such other studies and investigations concerning governmental revenues and expenditures as it may deem necessary, with a view to assisting the Congress in formulating a comprehensive fiscal program. The joint committee shall report, from time to time, to the committees of the Senate and House of Representatives from which the membership of the joint committee was appointed, and, in its discretion, to the Senate or House of Representatives, or both, the results of its studies and investigations, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 3. The joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

SEC. 4. (a) The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation prescribed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The joint committee is authorized to request the use of the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government.

(b) The expenses of the joint committee, which shall not exceed $——, shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives, one-half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I come now to a discussion of the second concurrent resolution which I presented today. The resolution relates to social security.

In this period of world upheaval we know that at the conclusion of this war we shall face the greatest mass security problems the world has ever known. We have already had statements from the Executive indicating that revisions in our present social-security set-up are inevitable. Members of this body are familiar with the procedure by which the executive branch has formulated our social-security policy. I submit, Mr. President, that here again the initiative for a comprehensive, intelligent, long-range social-security program must originate with the representatives of the people.

I submit, Mr. President, that one of the ways in which this body can recapture public esteem and respect is to initiate such a program. There is only one way to initiate it, and that is, not by waiting for Executive initiative, not by waiting for the superplan of some alabaster-browed intellectual in any bureau, not by considering social-security plans piecemeal in a number of different committees, but by considering one overall plan by a joint committee on social-security which would embrace members from both the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House. To provide for such a joint committee is just common horse sense, also.

The committee should make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the need for and the advisability of any modification and enlargement of the present social-security program. The joint committee should consider any proposals submitted to the Congress in connection therewith, and should report from time to time to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, or in its discretion to either the Senate or the House itself, as to the results of its investigations and as to its recommendations.

Mr. President, I believe consideration of these measures is imperative, not merely in the interest of placing the legislative emphasis back where it belongs—and we all know that it belongs back here in the Congress—not merely in the interest of modernizing our mechanical set-up so that we shall be able to meet the challenges of the present, but, Mr. President, in the interest of a more effective prosecution of the war and in the interest of a more effective and a lasting peace in the period which will follow.

Mr. President, I ask that the second of the concurrent resolutions which I submitted be printed at this point.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a Joint Committee on Social Security (hereinafter referred to as the "joint committee") to be composed of —— members of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and —— members of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to the need for and advisability of modification or enlargement of the present social security program, and to consider any proposals submitted to the Congress in connection therewith. The joint committee shall report, from time to time, to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, or, in its discretion to the Senate or the House of Representatives, or both, the results of its studies and investigations together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 3. The joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places and times during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words.

SEC. 4. (a) The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation prescribed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The joint committee is authorized to request the use of the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government.

(b) The expenses of the joint committee, which shall not exceed $——, shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives, one-half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

EXHIBIT A

JANUARY 12, 1943.

Hon. HARRY F. BYRD,
Chairman, Committee on Rules,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BYRD: As a newly appointed member of the Senate Rules Committee, I am writing you to say that at the outset I am gratified to be associated in this new assignment with such an outstanding legislator as yourself and with a committee of such recognized caliber as the Rules Committee.

Perhaps, as a newly appointed member of the committee, it might serve some constructive purpose for me to outline what I regard as a great challenge confronting this committee.

Some weeks ago you wrote an article which was widely circulated throughout the United States in which you discussed, with your customary ability, the pressure groups which affected the legislative branch.

This was an able article and it did a comprehensive job of reviewing the desirability of eliminating selfish and sandbag pressure on the legislative branch by any segment of our economy.

I can wholeheartedly concur, Senator, in your implied conclusion that the only yardstick by which any legislation can be measured is its effect on the general public welfare which, of course, at the present time means its general effect on winning the war and the peace.

I felt, however, frankly, Senator, that your article had one serious omission. That omission was a neglect to comment on the pressure which is exerted on Congress by the executive branch.

Please understand that the purpose of this letter is not to indict the executive branch for the influence which it has exerted on Congress, although I am not certain that this influence has always been a healthy influence. Nevertheless, if there is an indictment for the gradual erosion of legislative powers and legislative initiative, the indictment rests with the Congress for its failure to modernize its structure so that it could be competent to handle present-day problems of a magnitude never before encountered.

In other words, in recent years there has been an unfortunate tendency in Congress to rely more and more on the expert counsel, research, and recommendations of the executive branch, and as a consequence, the stature of Congress has perhaps dwindled in public estimation.

In restoring Congress to its legitimate stature in the public mind, this committee, Senator, can perform a vital and badly needed service and can make an outstanding contribution.

A few days ago we were given a $109,000,000,000 Budget which represents more than one-half of all the expenditures of the Nation from 1789 to the outbreak of the war.

Senator, our machinery for considering such a tremendous Budget is obviously inadequate. Any business whose budget had increased on such a fabulous scale would long since have changed the mechanics of its budget consideration to more nearly approximate the magnitude of the present-day job.

At the outset then, it is apparent that Congress today needs an adequately staffed single joint budget committee, empowered to call before it experts not only from within Government but from within the ranks of industry and business throughout the country. The budget problem is one which should be considered at one table around which are seated representatives from both Houses of Congress acting in concert on the best advice obtainable.

Moreover, there is at the present time no correlation between the spending and revenue-raising committees. That just doesn't make sense and it's high time that a joint budget committee of both Houses was set up to embrace the Appropriations Committees and also representatives from the Finance and Ways and Means Committees—all acting in unison on one logical coordinated plan.

I. Accordingly, I propose to introduce a measure calling for the creation of an adequate single joint budget committee of both Houses, which I believe can supply competent machinery to enable Congress to regain its legitimate stature in the consideration of this momentous budget and I believe, incidentally, Senator, that such a move will do a great deal to restore the confidence of the people in their representatives and their ability to adequately handle the budget problem.

We already have a Joint Committee on Internal Revenue, so there is perhaps no necessity for further machinery along this line, but I believe very fervently that we must place an increased emphasis on this joint committee and its function in the consideration of a revenue problem unprecedented in the history of our Nation.

II. We have already been advised that far-reaching changes in social-security legislation will be considered at this session of Congress. Here again there is a definite need for a joint social-security committee of both Houses to consider this problem which will assume incredible proportions at the close of this war, and accordingly I propose to introduce a measure providing for the creation of such a joint committee.

III. There is one other committee which perhaps need not be a joint committee but which certainly must be created under the sponsorship of the Rules Committee in the very near future. I refer, of course, to the committee on military aviation which I sought to have created during the last session of Congress and for which I shall continue to fight.

If there is one single fact which has emerged crystal clear from the war thus far, it is the emphasis which is now placed on aviation and we now know that if we are to win this war we must dominate the air.

Now the point I make, Senator, is a simple one. I don't know how any Member of Congress can go back to face his constituents and tell them that their lives, the lives of their children, who are fighting in the armed forces, their securities, a large share of their income, and all of their hopes for the future which are embodied in the aviation problem, haven't even been considered by a single separate standing committee of Congress.

We have already made provisions for the appropriation of some thirty-four billions of dollars for aviation, Senator, and yet there isn't a single separate Senate committee on aviation and the new Budget, of course, will bring this total up to an even more astronomical figure. The most charitable conclusion that we can make is that it isn't good business to spend that large a proportion of the American people's funds without subjecting it to the scrutiny of a separate committee of Congress. But it is far worse than bad business. It means that Congress is evading a responsibility which it owes to the people of this country to call in the Nation's outstanding experts and to consult with them on problems of aviation to the end that Congress may use its powers to further the development of the most effective fighting air force in the world. Congress has a responsibility in connection with aviation which it cannot dodge in war or in peace.

I might point out that such a committee on aviation could integrate its work with that of the Budget Committee so that we would have a more intelligent, well-rounded approach to our broad, general problems.

IV In general, Senator, what I am proposing is a modernization of congressional machinery, not a jerry-built modernization, but an intelligent program designed to insure that Congress can meet the challenges of these days and meet its responsibilities to the people to the end that it may again assume the kind of legislative leadership and legislative stature which warrants public confidence, about which you wrote so ably. This is not merely my idea. Others share these beliefs and I am merely endeavoring to suggest a workable approach to the problem.

In general, Senator, I should like to add that I feel that now as never before there is a great need for an integration of the committees of both Houses. I believe it is an obligation of the Rules Committee to formulate the mechanics by which committees of both Houses may more frequently be integrated with a view to a more concerted and united action and with a view to efficiency and with a view to eliminate unwarranted duplication not only in consideration, but in expensive and time-consuming hearings.

Senator, I respectfully ask that the Rules Committee give the earliest possible consideration to these matters.

Yours for victory,

ALEXANDER WILEY.

EQUAL RIGHTS FOR MEN AND WOMEN—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I am anxious to make a brief statement endorsing the so-called equal rights amendment, proposed this morning in a joint resolution submitted by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE].

Mr. President, it is fitting that we Members of Congress recognize the splendid example of patriotism, leadership, and service being set by our American women in this present great struggle to preserve our democratic principles of liberty, freedom, equality, and justice for all—principles that have been handed down to us by the sweat and blood of our forefathers—so that they may enjoy the inalienable right of equal rights with men.

Twenty years have passed since the equal-rights amendment was first introduced in the House of Representatives by the Honorable Daniel R. Anthony, nephew of that great emancipator of women, Susan B. Anthony. Many hearings have been held since, and I believe I am correct in stating that the last one was in February 1938. The causes of the defeat of the resolution at that time were apprehension and fear that the amendment would remove from the statute books in many of the States protective legislation for women in industry that had been passed after many years of strenuous effort.

The responsibilities placed upon women today make it imperative, however, that we take cognizance of their rightful place in our scheme of life. Whatever may have sufficed for the past, today both men and women have equally qualified to work cooperatively, and their joint earnings are needed more and more to lessen the strain of the economic burden imposed by our present social situation. There should be equal opportunity for obtaining knowledge, equality of opportunity for work and service, and equality of remuneration for service rendered. I know that in many of the States of the Union legislation has been placed upon the statute books which makes this possible.

In other States, however our legislators have not as yet adopted this progressive viewpoint.

Those who have been and are now working for the economic as well as social improvement of women should realize that the whole industrial scene has changed rapidly in the past few years. Today, more and more women are entering all fields of useful work, and are thus making a most valuable and necessary contribution to our manpower problem, which is so acute in this emergency.

Therefore, a new approach is justified by rapidly changing social conditions, but the demands today should be as always for decent working conditions and adequate remuneration applying to industry in general and not for one sex alone. As far as I can see and understand the context of this amendment, there is no conflict between the amendment which prescribes equal rights to all and a demand for better conditions in industry for both men and women. If for one moment I thought that this amendment would in any way destroy the advanced social and economic legislation that has been adopted in many States of our Union for the protection of our women, I would most vigorously oppose its passage. But, as I have said, I do not believe that if this amendment becomes law it will in any way affect such legislation.

The great contribution of our women today—especially in our defense plants and in our armed forces in these hours of baptism by fire—necessitates our giving to the women of this country truly equal opportunities. It will not only be a source of great satisfaction at a job well done, but it will serve as a beacon light of justice to all women—in all parts of the world.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, 20 years ago a distinguished Kansan, Hon. Charles Curtis, then representing his State in the Senate and destined to be Vice President of the United States, introduced the equal rights amendment, which today was offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] and others. When Senator Curtis introduced his joint resolution in 1923 he summed up the argument in these words:

> The introduction in Congress of the equal rights amendment to the Constitution of the United States marks another milestone on the road to human equality. When that amendment becomes an integral part of the fundamental law of the land, the consummation of the demands made by the Seneca Falls Conference of 1848 will have been reached, so far as law can effect this end and so far as the United States is concerned * * *. The suffrage amendment was first introduced in Congress in 1878 and was finally adopted in 1920. Forty-two years were spent by women in working to induce Congress to establish the principle that there should be no discrimination against women in the suffrage. Had the Congress of 1878 passed the amendment when it was first proposed 42 years of effort on the part of American women would have been saved. The time, the labor, the money, which women gave to winning the vote, could have gone into other fields where time, labor, and money were sorely needed. Let not the same delay occur with the equal rights amendment.

Mr. President, let us heed the warning of the late Vice President Curtis. Forty-two years were spent by women in securing for themselves what should be the birthright of every American citizen, the vote. Twenty years have been spent by American women in attempting to secure the corollary to that suffrage amendment, the equal rights amendment, which will give women an equal legal status with men.

Let us without delay state clearly in the Constitution of our land that men and women stand on an equal footing before the law, with justice to each and favors to none.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] today proposed the so-called equal-rights amendment to the Constitution, and I wish to take a very brief moment of the Senate's time to make some remarks on that subject matter.

The proposed equal-rights amendment represents one more step which we must take in establishing justice for all American citizens. Its great significance lies in the fact that it touches intimately the life of every American woman, and indeed of every American man.

Beginning in 1848, with the convention on women's rights called at Seneca Falls, N. Y., by Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Mott, women became conscious of the gross inequalities of the law which affected them in every field. Their property rights, their political rights, the right to work and to enjoy the fruits of their labors; the right to be joint guardians of their children, and to contract were all denied them in 1848. In no respect did a woman enjoy the same rights enjoyed by men in 1848.

Realizing that the vote was an instrument by which other discriminations could be righted, women first bent their efforts toward securing an amendment to the Constitution which would give them the suffrage. In 1920, by the nineteenth amendment, they gained the right to vote—but none other.

Meanwhile, various States have corrected some of the most flagrant abuses. Property rights were conceded slowly, but still imperfectly. Joint guardianship rights were allowed in some States. The right to contract, to sue and be sued, was also granted in some States, although lawyers today still refer to the "danger of a married woman's papers." But still, there is today no State in the Union where the law applies equally to men and women. Wherever the common law, unmodified by statute, exists, there injustice to women exists.

The equal-rights amendment would end this injustice for the whole country. I am happy to be a cosponsor with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] in the proposal of this amendment.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, earlier today the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] introduced a measure providing for a constitutional amendment. I am one of the Senators who joined with him in introducing that measure. The amendment is commonly referred to as the equal rights amendment. In this connection I wish to say that no citizen of the United States has any just grounds for denying equal justice before the law to the women of this country. Democracy, to be real, can no longer refuse equal legal rights to any citizen.

All my life I have opposed special privilege and therefore gladly support this amendment, which will do away with special legal privileges for men in the various States and thus grant all citizens—men and women alike—equal legal rights throughout the country.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am happy to be one of those who have been contributing to the advance of the so-called equal rights cause.

It is hardly my purpose to ignore the representation which comes in opposition to the equal rights amendment. I can quite understand and appreciate the sound ground upon which some of this opposition is based, and I expect to witness compromises in legislative consideration which will greatly forward the course of equality.

Mr. President, I feel strongly that equality of rights before the law should not be denied the women of our country. Thousands of discriminations are practiced against women, and it is our task as legislators to eliminate those discriminations.

Very often so-called protective legislation proves to be an obstacle to women. Hours of employment of women are often discriminatory and stand as a preventive against equal pay for equal service. More and more are women coming into active participation in our economy, taking the places of men in essential fields of operation. A greater equality of rights ought to prevail. I hope Congress will afford the proposed amendment larger discussion and opportunity for consideration than it has heretofore had.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I have noticed that a number of short speeches have been made on the resolution proposing a constitutional amendment designated as the equal-rights amendment. The term "equal rights" is a very enticing one, but I wonder if those who have made speeches in favor of the amendment have gone to the trouble to discover what the adoption of such an amendment would mean to the constitutions and the laws of their States.

When the Constitution of the United States was formed, the whole field of domestic relations was reserved to the States. That field includes domestic relations and personal rights. That field was clearly reserved to the States. If this amendment is ratified it is quite certain that married women and widows may lose many more rights than they will gain. Insofar as the constitution and statutes of my own State on that subject are concerned—and I am sure this applies to the constitutions and statutes of other States—I am sure the adoption of such an indefinite provision as the one now proposed would result in disrupting many State statutes developed over the past two centuries for the protection of women.

For example, in the constitution of my State we have a provision which may have been inserted in it as the result of the treaty made with Spain when the United States bought Florida from Spain. Florida's constitution provides—

> That all property, real and personal, owned by a wife before her marriage, or lawfully acquired afterward by gift, devise, bequest, descent, or purchase, shall be her separate property.

Of course, Senators know that when a man marries, all that he has when he marries and all he thereafter acquires by gift, devise, or otherwise belongs to both husband and wife.

I realize that the term "equal rights" is very catchy and a pleasing slogan, but I think we had better look into the subject very carefully, because I fear the adoption of the amendment would result in unending litigation in the various States. Divorce laws, for example, might be thrown out of kilter. I was on the bench a number of years, and handled many hundreds of divorce cases, many involving the question of payment of alimony. Under this amendment a man might rightfully claim alimony from his wife. The whole question is so involved that we had better look carefully into it before we take action.

Mr. President, I feel that before submitting this proposal to the States for ratification we should first be sure we understand what its far-reaching effects might be. I shall undertake to prepare a statement on the subject and I hope it will be of some service to us in arriving at a solution of the question.

That is all I have to say about the matter at present.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I regret very much that the very few remarks I shall make should appear so proximate to contrary sentiments expressed by my distinguished colleague, for whom I have not only the greatest affection and deepest friendship, but to whose opinion I always very much defer. However, I cannot escape the conclusion that those of us who have advocated by our signatures the equal-rights amendment, which is now upon the desk and properly referred, as well as those who are favorably inclined toward it, advocate an ideal too long delayed, the complete emancipation of women.

The whole question of the evolution of human rights is a matter of interesting historical trend. There was a time when men were not regarded as entitled to many privileges or prerogatives, and protected by few immunities, if they happened to be men of poverty or without estate. I have read that at the time of the French Revolution in France it was permissible for one of the grand gentlemen of France, a member of the nobility, on a cold morning's hunt to have the privilege of warming his feet in the bowels of not to exceed two peasants.

We all know what great progress was made in the protection of human rights when the Magna Carta was promulgated.

There was a long time in this country when able, earnest, and honest men and women opposed the extension of the suffrage to women because they really thought that association with politics would contaminate women and to subject women to such taint was unworthy of men.

I remember very distinctly a clever gentleman who was later in the Senate, making a remark in my high school, when I was a high school student, when he spoke against woman's suffrage, to the effect that John was a suffragist and Mary was a suffragette, and they were both suffering it. Those were just a few of the sentiments of ridicule and scorn which were hurled at those who advocated what we all now take as a matter of fact and right, and the right of women to vote.

I feel, therefore, that the trend toward women enjoying equal rights has progressed until today they are entitled to enjoy all rights equally with all human beings, and that sex is not a sufficient line of demarcation for different rights. There may be instances where there would be a difference in duties, but that will depend upon the ability of the person or persons affected to perform the obligation required, not to their rights equally to share and to enjoy the benefits which are derived from citizenship and equality due to all.

When the Declaration of Independence was written, and those moving words that "all men are created equal" were incorporated therein, to lift the hopes and the hearts of the oppressed everywhere in the world, I do not believe that Thomas Jefferson was thinking only of mankind which happened to be masculine in sex. I think he spoke about human beings, and therefore that it is in accordance with the principles of the Declaration of Independence to say that women are born equal with men in the rights of citizenship and civil prerogatives.

I hope, therefore, that this may be the last hurdle which it will be necessary to surmount; that the race to bring equality, complete freedom, independence, and liberty for women shall at long last be won.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, does the distinguished minority leader have anything further to bring before the Senate?

Mr. McNARY. I have nothing further to present.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 25, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 21, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Spirit of the living God, when our faith wavers and drifts, when our watch ceases and we falter, in every emergency we need Thy source of sympathy and deliverance. Thou who dost minister help and grace according to Thy fullness, lift us into the true and beautiful spirit of life with our Master the chief among ten thousand and altogether lovely. Thus without fear we shall come into the circuit of Thy merciful being, enriched by the conscious power which Thou dost bestow.

We pray Thee Father, not to allow our light to grow dim in the midst of common toil, reminding us that real joy comes not from ease, riches, or from the praise of men, but being and doing the things which are worth while in Thy sight; not the sustenance of dismal restraint, but from an exalted inspiration. O Thou who dost hang destiny upon the hinges of the human will, we beseech Thee that our achievements may be wrought by noble purposes and served by unselfish devotion. Remove all despondency, clothe us with patience, thoughtful persistence, and make our lives a blending of confidence and eager decision. For the sake of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HON. MARION T. BENNETT, REPRESENTATIVE-ELECT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

JANUARY 21, 1943.

The honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: The certificate of election in due form of law of Hon. MARION T. BENNETT as a Representative-elect to the Seventy-eighth Congress, from the Sixth Congressional District of Missouri, to fill the vacancy in that district, is on file in this office.

Very truly yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

NATIONAL COMMISSION FOR POST-WAR RECONSTRUCTION

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means be discharged from further consideration of House Joint Resolution 36, to establish the National Commission for Post-War Reconstruction, and that the same be re-referred to the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COMPOSITION OF STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 64), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That during the Seventy-eighth Congress the Committee on Appropriations shall be composed of 43 members.

The Committee on the Judiciary shall be composed of 27 members.

The Committee on Banking and Currency shall be composed of 26 members.

The Committee on Military Affairs shall be composed of 27 members.

The Committee on Naval Affairs shall be composed of 27 members.

The Committee on Rules shall be composed of 14 members.

The resolution was agreed to.

AUTHORIZING COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS AND COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS TO STUDY THE PROGRESS OF THE WAR EFFORT

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 30, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs, respectively, each acting as a whole or by subcommittee, are authorized and directed to conduct thorough studies and investigations of the progress of the war effort insofar as it relates to matters coming within the jurisdiction of such committees, respectively, with a view to determining whether such effort is being carried forward efficiently, expeditiously, and economically.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs shall report to the House during the present Congress the results of their studies and investigations, together with such recommendations for legislation as they deem desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution, the respective committees, or any subcommittees thereof, are authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places whether or not the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise, and to take testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairmen of the respective committees and shall be served by any person designated by such chairmen. The chairman of each committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

SEC. 2. The heads of the various executive departments and agencies are hereby requested to detail to such committees such number of legal and expert assistants and investigators as such committees may from time to time deem necessary, or, in case such detail is not authorized by law, to grant leave of absence without pay to personnel who may request such leave to serve with such committees, without prejudice to any rights or privileges to which such personnel would be entitled if such leave had not been granted.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes of the time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and I reserve 30 minutes for myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, this resolution proposes a continuance of the power vested in the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs during the last session of the Congress, to investigate the expenditure of war funds by the Army and the Navy.

The Rules Committee had before it a report from those committees, which is, of course, available to the whole House, somewhat detailing their activities during the last session of Congress. It appeared from those reports that the respective committees claimed to have saved the Government something like $2,000,000,000 by their investigations of the manner in which these great war contracts had been let and executed.

The Rules Committee felt that that was an enormous amount of money to have been saved by the activities of those committees in so short a time, and that perhaps thereby the War and Navy Departments may have been put in a little disadvantageous light. With an appropriation of something like $100,000,000,000 and a large tax bill in the offing, and with those committees requesting a continuation of their power to investigate, we felt that the War Department and the Navy Department should have the opportunity of appearing and having something to say about the saving of these large amounts of money.

So the Rules Committee had before it the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and the Assistant Secretary of War upon this subject.

I shall not dwell upon what they had to say, further than to say that after hearings extending over two mornings, the Rules Committee was well satisfied that those two committees of the House have done a splendid piece of work, and that it should be continued. We are also pretty well satisfied that, all things taken into consideration, those two great departments of government are expending the taxpayers' money in a manner in which the taxpayers of the country can afford to have a great deal of confidence.

I am not going to take the time to dwell further upon this subject, which will be referred to by the able chairmen of these committees, no doubt.

I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is an agreeable duty and a very pleasant one, to appear before the House and advocate the continuation of these two committees to investigate the war progress and the conduct of the war. I do not believe there has ever been a time in the House of Representatives when any such claim has been made by a committee of the House as has been made by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs that each one of them had saved by their efforts, by their diligence, and by their labors, $1,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money.

The people of America are burdened with taxes. They are bewildered and apprehensive over paying their income taxes on March 15 for 1942, and are appalled at the request of the President for $16,000,000,000 of new taxes. Any large savings in Government expenditures should be welcome news to the American taxpayers who are staggering under the existing taxes. If a reason for the existence of the Congress of the United States were necessary it seems to me that fact alone, that the House Military Affairs Committee and the House Naval Affairs Committee have in a short time saved $2,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money should be sufficient. The Military Affairs Committee claims they have saved the taxpayers a billion and a quarter. Some of us in Congress get confused at times between a million and a billion; I am, however, referring to a billion dollars, as much money as was expended by the entire Federal Government prior to the First World War. I think, therefore, this is an occasion to call the attention of Congress to the facts and give credit where credit is due, to all the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs and to all the members of the Committee on Military Affairs for carrying out the mandate of the Congress to investigate the War Department and the Navy Department, the progress and conduct of the war, and particularly in exposing the huge profits made by the contractors in armaments of all kinds, and obtaining refunds.

I am in accord with the remarks made by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK] and I join with him in believing that it is not advisable at this time to undermine the confidence of the people in either the War Department or the Navy Department; nevertheless, the facts speak for themselves. The responsibility and the accountability in the first instance rests squarely with the War Department and the Navy Department. Why did not they save this money? It was not the responsibility of Congress; it was our duty to do whatever we could but we did not make those contracts; they were entered into by the Navy Department and by the War Department. It is all right for Members to present alibis and excuses and state that of course we recognize that the War Department and the Navy Department had to rush hastily into contracts to get them under way, that they did not know the costs at the beginning, but that does not excuse the War Department or the Navy Department for not undertaking this work for themselves and finding out that these contracts had been excessive and that there had been huge profiteering, or for not stopping it themselves instead of on the request of committees of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is there not some measure of excuse for the War Department and the Navy Department when we know, as we do, that the politicians in the administration forced those departments into contracts where the men slow down on the jobs and where excessive wages are paid and the costs are thrown back? For example, if there is a demand for higher wages some administrative department agrees with the demand that the wages be increased, and the Navy and the War Departments have nothing to do with it. If they want the goods they must pay the wages. It is the politicians in the administration who are to blame in the first place.

Mr. FISH. I would prefer to yield the gentleman time to speak for himself; I would rather confine my remarks to the question that is before the House, and that is the action of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Military Affairs in instigating the refund of several billion dollars from profiteering contractors.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, too little credit has been given to these committees, both in the House and outside of the House, in the press and to the public. I do not believe that at this very moment the public has the slightest idea that any committee of the Congress has saved as much as a billion dollars. It has been popular in the past, and particularly popular during the recent campaign, to attack the Congress of the United States for its sins of omission and its sins of commission; very seldom is the Congress given any credit whatsoever. I want the RECORD to show that $2,000,000,000 was saved by the initiative and the industrious efforts of these committees of the House of Representatives. I want to emphasize this statement because I desire to follow it by suggesting that we have only just begun this type of work, that we have only just started to carry out our investigating duties and that there should be investigations of a half dozen other departments of the Government, not only the War and the Navy Departments but also the United States Maritime Commission by the Committee on the Merchant Marine, which will be considered today under another rule; but why should we stop there? Why should we not reach out and investigate all the departments of the Government by appropriate committees? Why should we not investigate the lend-lease either by the Foreign Affairs Committee or the Appropriations Committee where billions of dollars are involved? Why should we not investigate the expenditures of the other departments and bureaus of the Government, including the W. P. A., the War Production Board, and the Office of Price Administration?

When Mr. Patterson, Under Secretary of War, was before the Rules Committee—and he is in charge of the procurement of the War Department, and it is his responsibility and accountability—a number of questions were asked. One of the questions asked of Mr. Patterson was: Supposing the Committee on Military Affairs had not initiated this investigation; supposing it had not considered the question of excessive and exorbitant profits on the Army munition and armament contracts, would there have been any refunds? Would these contracts have been renegotiated? And he replied that he did not know. I take it that the Congress alone—with the cooperation, of course, of the War Department and the Navy Department—initiated it and that no money would have been returned if it had not been because of the fact these two committees of the House made a careful investigation into the war contracts and exposed the huge profits.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. Just in order to keep the record straight and to be fair to the War Department, is it not fair to say that what the Under Secretary said was that these two committees of Congress were helpful?

He never did say at any time that this money would not have been recaptured. He insisted all the way through that these congressional committees were helpful in saving the money, and in answer to the gentleman's categorical question as to whether or not it would have been, of course he said he could not speculate upon that.

Mr. FISH. I asked him that specific question and he said he did not know whether the War Department would have recovered anything without the action of the House committee.

Mr. COLMER. Of course, I am not here to hold any brief for the War Department.

Mr. FISH. I have already said that the War Department had a great many difficulties to overcome. It had to go hurriedly into these contracts. It did not know what the cost would be. But after it had entered into the contracts, after it found out, and everybody else knew that some contractors were making exorbitant profits, it was the duty and the responsibility of the War Department to find out about these profits and to obtain a fair refund.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. COLMER. Here is what I am trying to get at. The War Department, or the agencies of the War Department were in the process of recapturing some of these enormous profits.

Mr. FISH. No, I do not think so.

Mr. COLMER. That was the testimony.

Mr. FISH. I do not think so; not until the House committees had exposed the deplorable situation. I want to be fair, just as much as the gentleman. The War Department certainly cooperated with the committee. Both the War Department and the Navy Department cooperated all the way through in the investigations by the two House committees, but they themselves had done nothing about it, and I submit that if the committees had not existed we would not have recovered a billion dollars on behalf of the War Department and the Navy Department.

Mr. COLMER. In response, may I say that was not the impression that I got from the testimony of the War Department officials, or from the various Members of Congress who constituted these committees? I think they all cooperated and they have done a good job.

Mr. FISH. They have all cooperated; yes.

Mr. COLE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. Perhaps the gentleman should advise the House of the amount of money spent by these two committees in their proceedings which resulted in these great savings.

Mr. FISH. I cannot speak for the Committee on Military Affairs, because I have not the figures, but I can say that the Committee on Naval Affairs only spent the sum of $64,000 to investigate 45,000 war contracts. The committee analyzed these contracts in detail and found out the facts in connection with each contract, whether there had been exorbitant profits or not and, as I stated, with the small sum of $64,000 the Committee on Naval Affairs saved in excess of $1,000,000,000. I do not know the amount spent by the Committee on Military Affairs, but I doubt if it was any more than that.

Mr. Speaker, I believe there was a certain amount of carelessness and negligence on the part of both the War Department and the Navy Department in not doing this work themselves. That is as far as I want to go in time of war. When the war ends I would like to see a thorough investigation that will go much further into these expenditures, into war contracts, and into the accountability for them; but for the present and to serve the purposes which we are now interested in of continuing these committees, all I want to say is that both the War Department and the Navy Department were careless and negligent in not recovering this money by their own action without prodding by the House committees.

Mr. ELSTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON of Ohio. Is it not a fact that in addition to the more than a billion dollars that have been returned because of renegotiation of contracts, a great many millions of dollars were turned back voluntarily by the contractors?

Mr. FISH. Yes. The money was refunded voluntarily by the contractors and that was forced by public opinion. It was all really forced by the action of these two committees. The House can take credit only because it created these committees, but the committees did the work, and because of this work the contractors, when they found out that the facts were known, refunded the money. It is still coming. I hope the House will appreciate the magnificent work of these two committees and when other committees come before the House, special or standing committees asking to be authorized to do investigatory work, that the House will give them the money that is required and the power to do it with.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. How is it that a year ago the Committee on Immigration sought to obtain the passage of a similar resolution in order to go into the question of alien enemies and other aliens in this country and the House by a 2 to 1 majority voted it down where it would not cost but a few dollars and probably save a lot of heartaches for this country and some people who are in this country? This House voted that down and I believe the gentleman from New York voted against it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If the gentleman remembers, we already had the Dies committee, which the gentleman fought, that was doing that other work.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield to answer the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The power sought by the committee had absolutely nothing to do with the Dies committee. It dealt with another question entirely.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Would it be an answer to say that perhaps the House had some doubt as to what service might be rendered by the committee of which the gentleman is chairman?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman has minority members on there for whom I have a high regard and men in the leadership of his party. There is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], one gentleman who would be responsible, as well as myself.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. MASON is also on the Dies committee.

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield further.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the House would like to know about some of the information given to the Rules Committee yesterday by Under Secretary Patterson.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr Speaker, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. I understand the gentleman just made a statement to the effect that the War Department in the investigation of the House Military Affairs Committee would not have corrected a lot of things they were doing and that they were derelict in the performance of their duty.

Mr. FISH. I said the War Department cooperated with the committee fully but it was the committee that initiated the investigation and if it had not done it the money would not have been collected or refunded from profiteering contractors.

Mr. MAY. That is the one question I wanted to ask the gentleman. They did agree to cooperate and did cooperate.

Mr. FISH. The information presented by the Under Secretary of War in regard to the policy of the War Department in purchasing hotels was this. He said that the War Department had acquired 500 hotels by lease and 14 by purchase, 12 of which were to be used as permanent military hospitals.

One of the hotels purchased was the Stevens Hotel in Chicago at a cost of $6,000,000. He made out a reasonably good case that by purchasing that hotel the War Department might save money. What we were interested in was finding out whether it is the policy of the War Department to purchase hotels throughout the country and go into the real estate business. We were assured that that is not the policy of the War Department.

One other question was raised that might interest the House. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] asked if the former Lieutenant Governor of New York, Charles Poletti, is holding any position under the War Department at the present time, what the position is, what the salary is, and what the duties are. The Under Secretary said that he is holding a position as civilian assistant to the Secretary of War, that he did not know what his duties and qualifications are, whether he has had any prior military service, or what his salary is.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that he did not know because Mr. Poletti was appointed as assistant to the Secretary of War himself, and naturally he did not know, but that he believed Mr. Poletti to be an able gentleman who would render valuable service?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Is it not true that the Secretary said that this former Governor was a specialist, and then, after the Secretary said that he did not know what his job was, a member of the committee suggested that they had not yet determined what his special qualities were so that they could assign him to duty?

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman is correct. The fact is that the Under Secretary did not appear to know much about the position.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, everyone who is familiar with the record of these two committees is convinced that their powers should be continued and that they should be given whatever money is necessary to carry on their activities.

Apparently there is some question as to whether or not the War and the Navy Departments have performed as efficiently as they might in saving us some money. The suggestion that they are to blame in some degree may or may not have merit. I recall at least two incidents which show that the War and Navy Departments have been unable to correct a situation which impaired their efforts.

Just week before last a gentleman from Pennsylvania came into the office. He is a carpenter on this new field they are building down here. I said, "If you are a carpenter working on that job how come you are in the office this morning?" He said, "I go down there at 8 o'clock, and at half past 9 the foreman tells me to go home." I said, "How many of you fellows are down there working that way?" He said, "There are 10 in my crew."

"How did that come about," I asked. He said, "Well, it is this way. There is no work for us there now, but the contractor says he is compelled to hold us on the pay roll if we wants help, so we go down there at 8 and come back at half past 9."

That is just one illustration, but it can be multiplied a thousand times.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Of course, that is due to an order that is made by the Secretary of Labor that fixes the wage and labor conditions.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It is not the fault of the War and Navy Departments at all. They are helpless when that situation arises. As I tried to say a moment ago, it is the fault of the politicians in the Administration who are putting this excessive load on the War and Navy Departments all the time. Those politicians are adding enormously to the cost of the war. There is no question about it. We know how it is. They are the fellows who insist that this act which states that 40 hours continue to be a normal week's work be continued.

The men themselves want to work, there is no doubt of that; but along come the union politicians and, joining hands with the politicians in the administration, they say "No, we are going to keep these social gains, we are going to keep these short hours, we are going to keep this pay and a half for Saturday, we are going to keep this double pay for every bit of work we do on holidays and Sundays on munitions for the boys who are doing the fighting. We are going to keep that come hell or high water, win the war or lose the war." They are going to have it anyway. That is the situation, and we know it. We have known it ever since December 7, 1941, more than a year ago, and we have failed to legislate to correct it.

Now go back more than a year. Up here in Detroit the Navy was having airplane motors for the Philadelphia Navy Yard built in the Bohn Aluminum & Brass Co. plant. For 41 days in one plant and for 24 days in another the C. I. O. held up the plans and specifications of the Navy, which wanted to get them out of there. I put in the RECORD before a letter from Assistant Secretary of the Navy Edison showing that the Navy of the United States was unable to get its own plans and blueprints because of the actions of those strikers.

The incident was so outrageous, so unbelievable, that I read into the RECORD the letter from the then Acting Secretary of War Edison. I quote:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 20, 1939.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The resolution (H. Res. 314) requesting information from the Secretary of the Navy on certain matters in connection with a strike of employees in the plants of the Bohn Aluminum Co. at Detroit, Mich., was referred to the Navy Department by your committee with request for report.

The questions in the resolution are set forth below, the answer to each appearing immediately thereafter.

(a) Whether the Navy Department did have a contract with said corporation.

At the time the said strike was called, the Navy Department did have a contract with the Bohn Aluminum & Brass Corporation, of Detroit, Mich., for the manufacture of special bearings for aircraft engines. In addition, the corporation was also engaged in the manufacture of special bearings and castings for manufacturers with whom the Navy Department had contracts.

(b) Whether a strike which interfered, or would interfere, with the activities of the Navy Department occurred.

A strike actually occurred in the plants of the said corporation which did interfere with the activities of the Navy Department.

A strike was called at the corporation's plant No. 1, Detroit, Mich., on August 29, 1939. At the time the strike was called, plant No. 1 was engaged in the manufacture of special bearings for aircraft engines for manufacturers with whom the Navy has contracts. On September 15, 1939, a second strike was called at all of the seven plants of the corporation in the Detroit district in sympathy with the strike at plant No. 1 (bearings). At the time of calling the second strike, plant No. 2 was engaged in the manufacture of castings for airplane engines in process of manufacture at the Naval Aircraft Factory, Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.; also castings for a manufacturer with whom the Navy has a contract for a special type of marine engine.

The duration of the strike in plant No. 1 (bearings) was from the 29th of August to October 8, inclusive, 41 calendar days. The duration of the strike in plant No. 2 (castings) was from September 15 to October 8, 1939, inclusive, 24 calendar days.

(d) Whether the delivery of bearings or parts which had been manufactured for the Navy, or of plans, specifications, or equipment, or any of them was delayed.

The delivery of completed castings, bearings, and parts, also those in the process of manufacture, was delayed for the duration of the strike.

The Navy Department was unable to obtain the return of the Government-owned patterns, plans, and equipment for the duration of the strike.

(e) What, if any, representations were made by the Navy Department to the corporation looking toward the ending of said strike.

No representations were made by the Navy Department to the corporation looking toward the ending of the strike.

(f) What, if any, representations were made by the Navy Department to the union or its representatives looking toward the settlement of the strike.

On September 28, 1939, the United States Navy resident inspector of naval material at Detroit, Mich., informed the regional director of the United Automobile Workers, Congress of Industrial Organizations, Detroit, Mich., of the seriousness of the delay in the delivery of the material due on contracts, also the urgent need of the shipment of patterns and requested that he instruct his representative in charge of the picket line at the corporation's plant No. 2 to allow a representative of the inspector of naval material and a truck to pass through the picket line to pick up Government-owned patterns and ship them on a Government bill of lading.

The regional director of the United Automobile Workers, Congress of Industrial Organizations, sent three representatives of union local No. 208 to discuss the removal of the patterns with the inspector of naval material. The representatives of union local No. 208 were given full access to the files on the Navy contracts and they were informed that the delay in releasing patterns for delivery were seriously jeopardizing the manufacture of airplane engines at the Naval Aircraft Factory. At the end of the discussion, the union representatives stated that as the strike situation stood at the present time, their answer was emphatically "No" and that they would not let patterns or inspected castings be removed. No further action was taken by the Navy Department to remove the patterns and castings. The Navy Department kept in touch with the strike situation at the Bohn plants through its field representatives, and through the United States Department of Labor, but took no steps looking toward the settlement of the strike.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES EDISON,
The Acting Secretary of the Navy.

I hope that every Member of this House will not only read this letter but that he will listen to and then read again the remarks which will later today be made by the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON]. Those remarks will show that today, in the midst of war, this administration has failed, and we in Congress have failed, to adopt and enforce a policy which would end these subversive acts.

Now, why did they get away with these un-American acts back in 1939, and how did they get away with it? They got away with it because the administration, the Secretary of Labor was back of them. The New Deal administration, if you please, took a position with the strikers, with the union politicians, with the racketeers against the Navy, which could not get the material it wanted. That is shown by the letter just read. Read it again, and then you will know where the fault lies. And again I say to the majority side, What are you going to do about it? Anything?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, of course I am always pleased to hear from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] knowing full well that he will have a good word for the cause of labor. As to extending the time of the committees that have investigated so splendidly the Army and the Navy activities, I congratulate the committees upon the splendid work they have done and I hope that the resolution before us will receive the unanimous support of the House, as it deserves.

At the same time, however, not wishing to detract from the activities and work of the Committees on Military Affairs and Naval Affairs, I am going to give some little credit where credit is due, because I do feel that both the Under Secretaries of the Army and the Navy have made it clear that they have been instrumental in bringing about renegotiation of the contracts that have been let. I myself do not believe that the Army or the Navy has perhaps acted as economically or wisely, or as efficiently as under the direction of a Democratic Secretary of War or Democratic Secretary of the Navy. I think if that had been the case, they would have had more interest and more in common with the administration and that in all likelihood they would have been more careful as to the contracts which were awarded.

Unfortunately, I recognize that due to the delay originally to follow the recommendations of our President, which he pointed out in his Chicago speech, and even before, there would have been greater efficiency and economy in proceeding in due time. We were warned and requested to prepare for the threatening danger confronting our country—and if that delay had not taken place, and we had acted on his recommendation, there would not have been the haste necessary that both the Under Secretaries testified to, and it would not have been necessary for them to have rushed the production of needed war materials without regard to costs, but they were compelled to do so because it was felt that we were in danger and that the ammunition, the guns, and the airplanes were necessary to safeguard the interest of this country. I appreciated the testimony of Under Secretary Forrestal of the Navy and that of the Under Secretary of War, Judge Patterson, that due to the tremendous requirements of war supplies at the beginning of the war they could not haggle over prices when the fate of our country was at stake.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. No; pardon me—in a moment. In view of that fact, I feel that the criticism which has been made by my colleague from New York [Mr. FISH] is not justified, though I do not wish to defend them in any way. I do say they were confronted with a condition, a very serious condition, and I believe any real American, any patriotic American, whether on this side or that side of the aisle, would have done perhaps the same thing, would have gone on and said, "Let us get the ammunition that we need, so as to preserve and protect our country"; and that is what they actually did, regardless of the cost, and I am informed that both of them also put a proviso in those contracts, not knowing what the actual cost would be, that the Departments would have the right to renegotiate the prices originally fixed by the manufacturers, and that if they found later on that the prices were excessive, they would have the right to readjust them.

This, as both the Under Secretary of War and the Under Secretary of the Navy explained, was due to the fact that many manufacturers were not in position to estimate what the actual cost would be. It was further testified, and I believe it to be true, that many manufacturers reduced their costs because, as they proceeded with production on tanks, airplanes, trucks, and other items they found that from one-half to two-thirds less man-hours were required than in the beginning. Personally, I am of opinion that our committees have aided and expedited the adjustment, and that there has been nearly two and one-quarter billion dollars already recovered, and I am of opinion, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to recoup much more, more millions, perhaps billions, from these industrial gentlemen or corporations who have placed altogether too excessive prices on their products. In view of that fact, I believe the extension of these committees will be helpful, and that they should continue to cooperate with the Army and the Navy, and, as the gentleman from New York said, perhaps investigate some other contracting bureaus of the Departments, to ascertain whether excessive prices have not been fixed on contracts entered into.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I cannot yield now. When that time comes I know that the Rules Committee, and I as the chairman, will not hesitate to report a resolution giving other committees the right to investigate and examine into the situation, because I know that there are other departments, due to certain gentlemen who have been imported and designated and commissioned, many of whom do not seem to display an interest to safeguard and practice economy and bring about efficiency as they would if they were interested and believed in the proper achievements of the administration, who might not have again the same interest in the administration and the affairs of our Government as if they had been real, loyal, economically inclined Democrats.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I am not going to say that all of the Republicans that are there, and the most of them are in major positions, are incompetent or inefficient, but they seem to be indifferent as to whether their recklessness would subject them to criticism. Yes, I do believe that they do not have the proper interest in the administration and that many of them think it is a good thing for the administration to be criticized for our failure to act wisely and economically and in the best interest of the country.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Consequently I feel that our action has been wise and prudent and in order, and that from now on we will watch all of these gentlemen, not only in the Army and the Navy, but that the Congress will assume the jurisdiction that it is its duty to assume, and will maintain a watchful eye upon all of the expenditures of all of the other departments that have expended billions and billions of money, that we are pledged to provide and vote for.

Therefore, in view of what I have said, I feel that the life of these committees should be extended and the resolution passed to give them additional time to continue their investigations, especially in view of the fact that the Under Secretaries of the War and Navy Departments and the chairmen of the two House committees have been working harmoniously.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs should also be congratulated for bringing to light the ascertainment of the tremendous commissions received by many of the procurement agents, several of whom, I am informed, and the record will show, were formerly connected with the departments. I am inserting a partial report submitted by the Committee on Naval Affairs bearing on the commissions received by 30 manufacturers' agents or so-called engineering sales companies, together with a statement of amounts due or to become due of 5 others:

Mr. Speaker, some of my Republican colleagues do love to assail and attack and to hold the administration responsible for these expenditures and these excessive contracts. I know that it was the desire, wish, and earnest plea of the President not only to have efficiency and to have expeditious and speedy production of war material, but that it would be produced economically. He had reason to believe that these men to whom he entrusted this tremendous task would carry out his instructions. Therefore, to charge the Democratic administration with extravagance is unjustified because nearly all of these men who have been entrusted with the work are Republicans and the great majority of the industrialists and manufacturers who have been awarded contracts are also Republicans. To substantiate my assertion, I insert a statement of the profits of 10 of these corporations, showing their profits in 1941, after deduction of taxes, and the percentage and increase in the profits of that year over 1940. I am satisfied that the profits for 1942 will be much greater which is another and sufficient reason why the committees should be empowered to continue their investigations:

Corporation profits after deduction of taxes

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. It is regrettable that the debate today should wander far afield from the thing which we are considering. Let us forget the verbiage, let us forget the talk, and get back to what is before the House—a resolution to continue the work of two investigating committees. Every Member on this floor is sincerely in favor of their continuance. The Army appeared and the Navy appeared before the Rules Committee. Each stated that its branch of the service was in hearty sympathy with the continuation of these investigating committees.

I do not like to hear politics, Democrats and Republicans, brought up in discussions concerning essential war measures with which we are in sympathy.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I would rather not, my time is so limited.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would like to ask you if you believe in free speech and if you want to have a monopoly on it?

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman who just interrupted me certainly believes in free speech and indulges in it to a great extent.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You are right, I do; and you believe in the school-teacher attitude.

Mr. MICHENER. Well, possibly I do not always follow the course of my good-natured friend from Michigan.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee has been here a long time. He is steeped in the political tradition and the Chicago way of doing things. I am sure that he would not intentionally inject partisan politics in this debate, but I fear that remark may be misconstrued.

It is conceded by all that these investigations have saved at least $2,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money. I am not going to argue as to just where the credit should go, but I am going to say that none of these savings was made until these two committees came before the Congress and asked permission to set up an investigating committee in each case. Just as soon as those committees were set up, the march of the profiteers to the mourners' bench started, and throughout the length and breadth of this land these large contractors who had contracts which gave them unconscionable, unreasonable profits, approached the Government, and in many cases voluntarily laid millions of dollars upon the table—millions of dollars; dollars that were not earned, as conceded by them. So that the psychological effect of the committees has been wholesome, commendable, laudable, and beneficial to the war effort.

Those two committees recommended early that legislation be enacted directing the renegotiation of those unconscionable contracts by the two departments making the contracts. The Congress responded unanimously. Authority was given and some of those contracts have been renegotiated, and many of them are being renegotiated at this time. The work is not completed. The chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee told the Rules Committee that the renegotiation of over $670,000,000 of additional contracts is in progress.

Now let us get down to brass tacks. Let us be generous. Let us congratulate these committees. Let us congratulate the Congress. Let us congratulate the two departments making the contracts for their willingness to concede that some exorbitant contracts have been made and upon their desire to cooperate with the Congress in saving the taxpayers' money and furthering the war effort.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON WILDLIFE CONSERVATION

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 20, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Special Committee to Investigate All Matters Pertaining to the Replacement and Conservation of Wildlife is authorized to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 237, of the Seventy-third Congress, continued under authority of House Resolution 44, of the Seventy-fourth Congress, House Resolution 11, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, House Resolution 65, of the Seventy-sixth Congress, and House Resolution 49, of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 237, of the Seventy-third Congress, and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1945, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, for necessary legislation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to provision of House Resolution 20, Seventy-eighth Congress, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SCHUETZ] to fill the existing vacancies on the Special Committee on Wildlife Conservation.

INVESTIGATION BY CIVIL SERVICE COMMITTEE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 16, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Civil Service, acting as a whole or by subcommittee or subcommittees appointed by the chairman of said committee, is authorized and directed (a) to conduct thorough studies and investigation of the policies and practices relating to civilian employment in the departments and agencies of the Government, including Government-owned corporations; (b) to study and investigate the effect of such policies and practices upon the conduct of the war, with the view of determining whether such policies and practices are efficient and economical; (c) to determine the number of employees in each department or agency (including Government-owned corporations), whether such number of employees is necessary and whether their skills are used to the best advantage; (d) all other matters relating to the recruiting and the efficient and economical use of the civilian employees; and (e) to make such inquiry as said Committee on the Civil Service may consider important or pertinent to any matter coming within the jurisdiction of said committee.

For the purposes of this resolution, the said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books or papers or documents or vouchers by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony and records as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or by any person designated by him, and shall be served by such person or persons as the chairman of the committee or subcommittee may designate. The chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives during the present Congress the results of their studies, inquiries, and investigations with such recommendations for legislation or otherwise as the committee deems desirable.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] with the hope that he will not use it all.

Mr. Speaker, I will not be guilty at this time of saying anything that perhaps might be considered, unfortunately, by my good friend from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] as political. But sometimes we cannot help ourselves from coming out with the truth, and I know that the truth will hurt.

I assure you it is not my desire to hurt the feelings of anyone present at any time. This resolution before us is similar to one that was voted out in the last session of Congress giving the Committee on the Civil Service of the House the power and jurisdiction to investigate the employees and overcrowded conditions of various departments not only the War and the Navy Departments but all the departments. The Rules Committee granted such a rule last year because representations were made that in many of the departments they had altogether too many employees, and the Rules Committee was under the impression that if such were the case we ought to know about it and eliminate everyone that was not needed.

I do not have to say anything about the chairman of this committee, for I believe there is not a Member of this House who enjoys greater confidence or who is more beloved than the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]. Every man in this House no matter on which side of the aisle he sits has the utmost confidence in him. Because of this and because we are satisfied that he will conduct a fair investigation of existing conditions, I feel the power should be given him to proceed with the work that was started in the last session.

Mr. ELSTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. ELSTON of Ohio. Can the gentleman state whether or not the committee made a report last session?

Mr. SABATH. The committee hardly got started last session, for the resolution was passed only in the last few weeks of the session. I doubt if the committee was able to get sufficient information on which they could base a report. I see the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] here. I will yield to him if he cares to answer the gentleman further.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The committee did make a report; it is Union Calendar No. 1001, Report No. 2747.

Mr. SABATH. I thank the gentleman very much for the information.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose at this time to burden you with any lengthy discussion. I should like to suggest, however, that it is the primary duty and responsibility in our scheme of government for the Congress of the United States to enact laws and appropriate the money to carry on the functions of government. After that is done the responsibility and obligation for the administration of those laws and the expenditure of the money passes to the administrative and executive agencies.

The Congress, however, does have a continuing responsibility to see to it that the laws are administered according to the way we would want them administered, according to the intent of the Congress expressed in the legislation, and certainly we have a continuing responsibility to see to it that the departments charged with the expenditure of the taxpayers' money given to them by the action of the Congress do not waste that money. I believe it is entirely fair to say that the country, as to those matters, is looking to the Congress for action. To me it is a heartening sign that on this day we here in the House of Representatives are implementing various of our committees to the end that they may fulfill that obligation to the country.

It has been suggested that this resolution was adopted in the last Congress and a question was asked such as might raise a doubt as to whether the committee had functioned properly. The resolution, of course, was not adopted until very late in the last session, I think a month or 6 weeks before the session ended, and under those circumstances there was not a lot the committee could have done, although they did definitely accomplish some things that have been helpful. That, however, does not have anything to do with the sort of job they are going to do when this resolution is adopted. In the last Congress there was no assurance this committee would be continued, but with the adoption of this resolution this early in this Congress there is no doubt but what the committee will have plenty of time to go to work.

As the able and distinguished chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has pointed out, the purpose of this resolution is to give the Committee on the Civil Service of the House of Representatives the power to inquire into the practices and policies of civilian employment in the Government, whether they are being carried on efficiently and economically and whether the number of employees so engaged are necessary.

I might suggest that in my humble opinion there is plenty of room for some first-class investigation along this line. We are all familiar with the tremendous growth of civilian employment; we know that employees of the Government have been brought into Washington by the hundreds of thousands as they have been brought into the employment of the Government all over the country. We constantly hear reports of employees here in Washington and other places sitting around doing nothing. Every once in a while some newspaper initiates an investigation on its own responsibility, contacts a lot of employees and finds out first hand that there are many here on the Government pay roll who, for the life of them, cannot seem to find out what they are supposed to be doing.

Today we hear the cry of manpower shortage raised on every hand. We hear it stated over and over again that the production of food and fiber for the maintenance of our armed services and of our population and of the armed services of our allies is being threatened by lack of manpower on the farm. Small business and big business alike are being closed all over the land because the necessary employees cannot be found to carry on the business. Would it not then be a good idea to find out just how conservative the Government has been in the matter of its use of manpower?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to my friend from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am sure the gentleman is not offering any criticism of that extraordinary announcement in the newspaper this morning that the War Production Board, after great research, has discovered the best way to cut a slice of bread?

Mr. HALLECK. What was that? I am not familiar with it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I thought the gentleman was familiar with that. I find that the War Production Board has issued a statement advising the housewives of America, after great research, as to what is the best way of cutting a loaf of bread and they have made the amazing discovery that any sharp knife will cut a slice of bread.

Mr. HALLECK. I am sure that will be a great contribution to the convenience of the housewives of America.

Mr. ELSTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman state whether or not it will be within the province of this committee to inquire into the question of whether or not a great many of these civilian employees are more essential or might be more essential to the Army than to the departments in which they work?

Mr. HALLECK. The committee is charged with the responsibility of inquiring into the proposition of whether or not the practices and policies in the Government are efficient and economical. It would certainly seem to me, and I think I know what the gentleman is talking about, that some of these employees, and we see them on every hand as we go about our business in Washington, might be doing a lot better job for their country in the armed service or working on some farm out in Indiana than they are doing in the job in which they are located.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Would the activities of this committee cover cases similar to that which we had in the last Congress, when voting appropriations certain men were named and it was provided that none of the funds appropriated should be paid to them either by way of compensation, expenses, or salaries, yet those men are back drawing money in some other department now? I refer, for instance, to Dr. Saposs.

Mr. HALLECK. It would seem to me that would be a matter worthy of investigation as it might be questioned whether or not the employment of that individual is economical, efficient, and in the public interest. I know something about the situation to which the gentleman refers. Dr. Saposs, who was employed by the National Labor Relations Board, was criticized quite severely by a committee of the House and was subsequently named in an appropriation bill where it was provided that no money should be used for his employment. Thereupon, of necessity severing his employment with that agency, we now read in the papers that Dr. Saposs turns up as an economic adviser for the War Labor Board, or a part thereof.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is an expert on legislation. Could he advise us as to what form the legislation should take to keep him off the pay roll?

Mr. HALLECK. Well, of course, the gentleman knows that after all, as I stated, the first responsibility of the Congress is to enact the laws that set up the agencies and to provide the money for their operation. The selection of the personnel passes to other hands. Sometimes I think it is a little unfortunate that maybe there is not a more direct way for the Congress to express its will in respect to some of these matters.

Mr. Speaker, there is a manpower shortage in this country. Every one of us certainly wants to see every individual in that job in which he can be the most effective and where he can contribute the most to the national good. Certainly the Government of the United States should set the example for everyone else in its conservation of manpower. They should not be wasting manpower. As I have observed on many, many occasions, I think in many ways our own Government and many of our agencies are the most lavish squanderers of available manpower of any organization or industry or business to be found in the whole country.

I have confidence in the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], who is chairman of this committee. I am sure he will have an able committee working with him. May I express the hope that in approaching this whole problem he will go about it sincerely, effectively, and aggressively, and come back to the House with a fine report of what has been accomplished.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the prior resolution for the continuation of the Wildlife Committee was rushed through the House without any debate whatsoever. I had expected the majority to discuss the resolution. There were some members of the committee on the minority side who wanted to be heard. I do not believe that is the right way to pass resolutions creating special committees in the House, without giving the facts and information to the Members. There are a great many new Members in this House, particularly on the minority side, who know nothing about the Wildlife Committee. They do not know what its work is or who is on the select committee or where the money comes from or anything about it. I think it is an unfortunate state of affairs to rush through a resolution of that kind without any consideration whatsoever. In a few minutes I propose to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], who is chairman of that committee, be given 5 minutes of the time that we have left on this rule to speak on that resolution, and I shall so move.

The Committee on Rules reported out this resolution empowering the Civil Service Committee to investigate the status of our civilian personnel. I believe that both sides of the House are in favor of retrenchment, saving, and economy. At the end of the last World War we had 900,000 employees in the civil service. Within a short time after that this number was reduced to 500,000. Today we have almost 3,000,000, somewhere far in excess of 2,500,000. The exact figures are not given in the report, but it is between 2,500,000 and 3,000,000.

There are many Members of Congress on both sides of the aisle who feel that we should economize by reducing the number of these civilian employees. For example, the War Production Board has somewhere around 25,000 employees. Members who have made a study of the work of the War Production Board have publicly stated that they think that work could be just as efficiently and possibly more efficiently handled if that Board cut its personnel in half.

The Office of Price Administration has 40,000 employees. There are those who state that they could make a very large cut and have increased efficiency. So I believe this committee has a great work cut out for it, to bring about not only efficiency in the Government service, but to reduce the number of personnel, save money, and retrench. This resolution should have the unanimous support of the Members on both sides.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], may have 5 minutes to speak out of order on the work of the Wildlife Committee, of which he is chairman and has so ably headed for a number of years past.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, of course I do not object to my colleague speaking on any subject at any time, but such request as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has just made is not proper in the consideration of this rule, as the time is in the hands of the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois will with great pleasure yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia. I do not believe anybody will object to his speaking out of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to use the 5 minutes?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, this puts me in a very embarrassing position, that of bringing up a subject alien to the resolution under consideration. If I may have permission to revise and extend my remarks, I can place in the RECORD a summary of the very important work the Select Committee on Conservation of Wildlife Resources has been doing, for the information of all Members of the House, without delaying the orderly procedure of the adoption of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask that his remarks be placed in the RECORD immediately following the presentation of the resolution?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed out of order for 5 minutes. We would like to hear him.

Mr. FISH. I made that same request. I do not know whether it was objected to or not.

Mr. SABATH. If I am not mistaken, that request to speak out of order was objected to.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] desires to make a speech for 5 minutes, the Chair will let him talk about anything he desires, unless a point of order is made.

The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to speak under the circumstances that now exist, when I know there are some who would like to finish the business in hand. Naturally, I am flattered to have the suggestion come from my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Kentucky, that he would like to hear me on the subject of wildlife conservation.

We have sent to each Member of the House copies of our report and of the hearings. We are dealing with a subject in which 10,000,000 licensed hunters and 7,000,000 fishermen are interested. But it is broader than that. There are thousands of persons who hunt with cameras, other thousands love the out of doors as created by God and unspoiled by man.

All of us are vitally interested in the contribution being made to the war effort by our natural resources. Our fish and fishery products are third in volume of food production, following beef and pork, with a total of 5,000,000,000 pounds. Formerly we imported about one-half of the furs we use in this country but now we are stepping up fur production to try to meet the demands of those who are on the northern sea patrols, those who have gone into the frozen wastes of Greenland's icy mountains.

We are trying to conserve our timber resources, as we realize the demand being made upon our timber for the war effort. Do you know that we are really facing a timber shortage this year, with an estimated 20,000,000,000 feet of timber less than the estimated demand? All too late have we taken steps to stop forest fires and to urge private owners to engage in scientific and selective cutting of merchantable timber.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I did intend to say a few words in regard to the resolution to continue the life of the Wildlife Conservation Committee when it was under consideration a few moments ago. I concur in everything the gentleman has said. May I add that all our natural resources are rapidly disappearing. For instance, up in northern Minnesota nearly 90,000,000 tons of iron ore were taken out of the iron mines last year. One of the functions in which our committee can assist is formulating plans to use some of the low-grade ore and get that ore into productive use throughout the country. I am very glad the House has unanimously passed this resolution to continue the life of the Wildlife Conservation Committee, because I feel that we can serve a constructive purpose for the future of the country.

Mr. ROBERTSON. As the gentleman from Minnesota, an active and helpful member of our committee, has said, there is much war work for us to do.

Our committee has jurisdiction in an advisory and investigatory capacity over all of the wildlife conservation of the Federal agencies directly engaged in that work, which are the Fish and Wildlife Service, the National Park Service, and United States Forest Service. We likewise have jurisdiction over those incidentally engaged in wildlife conservation, such as the Soil Conservation Service; the Army and Navy, now big land owners; the Reclamation and Grazing Services, and so forth. The agencies dealing directly in conservation matters consult us with respect to all major policies. The other agencies cooperate. We worked out a plan for full and helpful cooperation not only between agencies dealing directly in wildlife conservation but between all the agencies of the Government touching that field.

We sponsored the Duck Stamp Act, which produces about $1,000,000 a year for migratory waterfowl, and the tax on sporting guns and ammunition that produces about $3,000,000 per year, to be used as grants-in-aid to the States. There is now to the credit of that trust fund about $10,000,000. We exercise constant supervision over the way that fund is handled.

When the C. C. C. camps were organized, they first operated with little regard to wildlife conservation. Under our direction they were turned into one of the best conservation agencies we have ever had, building thousands of fine fishing ponds, improving and restocking thousands of miles of fishing streams, and handling its silvicultural operations both with regard to leaving a habitat and food for wildlife as well as the production of a commercial timber crop. The C. C. C. camps also had an active part in building and developing breeding and feeding refuges for migratory birds in an area of some 12,000,000 acres, which was a major contribution to the fact that we now have about four times as many ducks and geese as we had before our committee started its operations.

The fact that these conservation agencies of the Government must report each year in detail to us on their operations, and those reports will be printed and distributed to the four corners of the country, keeps them on their toes and encourages them to tackle new jobs to which they can in such reports point with pride. Our reports go not only to all State game departments and organized conservation associations but to many public libraries and the technical schools of many colleges. It is the only full and complete report of the conservation work of the Government, and in some schools our hearings are used as textbooks.

Another service, and of no mean proportions, rendered by our committee in the past 2 years was in inducing the United States Forest Service to recognize the superior jurisdiction of the States where title to and the right to take wildlife was involved. Our committee is the forum to which State game departments, conservation organizations, and individual sportsmen come for the presentation of their views and the protection of their rights. We were successful in working out a cooperative agreement between the Government and the States in the administration of national forest areas that has apparently been satisfactory to all concerned. And, from the standpoint of the average sportsman, the most popular thing we have done was in urging the Fish and Wildlife Service to liberalize shooting regulations in recognition of an increased supply of game.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. May I add my word of commendation of the splendid work of the gentleman's committee. I know it has met the unanimous support and favor of sportsmen throughout the country, both in the Isaak Walton League and the other service organizations.

May I make this suggestion: I hope that in the report the committee will work out during the present session of Congress some plans and proposals can be incorporated by which, when and if we enter into another public-works program after this war, due attention can be given to the needs of the service, such as the development of recreational areas, the correction of pollution problems, and the development of other ways of improving the natural resources of America.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I thank my distinguished friend for that suggestion. The post-war recreational program he suggests is one that is close to my heart.

In all of recorded history I never heard of a dictator who loved to hunt and fish. Some of the Roman Emperors provided bread and circuses to allay popular unrest, but it was not until this country of ours was settled that there was any hunting and fishing except for those who wore the royal purple. When our ancestors came here seeking a new type of freedom, a part of that freedom was to be the freedom of fields and streams—the freedom of hunting and fishing, without an overlord stringing us up by the thumbs for poaching in his private preserve. With us, the privilege for the masses of hunting and fishing has become a hallmark of our democracy.

Our first President, George Washington, the greatest man this country has ever produced, and a model all should strive to emulate, loved to hunt and fish. And almost every succeeding President has enjoyed either one sport or the other. Teddy Roosevelt was a hunter of international fame and his establishment of the Forest Service, under the direction of Gifford Pinchot, laid the foundation for what is now our greatest national playground—175,000,000 acres of national forests, to which must be added, of course, the 25,000,000 acres of national parks, in which fishing is permitted but not hunting. Those facilities for outdoor recreation are not duplicated in any nation in the world. In fact we were the first nation in the world to establish a national park, although most nations have since followed our example.

Here is what one of our soldiers wrote to his friend at home:

When I come back this time I hope I shall find America to be still the America of my boyhood dreams, a nation where a man of reasonable intelligence, energy, and integrity can achieve a happy life. Loving the outdoors, I should hate to find that our conservation program had been junked—not only because we should conserve the resources which have made America great, but also because I want again to fish clear streams and tramp through unspoiled fields and forests with a dog and a gun. I want—to come back to the America I have always known—an America of freedom, of opportunity, and of happy living. It seems to me that these are perilous times, not only because we must prepare to defend ourselves against external aggressors, but also because we may forget to keep America whole. Clean waters, green fields and forests, fertile soils, an abundance of wild things, and freedom to use and enjoy these resources properly—these I hope Americans will always have.

Said the soldier—

Our best hope of contributing to the establishment of democracy abroad is to make sure of preserving it at home. As I have already indicated, we can draw on our resources—our fisheries, our furs, our game animals, as a contribution to the war effort, although from now until the end of the war hunting will be greatly curtailed because our supply of shells is almost exhausted, and there will be no more for civilian use until the war is over. Ten million or more fine boys are coming home when the war is over. It is not enough to have a parade down Fifth Avenue for them, or a band concert in their home town, and then forget them for the duration of the peace. We must think about jobs for them when they get back and have clean and wholesome recreation for them. Based upon my own experience as well as observations in the last war, there is going to be some discontent among those veterans of World War No. 2 when they get home. We must make it possible for them to realize the meaning of the New England poet, who, speaking of those who commune with Nature, said:

And she glides into your darker musings,
With a mild and healing sympathy,
That steals away their sharpness ere you are aware.

For those who, like myself, love the mountains best, I want them to come back to green mountains and well-stocked streams, and not to burned-over, barren wastes. For those who love the wide open spaces, I want them to be able to say with the cowboy:

Oh, Lord, I've never lived where churches grow.
I love creation better as it stood
That day You finished it so long ago
And looked upon Your work and called it good.
I know that others find You in the light
That's sifted down through tinted window panes,
And yet I seem to feel You near tonight
In this dim, quiet starlight on the plains.

I thank You, Lord, that I am placed so well,
That You have made my freedom so complete;
That I'm no slave of whistle, clock, or bell,
Nor weak-eyed prisoner of wall and street.
Just let me live my life as I've begun
And give me work that's open to the sky;
Make me a pardner of the wind and sun,
And I won't ask a life that's soft or high.

Let me be easy on the man that's down;
Let me be square and generous with all.
I'm careless sometimes, Lord, when I'm in town,
But never let 'em say I'm mean or small!
Make me as big and open as the plains,
As honest as the hawse between my knees,
Clean as the wind that blows behind the rains,
Free as the hawk that circles down the breeze!

Forgive me, Lord, if sometimes I forget.
You know about the reasons that are hid.
You understand the things that gall and fret:
You know me better than my mother did.

Just keep an eye on all that's done and said,
And right me, sometimes, when I turn aside,
And guide me on the long, dim trail ahead
That stretches upward toward the Great Divide.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the resolution before us extends the life of the committee, headed by Mr. RAMSPECK, to investigate the personnel requirements of the various departments and agencies of the Government to ascertain if there are more persons on the civil pay rolls of the Government than are necessary. This is an important resolution and it extends the life of a very important committee.

The charge has been made time and again on the floor of the House and Senate, by investigating committees of the House and Senate, and by the press, that the departments and agencies of the Federal Government are greatly overmanned.

There was a general complaint at the close of the last war we had too many persons on the civil pay roll of the Government. There were about 900,000. Today we have close to 3,000,000, and the civil pay roll of the Government is growing by leaps and bounds.

Senator BYRD, of Virginia has, from time to time, stated our civil pay roll was overmanned by at least one third. Hon. Paul V. McNutt, head of the Manpower Commission of the Nation, according to press reports, charged the Federal Government was the worst manpower hoarder of the Nation.

We see this excess of manpower on the civil pay roll of the Government everywhere. I was recently talking to a farmer and dairyman of Kentucky who informed me that some time ago 16 Government employees came to his place in automobiles merely to take the serial numbers of his tires. While he had several trucks that were used on his farm and in the operation of his dairy, he stated that one person could have done the work in the same time the 16 were engaged. Their sole and only job was to take the serial numbers on these tires, and he was surprised when 6 of the men returned the following day in an automobile and stated they had made a mistake.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And where were the 10?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Our Saviour asked where were the 9, and the gentleman from Michigan wants to know where were the 10. Perhaps the 10 were waiting until the 6 returned from the second trip.

This citizen being a taxpayer, farmer, and businessman, was astonished that these automobiles, this gasoline, and this excess of manpower should be employed to do this little simple job, at the same time this farmer and dairyman was greatly in need of workers for his farm and dairy.

Not long ago I had occasion to observe something about a unit or division of one of the Government departments. I was informed by more than one of the persons in that division or unit they had no work on many days and it was greatly overmanned.

I am sure you, like myself, have visited many of the departments and agencies of the Government and have observed this excess of persons on the civil pay roll of the Government. This condition must be corrected. The shortage of manpower is one of the very serious problems confronting the Nation. Small and large business and the farms of the Nation find the production in their business and on their farms greatly handicapped by reason of the shortage of men. Young men and married men, even with wives and children, have been taken from mines, factories, shops, mills, and from off the farms for our armed forces, and at the same time we have at least a million unnecessary persons on the civil pay roll of the Government. Tens of thousands of these are ablebodied single young men who have been favored and kept out of the armed forces under the pretext they are needed to carry on the civil activities of the Government.

This is a gross imposition on the taxpayers of the Nation. This excess of manpower on the civil pay roll should be required to enter the armed service or aid in carrying on our war-production effort in industry or on the farms.

So our friend, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], who has shown a great interest in the civil employees of the Government, and his committee, have a real job to do. I am hopeful he and the other members of this committee will take off their gloves and do a real job and give some relief to the taxpayers and release these unnecessary persons from the Government pay roll, so that they may go out and perform essential services in business, on the farms and in the factories, where their services are so greatly needed at this time, and that this Government will cease to be the chief manpower hoarder of the Nation.

This is, I wish to repeat, an important resolution, and this committee can, and I am sure will, render a great service to our country by thoroughly investigating every branch and agency of this Government.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I raised the question before when the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] was yielded time, because it was my desire that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] follow the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] desired to speak in order. Otherwise I would not have raised that question. However, I am pleased now to yield all the time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] that he desires on the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] saw fit to criticize the method by which the resolution was put through to continue the wildlife investigation. As I put the resolution through, I desire to make the following statement with respect to the matter: This committee has been in existence for about 8 years. It has become a matter of course to continue that committee. There was no objection to it in the Rules Committee, and no objection in the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] knows that under the rules of the House, if he had desired to make a speech upon the subject, he was entitled to 30 minutes, which would have been yielded to him, and had he been present on the floor listening when the resolution was called up he would have had the opportunity to make that speech. He has made several speeches this morning, and I did not know that he had any other subjects that had not been explored. I take the floor only because the discussion might have left the impression that my colleague the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] and I were at variance as to the method that I have used, and that I had kept my colleague from making a speech. I consulted my colleague from Virginia before I called up the resolution, and he agreed with me—and I think the House will probably agree with me—that it is sometimes a good idea to expedite the business of the House, when there is no objection. Neither my colleague the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] nor myself is accustomed to taking the time of the House for the mere purpose of hearing our own voices resound in the Chamber.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I had no desire to cast any reflections upon the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH]. I was present and heard the motion, but almost immediately the gavel fell and the resolution was agreed to. There were two members of the minority, members of that committee, who would like to have been heard. One of them was the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN], and the other the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]. Both are members of the select committee. I still maintain it is advisable when resolutions come before the House to have them discussed, and the facts presented, particularly on a subject of that kind, which is entirely new to the new Members of the House, and there are some 69 of them. I certainly did not mean any reflection on the gentleman from Virginia. If there was any mistake it was mine. I was here on the floor and could have protested, but as soon as the gentleman had made the motion the Speaker banged the gavel and the resolution was through. I assume if anybody was at fault it was myself in not getting up and protesting at the time. However, it is the practice of the House for the Member in charge of a rule on the majority side to yield half of the time to the Member handling the rule for the minority which was not done. Personally I am opposed to any resolution creating a special committee going through the House without any discussion and explanation. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not think that I was trying to criticize him personally because, as I have said, if anyone is to blame, it is myself. I want, however, to protect the right of the House and particularly of the two members on the special committee who desired to be heard. I hope in the future that the minority will be informed whenever the majority decides to give up its right or time to present legislation.

I tried my best to get the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] an opportunity to speak. He is the chairman of the committee and he wanted to be heard. We finally succeeded and he made a very fine speech and presented the facts to the House in an interesting and able manner and I am glad that he did.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. While I had some remarks on that resolution, in favor of it, I can assure the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Virginia that since the sentiment was so overwhelmingly for the continuation of the committee, I will let my remarks go until some other time.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman from Minnesota is very considerate.

Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining on this resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAMSPECK). The gentleman from New York has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. FISH. I yield that time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, many of the Members of the House will recall that about a year ago at this time the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was studying the problem of defense housing for the employees in the city of Washington. I was a member of that committee and I realized that if we continued to bring these employees in by the thousands, no appropriation or appropriations would be sufficient to provide the housing needed for them. Therefore, and at that time, I offered a 10-point program to alleviate the necessity of never-ending appropriations of money and allocations of critical materials; also a resolution to investigate the personnel situation in the departments of government in Washington.

One of those 10 points was to increase the efficiency of the personnel already in Washington. At that time I offered evidence of inefficiency. I had signed letters from Government employees who said that there were 60 in their department and that 6 could do all the work. I had signed letters from employees who said that their supervisors felt that the more people they could get to work under them the more important they were, and, therefore, the greater salary they could demand, and that they were instructed to read magazines and to write letters to friends on Government time; in other words, just appear busy.

I presented a great deal of evidence of that kind, but I did not get the committee established. I do hope that the present Civil Service Committee will make a thorough investigation and give us a good, thorough, honest, and sincere report.

Mr. FISH. No Member of Congress has done more to expose the deplorable conditions that have existed in Washington or tried harder to restore efficiency in the departments and bureaus of the Government that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON]. He deserves a great deal of credit and his efforts in behalf of Government efficiency and retrenchment are highly commendable.

Mr. WILSON. Since I made my charges, a United States Senator, Dorothy Thompson, and another columnist, Mr. Kent, have substantiated charges that I made. I would like for the Government, in addition to the rationing program it is subjecting everybody to all over the country, to ration a little red tape in Washington. They might ration personnel. They might ration the wasting of time. They might ration a few of the cocktail parties which would make toward greater efficiency in the employed personnel in Washington, and thereby alleviate the necessity of using much-needed materials to build houses, sewers, and other utilities that will have to be used to take care of the ever-increasing stream of Government employees coming to Washington.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] does not need any defense, because if there is one man in this House who does not take the time of the House unnecessarily, it is the gentleman from Virginia. I know he would be the last one to deprive the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] or any other Member from being heard on any pending resolution. Unfortunately, as the gentleman from New York stated later on, the gentleman from New York did not hear the gentleman from Virginia originally, and therefore did not rise to ask for the time. Had he risen, I know the gentleman from Virginia would gladly have yielded to him the usual 30 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FISH. I would like to make it very clear to the gentleman from Illinois that I have no complaint except this: I think if you are going to put through a resolution without debate you should notify the ranking Member on this side, so he will be prepared, instead of just presenting it and having it passed, because then it is too late. There are those who want to be heard. In future if you are going to do that, I hope you will notify us on this side. It is difficult to protect your rights once the gavel goes down.

Mr. SABATH. I did not present the resolution. I think instead of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] being criticized for not giving ample time, perhaps the gentleman from New York and I might be criticized for taking up too much time. But my aim has been to give the House as much information as I am capable of at all times, and surely I never desire to deprive any man of having an opportunity to speak on any question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAMSPECK). The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a list of questions and answers concerning the income-tax liability of members of the armed forces, prepared by Mr. Helvering, officially.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE MARITIME COMMISSION

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee of Rules, I call up House Joint Resolution 52.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That effective from January 3, 1943, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, acting as a whole or by subcommittee or subcommittees appointed by the chairman of said committee, is authorized and directed to continue the study, inquiry, and investigation begun under the authority of House Resolution 281 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, and for such purpose shall have the same powers and duties as those conferred upon it by House Resolution 281 of the Seventy-seventh Congress. The committee shall report to the House during the present Congress the results of its studies, inquiries, and investigations with such recommendations for legislation or otherwise as the committee deems desirable.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. I should like to inquire whether the gentleman has any requests for time.

Mr. FISH. Yes; I have.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman use his time?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am, of course, delighted to see the House belatedly regaining some of its functions. The country is fed up on expensive bureaucratic government. We pass laws generic in character and turn the administration of them over to the departments and then begins the debacle. Without the passage of such resolutions as have been put through here today and this pending resolution it is impossible to lift the curtain and see what is behind.

When the Maritime Act of 1936, under which we are now operating, was before the House, we tried to write into that statute provisions that would prevent the Treasury from being looted as it was in the old Shipping Board days. We tried to write a law that would give an effective auxiliary to the Navy in time of war and would carry our commerce under our flag to all parts of the world. It was our definite purpose, our vigorous purpose, to prevent the shipbuilding "racket"—it cannot be characterized by any other term—from making a new killing and to provide a decent environment with proper food for the men who go down to the sea in ships, and incidentally to compel the operating companies, who are the most highly subsidized in the world, to operate their ships on a scale of efficiency and integrity. The war and our need for added tonnage has of course dislocated our plans to a considerable degree; but war is no excuse for waste or for raids on the Treasury. We do not abandon common honesty or take larceny out of the penal code when we go into war. That, strange to say, seems to be the impression of some of the bureaucrats who are running the Government.

I have always been a vigorous advocate and defender of the Maritime Commission. As at present constituted I felt they were doing a good job and should have the support of the country and the Congress. Several matters have intervened however to make me believe there is something "rotten in Denmark" and that the interests of the country and the Treasury are not being conserved at the present time by the Maritime Commission.

My suspicions were first aroused by the ruthless and unwarranted cancelation of the Higgins contract. This made me believe—I may be of a suspicious nature—but it made me believe that the old ruthless parasites had come to life again and were going to have a dominant influence in the affairs of the Commission. I do not believe the cancelation of that contract was proper; I think it was ruthless, that the procedure was unsound; and in saying this may I say also that I disagree with some of the members of my own committee.

Fast on the heels of that came the report of the Comptroller in the Waterman case, reported in Document 840, House of Representatives, Seventy-seventh Congress. The Waterman Company purchased five vessels from the Commission's laid-up fleet for the sum of $596,000 with an option to the Commission to repurchase these boats at the same price plus what the company in the meantime had disbursed for betterments. Instead of doing this and repossessing these vessels when the Commission apparently needed vessels, repossessing them at approximately $800,000 which included the repairs and betterments, the Commission paid to the Waterman Co. $3,374,000 for five other and older vessels. This report of the Comptroller is devastating in character and is to my mind not susceptible of justification. The Maritime Commission obviously in this case wasted and made the Waterman Co. a Christmas gift of $2,500,000. I want to say here and now that these facts did not come out until a report came from the Comptroller General, Mr. Lindsay Warren, formerly a Member of this House. I do not believe there was an abler Member of Congress who served during my 14 years here than Lindsay Warren. He is full of integrity, justice, and fair dealing; and his exposure of this case is contained in a document which every Member of Congress should read.

My attention has also been called to the fact that this same company, operating a number of ships through the Red Sea on voyages between October 1941 and June 1942, made profits amounting to some $3,342,000. These were single trips, and the net book value of these boats whose earnings on single trips was in excess of $3,000,000 was $800,000. This procedure, to my mind, smells to heaven, and every phase of it should be ruthlessly investigated and exposed.

I append hereto a list of voyages:

Waterman's Red Sea earnings

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other reports of the Comptroller General of like tenor, exclusive of the disgraceful administration of the South Portland yard, which has already been condemned by this committee.

It might be well to say just a word about that. This yard has been conducted with actual larceny and is a clear violation of decent administration. The total investment of the company in this yard was $250,000. The cost and expenses of every character, including the salaries of the officers, are reimbursed to it by the Maritime Commission. To date this outfit has had a net income of 200 percent and it has contracts to build 84 ships. It now stands to earn 2,000 percent on its investment while it incurs no risk.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I would like to ask the gentleman why his committee has not proceeded along the same lines as the Military and the Naval Affairs Committees and compelled the Maritime Commission to renegotiate these contracts where the profits have been exorbitant, and return the money to the Treasury?

Mr. CULKIN. I do not think we are so expert a collection agency as the Naval and Military Committees of the House. What we did on that, I may say to the gentleman, was to recommend immediate cancelation of the contracts. There was recovered and given back approximately $50,000, but the end is not yet.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes. I would like to follow that up, because these two committees have saved over a billion dollars apiece. The gentleman has stated to the House that in this one contract they had a profit of 2,000 percent. I presume your committee proposes to do this, but why should not the committee do exactly the same thing with all these contracts of the Maritime Commission—have them renegotiated and the money refunded to the Treasury and of course to the Government?

Mr. CULKIN. I think we have unanimity of opinion on that matter, including the views of the chairman of the committee, the very able and diligent gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] who unfortunately is ill. Mr. BLAND is the soul of honor and believes that the contract should be canceled. Part of the vice of the thing is that although that was recommended some time ago there has been no cancelation.

Mr. FISH. I understand that.

Mr. CULKIN. There is just one item to which I wish to refer, and I do not intend to be partisan. I understand former Governor Brann and Mrs. Herrick, formerly of the C. I. O. in New York, are their labor relations counsel and they both pull down about $10,000 a year apiece. I cannot charge that to the Republican side, and I do not make any charges against the Democratic side, but certainly it is considerable to give those two people $20,000 out of this contract. I do not think it is justified.

Mr. FISH. In extending powers to the Merchant Marine Committee to make this investigation, I am merely suggesting that I hope it will follow the footsteps of these other committees and get back these exorbitant profits in order to save the people's money.

Mr. CULKIN. I was a prosecutor for 10 years and my belief in those matters is that the best way to cure this public thievery is to put somebody in jail. That is the way to do it. Invoke the criminal law and put these criminals and wrongdoers behind the bars for a long time. That is my theory. Then we can recover back, if you please, in a civil action these felonious misappropriations.

Mr. FISH. Your committee does propose to renegotiate these contracts?

Mr. CULKIN. You can rely on full diligence being exercised in all these matters.

Mr. WELCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WELCH. May I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on November 24 last unanimously recommended cancelation of the South Portland shipyard contract, but to date the Maritime Commission has not acted.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. In the absence of the chairman of that committee, who asked me to watch this resolution, may I ask: Is it true that a committee of another body took a little different view about the contract of the South Portland Shipbuilding Co. and that may have something to do with the reluctance of the Maritime Commission to follow our recommendations?

Mr. CULKIN. That is something new to me, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Well, they did.

Mr. CULKIN. I did not know they had. I do not see how they could possibly do that.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I agree with the gentleman that the contract should be canceled and that the Maritime Commission is derelict in this instance in not canceling the contract.

Mr. CULKIN. It would seem after the action of the committee, which was taken some weeks ago, that the Maritime Commission should exercise due diligence on that, but nothing has been done. It would seem that some angel is holding her protecting wings over this felonious contract.

Another phase of the work of this committee has been the efforts of Mr. BOYKIN's subcommittee on the investigation of the steel shortage situation. That matter has far reaching ramifications and may well result in the development of steel furnaces in more than 20 States of the country where ample iron ore deposits are present.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to first congratulate the gentleman for making this statement. I have very carefully read all those reports to which the gentleman has referred and I have studied this question as best I could, not being a member of the committee. Is it not true that your committee is forced to go along under an entirely dissimilar law to the machinery which governs the letting of Army and Navy contracts?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes. These are all cost-plus contracts.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under the Maritime Act of 1936 you are not in position to proceed as the Naval Affairs Committee and the Military Affairs Committee can proceed at this time? I think the gentleman is 100 percent correct when he says that this is the time and the proper procedure to take is the institution of a criminal action against those people who were guilty, then follow along as quickly as possible with such corrective measures as you can put through.

Mr. CULKIN. This is slightly in the vernacular, but I think the time has come when the Congress should see that everybody stops wet nursing these crooks. That is my view.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, and this is more or less generic, I am going to emphasize that the time has passed when the people of the country will be content with the Congress turning its business in toto over to the bureaucrats. The people of the country are now holding the Congress responsible for maladministration. The investigation offered by this resolution will give this committee authority to delve more fully into these outrageous performances and apply correctives to the situation. I think the result will be that many millions of dollars will be turned back into the Treasury and the bureaucrats will be brought vigorously to book. I urge the passage of the resolution.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the resolution provide for this committee to have about the same powers that have already been conferred upon the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes; just about the same general powers.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the gentleman at liberty to say whether or not in his opinion, based upon the progress that has been made by the committee, these errors, as we will call them, which have been made have been sufficient to interfere with the building of the ships we need so badly today? In other words, can the Commission function efficiently toward getting out these ships when machinations of this nature are going on?

Mr. CULKIN. I think the progress has been slowed down somewhat but I do not think it has been slowed down seriously. Personally, I do not agree with the type of ship we are building. I think we ought to have a faster ship. Instead of these 10-knot ships, I think we ought to have had 16-knot ships from the beginning. The 10-knot ships are not going to be any good after the war. Any submarine can overtake them now. However, the yards are generally doing a good job, with Kaiser and Higgins more or less pioneering.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York has made a very fine presentation to the House, but I wonder why the Maritime Commission, which has the responsibility and accountability, does not renegotiate these contracts. Why should the Army and Navy be forced to renegotiate contracts for airplane plants and armament plants and the Maritime Commission not renegotiate contracts for building ships, where profits range from 1,000 to 2,000 percent? In the first instance, the accountability and responsibility rests with the Maritime Commission and not with the Congress of the United States, which should not have to force the Commission to do it, as was done in the case of the Army and the Navy. If the Maritime Commission refuses to do it, then the Congress should do it, and the Committee on Merchant Marine should force the Maritime Commission to proceed at once to recover on contracts where the profits have been excessive. War profiteering smells just as bad under the Maritime Commission as it does by the War or Navy Departments.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, this has been called a war of production, and such it is. I have never doubted the ultimate outcome, because I know that the productivity of men enslaved to a state can never equal the productivity of freemen. Given the tools, our courageous men in the armed forces will do the job.

Many illustrations of our tremendous accomplishments on the home front under our time-honored system of free enterprise can be cited. They should be cited because, considered together, they put to shame those who say that our system is inefficient and cannot compete with foreign totalitarian systems. I want to talk about one great accomplishment.

We have in the Great Lakes the greatest natural inland watercourse in the world. Over their broad surfaces move tremendous quantities of freight, mostly in the holds of bulk carriers. I first became fully aware of the magnitude of this operation as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, when, in 1940, we were amending the Interstate Commerce Act. At that time, it was determined that this movement of freight in bulk on the Great Lakes was not competitive with other types of transportation and that regulation thereof was not in the public interest. I shared that view. Final action on the bill left unregulated those lake carriers whose exclusive business is the movement in bulk of raw materials so highly indispensable in the war effort, namely, iron ore, limestone, coal, and grain, to mention only the more important.

As a Representative from a Great Lakes State, I want to say for the record that the accomplishment of the Great Lakes fleet, first, in its contribution to the defense program, and, latterly, to the war effort, fully justifies the confidence and vindicates the judgment of the Congress. I will shortly relate the tonnages for 1940, 1941, and 1942, but I wish to preface those figures with a brief description of the extent to which war industries are dependent on this fleet.

These Great Lakes ships are the link connecting the great iron ore deposits of the Lake Superior region with about 95 percent of the Nation's iron- and steel-making capacity. Huge quantities of limestone and coal are also transported by the fleet for the steel industry. Producers of chemicals, utilities, railroads, and others are benefited by the efficiency with which the ships handle vast quantities of raw materials. The farm lands of the Northwest are also linked to the eastern mills and Atlantic seaports by the fleet. All industry in the Great Lakes Basin, the heart of industrial America, is directly served by this tremendously efficient mode of transportation. Its importance is illuminated by the fact that it is not an alternative to other routes or forms of transport. On the contrary, Great Lakes ships are the only means by which iron ore in sufficient quantity may be supplied to the steel mills in the Chicago, Cleveland, Youngstown, Pittsburgh, and other areas.

The tonnage of these last three seasons of navigation on the Great Lakes are successively records of performance. Prior to 1940 the record for iron ore transported in one season was 65,204,600 gross tons, and for all bulk commodities 138,574,441 net tons. Interestingly, this former iron-ore record was established in 1917. In 1940, 63,712,982 gross tons of iron ore and a total of 142,878,985 net tons for all bulk commodities were transported; in 1941, 80,116,360 gross tons of iron ore and a total of 169,020,975 net tons for all bulk commodities; in 1942, 92,076,781 gross tons of iron ore and a total of 178,577,828 net tons for all bulk commodities.

Iron ore, limestone, and coal are transported on the Great Lakes in some 345 United States and 57 Canadian ships specially designed and constructed for the handling of those commodities in bulk. While the average ship has a carrying capacity of about 9,000 tons, there are many cargoes of as much as 15,000 tons moved between the upper and lower lake ports. In a large measure, the efficiency of the fleet is explained by the rapidity with which those huge cargoes are loaded and unloaded. A cargo of iron ore is loaded at an upper lake port in about 3 hours and unloaded about 3 days later in a lower lake port in about 4 hours. The time of ships in port is constantly being reduced with accompanying increase in dispatch and operation. During the 1942 season of navigation great quantities of war materials literally flowed in these ships from the natural deposits to the consuming industries. The splendid achievement of the Great Lakes fleet in 1942 has been appropriately recognized by Chairman Nelson of the War Production Board and Director Eastman of the Office of Defense Transportation. This achievement is only one manifestation of the many accomplishments of free enterprise which is making it possible for the people of this Nation to prosecute total war.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. I congratulate the gentleman on his very able tribute to water transportation.

May I have the gentleman's reactions to this question: There is some suggestion now that the diversion at Chicago will be increased, which will lower the waters in the channel and make less the carrying capacity of these ships the gentleman has so ably described. The ships will then carry less tonnage. Does the gentleman think it is timely to do that now when these materials are needed in the war effort?

Mr. HALLECK. As the gentleman knows, the question of diversion has raged for quite some time, and I certainly do not claim to be an expert on that. When this season was opening the lake carriers were asked what they could bring down in the way of iron ore, and were asked to step up tonnage to almost unbelievable figures, because, except as the iron ore is brought down in these lake ships in ever-increasing amount the steel that is so badly needed in the war effort cannot be produced. I would say without hesitation that the maximum transportation of iron ore to the consuming steel mills must be maintained. And at least until the crisis is over and the war is won, anything that would be calculated to interfere with the efficiency and the absolute maximum of transportation by the Great Lakes vessels should be scrutinized with extreme care.

Mr. CULKIN. I thank the gentleman. May I ask him this further question. These vessels carry that ore on the lakes at a cost of about a mill per ton-mile, probably the lowest cost transportation in the history of the world. Does the gentleman believe that that could be benefited by regulation?

Mr. HALLECK. When the gentleman reads my speech in the RECORD tomorrow, he will find that I have something to say about the fact that the bulk movements on the Great Lakes are not competitive with any other system of transportation. They are not competitive because the charge per ton is so low, as the gentleman has pointed out.

Mr. CULKIN. There was a provision in the 1940 Transportation Act that would have made them subject to regulation, but that provision did not go through.

Mr. HALLECK. As the act was originally introduced, that is true. But the committee and the Congress properly eliminated that provision.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Is it not the opinion of the gentleman, insofar as the diversion at Chicago is concerned, that Congress will never grant a diversion that would injure the traffic on the Great Lakes? Does not the gentleman have confidence that the Congress will never do that?

Mr. HALLECK. I am not an expert on diversion, I may say to my very able friend from Texas. But I certainly do have confidence in the Congress and in its fairness in dealing with any problem of that nature.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I cannot resist the temptation to compliment the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] who just preceded me. He is an able and painstaking and studious member of the Committee on Rules. I think he has not in any way overestimated the need for water transportation, and although he has paid great tribute to the lake carriers, and the advantages that accrue to our country due to the Great Lakes and their uses in transportation, and the advantages that flow therefrom to that section of the country, yet he has omitted to state anything about the water transportation in which I know that he, as well as myself and many others in the Middle West, are greatly interested. We people in the frequently criticized city of Chicago, unfairly and unjustly criticized, without warrant, having a splendid administration and a mighty fine city, have expended over $200,000,000, which now seems a small sum when we think of the billions that we have been spending but an amount that years ago was a considerable sum, and that was expended to provide a deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. Every sane and sensible gentleman who is interested in cheap transportation, water transportation, must recognize that that was a great expenditure for one city to make, to bring about a closer cooperation and a shorter and better and cheaper haul between the Lakes and the Gulf of Mexico. Unfortunately, due to objections of our neighbors to the north and the west we have been deprived of the proper flow of water that would make that deep waterway as efficient as it should be.

I have endeavored to obtain an additional flow of water from the Great Lakes so as to make the Illinois River and its tributaries navigable for even larger boats than now ply those waters. Unfortunately the question has been raised, and it is entertained by some, that because of the additional amount of water that might be taken from the Great Lakes, it would lower the lake levels and may interfere with lake navigation, but the facts are that, notwithstanding that a certain amount of water has been taken from the Great Lakes, the lake levels are higher today than they have been in the history of the country, or at least for over 60 years, as the record will show. So that the objections raised by the neighbors of Illinois, namely, those of Michigan and Wisconsin and some other gentlemen, will not hold, and they should be reconsidered and our efforts consummated to make Chicago's $200,000,000 contribution for this waterway a fact, because it will be of vast benefit to commerce not only in Chicago, but to the entire Middle West. I hope that instead of objecting in the future, these gentlemen will cooperate with us and help us secure an additional flow of water, making that great waterway for the future and for the country's needs.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, while I am in accord with many of the things that my friend from Illinois does and advocates, yet I have to differ with him on this matter. The matter to which he referred has been really settled by a decision of the Supreme Court, and the Court has refused on at least four different occasions to reopen the case.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, I know that the Supreme Court——

Mr. CULKIN. Of course, I mean the old Supreme Court.

Mr. SABATH. I know that if the Supreme Court had the information that we have, and if it had used judgment that should have been used, I know it would reverse that decision, and that the original opinion of the former Secretary of War, and later President of the United States, Mr. Taft, would be followed, because in the first instance he allowed 10,000 cubic feet per second of water to be withdrawn. However, I am not asking that. We will be satisfied with 5,000 cubic feet and that will solve the situation without any injury to New York or any other State, because I assure the gentleman that I have had surveys made showing positively that the lake levels are higher today than they have been, as I say, in the past 60 years.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, while the previous resolution was under consideration, some of my colleagues were kind enough to express confidence in my ability to carry on that investigation in the committee of which I have the privilege of being chairman. I wish to thank them for that and I assure them that we will make every effort to do a constructive job.

I appear now on this resolution in behalf of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND], who unfortunately is ill and who has designated me as acting chairman in his absence.

I think the committee has done a good job so far. I know that the chairman of the committee has plans for the continued investigation of the South Portland situation and the Waterman case and the Tampa shipbuilding case, as well as all other matters connected with our shipbuilding program.

In order to keep the record straight, since the name of former Governor Brann and Mrs. Herrick have been brought into this discussion in connection with the South Portland case, we might well realize that a member of another body, of a different political faith from mine, serving on an investigating committee in that body, has taken a somewhat different view of the South Portland case. I mentioned that fact a while ago because I did not think it ought to be a political matter, but I do think that the Maritime Commission ought to cancel that contract.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I notice the gentleman stated that the name of former Governor Brann had been brought into the discussion. I was not present when that occurred. Would the gentleman enlighten me as to the manner in which that distinguished gentleman's name was brought into the discussion?

Mr. RAMSPECK. In a colloquy between the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] and some other Member on that side, the gentleman from New York made the statement that former Governor Brann had been employed by the South Portland Shipbuilding Co., and also Mrs. Herrick. He did not know whether that had anything to do with the failure of the Maritime Commission to cancel the contract or not, but the inference was that it might have had.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. I also said they were each getting the same amount as a Congressman's salary; that is, $10,000 a year.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from New York does not intend to say anything derogatory of Governor Brann, does he?

Mr. CULKIN. I think he is a most delightful gentleman. I do not know what his necessities are.

Mr. McCORMACK. And a very honorable gentleman.

Mr. CULKIN. Very charming.

Mr. McCORMACK. And very honorable, too.

Mr. CULKIN. Well, I would not indict him. I have seen him. I think he is a sincere and able gentleman. I will put it that way.

Mr. McCORMACK. A sincere and able gentleman covers everything. He is very nice and honorable.

Mr. CULKIN. And I know nothing about his necessities.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Georgia 2 additional minutes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I thought that matter ought to be cleared up for the information of the House. I do say that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] is one of the most conscientious and able chairmen that we have in the Congress. I think it can be said in all fairness that in part, at least, the reason he is in the hospital today is because of overwork in undertaking to investigate this situation. But it must be remembered that the Maritime Commission is the one agency of the Government that met its quota last year. We have built more tonnage and shipping under that agency than any other country ever constructed in the same time in the history of the world.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, 4 minutes, to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I believe the Civil Service Committee can render valuable service to the Government and to the country if it will really get down to business and make an investigation and study of the problem of Government employment. This matter of Government employment has become not only important but a gigantic problem.

At the close of World War No. 1 civil employment in Government reached a high of 917,000 employees. In the following years it dropped to 500,000. Then in the 1930's, bureaus and agencies multiplied and expanded so that by 1940, and before war preparations were under way, that number had increased to almost a million and a quarter Federal employees. Thousands were appointed without qualifying examinations, but were politically appointed. Thousands of these people were engaged in all kinds of new activities.

Mr. Speaker, the number of Federal employees now is about 3,000,000 and there are about 300,000 in and near the District of Columbia. Of course, we realize that it has been necessary to have great increases because of the tremendous job of prosecuting the war effort. There is also, however, the immediate responsibility of reducing and cutting to the core all agencies and activities that may have value in peacetime but not necessary now in the war effort.

As I have pointed out, we must have necessary men and women to carry on the war effort, but just because they can be secured, is no reason why we should employ more than are required to do the work. Our employees should be paid reasonable compensation for their services, and they likewise should be glad to serve accordingly, even if they are required to work a little more than during peacetime.

Mr. Speaker, let me say I believe the great majority of Government workers are conscientious and want to do a good job. They are willing to do their part. But, Mr. Speaker, the Government service is no place for loafers, idlers, and incompetents.

No one should be kept on the pay roll unless there is an important job for him. All duplication of effort should be cut out. Activities should be consolidated wherever possible even if it means transfers, or temporary demotions. There should be no favoritism. Let efficiency and industry be the reason for advancement.

Mr. Speaker, I believe government could be reduced as much as 25 percent or 30 percent right here in Washington if the matter is properly handled and government activity were put on a business basis. At the same time we could do even a better job than we are doing right now. There is a lot of discussion about manpower these days. The administration could do well by streamlining its own activities, and use its extra manpower and womanpower for more essential work.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I shall be glad to yield to the distinguished and able Member from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the gentleman feel that the Civil Service Committee can conduct an impartial investigation in this matter? I of course have the highest regard for every individual on that committee, but there is a tendency in all of us to become advocates of the subject matter coming within the jurisdiction of our committees. The impression is given that when your Committee on the Civil Service brings a measure in for consideration that you are acting for some group of Government employees. Is there not a tendency for your committee to become an employee's committee or agent?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I see no reason why the Committee on the Civil Service should not conduct a fair and impartial investigation; it certainly should be able to do it. It is not going to be a snooping committee or anything of that kind. I am sure it is going to go into this fairly and honestly and try if possible to see that we have more efficient service and less expense to the country. It is a tremendous problem. I believe the very fact that the committee is in existence will do a great deal.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor of a merit system, but I am not inclined to agree that everything that has been promulgated either by the Civil Service Committee of this House or by the Civil Service Commission has anything to do with the merit system. Too often it is to take care of the boys that are "in" who neither obtained or hold their jobs upon merit.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman from Nebraska well knows my position on this matter. I have always been for a competitive merit system in Government. I have opposed the principle of blanketing in of employees without competitive examination, although a lot of it was done in the last few years.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is in line with the previous resolution passed here for investigation today, one by the Military Affairs and Naval Affairs Committees and this one by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I hope the wrong impression has not gone out to the country about this matter. It is true that these committees have done splendid work, and I would not detract for one moment from the accomplishments of the Naval and Military Affairs Committees. I think this committee we are now considering should be continued without one dissenting vote. On the other hand, however, these investigations do not mean that these departments are not trying to look after this matter themselves. As Under Secretary of War Patterson said yesterday, the War Department is glad to have the cooperation of the committees, but they are trying to do everything they can at the same time along the same line. These committees are to be congratulated, but I do not think the impression should go out to the country that the War Department and the other departments connected with it are merely sitting up there and letting everybody get away with anything they desire. These committees are doing a fine thing. The people look to Congress to see that this waste and extravagance does not continue; but at the same time let us give credit where credit is due.

Something has been said about the Maritime Commission and about Admiral Land. I know of no man in public life today whose record can more successfully bear the scrutiny of public investigation than Admiral Jerry Land. He has done a splendid job as head of the Maritime Commission.

In closing, I repeat that it is a splendid thing to have these committees, and, as I say, I hope there will not be a dissenting vote on this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE AIR ACCIDENTS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman does that will he yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Is the gentleman bringing in a resolution from the Rules Committee to extend the life of the Select Committee to Investigate Air Accidents headed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS]?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I ask the gentleman if he will not kindly defer that, because many Members are absent. I discussed the matter with the minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]; he asked me to stay here and make this request, that it not be called up at this time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I had no knowledge that this was coming up today. On yesterday I announced that four resolutions would come up for consideration today. On yesterday I tried to get unanimous consent to adjourn from today until Monday, but this was objected to. It was my understanding that this resolution would come up tomorrow, Friday. I have not conferred with my distinguished friend from Illinois. May I ask if there is not another rule about to be reported dealing with small business, a bill from the Patman committee?

Mr. SABATH. The Committee on Rules reported that out this morning, but it will not be called up today.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman from Illinois insists on calling up this resolution to extend the Select Committee on Air Accidents today, I shall have to object.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman will not have to object; I will assume that responsibility myself.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Does the gentleman from New York intend to oppose this resolution?

Mr. FISH. No; the gentleman from New York is in favor of the resolution, but most of the Members have left thinking no other resolution was to be called up today. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the minority leader, has left, under the impression that it would not come up. Under these circumstances, I prefer that the gentleman's request go over.

Mr. NICHOLS. Of course, the gentleman understands what this is. It is simply a continuation of this committee until March 1 so that we can wind up and quit. We are trying to quit.

Mr. FISH. Some Members on this side, like myself, are in favor of it, but want it understood that extending this committee's life will not interfere with the creation of a permanent committee.

Mr. NICHOLS. We can give that assurance.

Mr. FISH. I am sure the gentleman will give that assurance. Nevertheless, Members have left the House and I do not want to be put in the position of objecting.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman will not be put in that position.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the majority leader and the statement of the gentleman from New York that he is speaking for the minority leader, I would be the last man in the world to urge consideration of the resolution today, notwithstanding that I feel there should not be any opposition to it. Consequently, I withdraw the resolution for the present.

THE LATE CHARLES KRAMER

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, it is a strange coincidence, in fact a regrettable one, that the occasion of my first speech in the Halls of this Congress should be to make the sad announcement of the death of my predecessor, Mr. Charles Kramer. However, it is an exemplification of the true spirit of this body that as a former political opponent I am given the honor of being able to be the first man on this floor to pay homage to Mr. Kramer.

Mr. Kramer passed away yesterday in the city of Los Angeles. While I did not have the privilege of personally knowing Mr. Kramer, after we have passed to the Great Beyond we are remembered by that which we have contributed for the welfare of our fellow man and our Nation. Mr. Kramer has served his district and the Nation in the Halls of Congress for the past 10 years. The fact he has heretofore been nominated on both minority and majority tickets in the primaries is tribute of the fact he has well served.

The true fighting spirit of Mr. Kramer was shown to me today when I was in the office of our esteemed Speaker [Mr. RAYBURN] and I heard another gentleman state to his secretary that he had just received a letter from Mr. Kramer. I interjected and stated that I had just received notice of his death. This gentleman was astounded because in Mr. Kramer's letter he had left the impression that everything was well. Surely this was a true American.

I join with the other Members of the California delegation in paying tribute to a former Member, your friend and my friend, Mr. Kramer.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, it was with a deep feeling of regret that I learned last night of the sad news of the passing of our former colleague, Mr. Kramer. He had the privilege of serving in this body for the past 10 years, and it was my good fortune to have known and served with him here during 8 of those 10 years.

Mr. Kramer was always interested, and aggressively interested, in the welfare of the people of his district and in their problems. He served them faithfully, assiduously, and vigorously. He had an assignment upon the Committee on Immigration while he was here, and at all times he was very anxious to do what he could to show his sympathy for the problems of the newcomers to our shores, but he was also ever watchful that the security of our Constitution was always maintained and was ever vigilant to preserve the Nation he loved so well from the infiltration of any undesirable elements.

As chairman of the Committee on Patents, Mr. Kramer brought into play his vast legal experience and was instrumental in having enacted much legislation providing for the betterment of our patent laws. Through his efforts, many changes were accomplished in patent legislation which have very materially aided our war activities and brought about a simplification in the utilization of patents in our war industries.

Before coming to California, Congressman Kramer, a native of the State of Kentucky, was educated in the schools of Chicago and attended De Paul University and the Illinois College of Law. He engaged in the practice of law in the city of Chicago from 1904 until the time of his removal to California in 1917. During this period he acquired the esteem and respect of the members of the Illinois bar, where he served with ability and distinction. Thereafter he continued to enjoy in California the same honored recognition during the years it was our privilege to know him there. In addition to his legal activities, he was also engaged in various financial and manufacturing enterprises.

Upon his election to Congress in November of 1932, Congressman Kramer brought to Washington a wide field of experience and knowledge which proved of inestimable value in his work here. Particularly of value was his wide legal experience, which proved most helpful to him in the investigatory work of the special committee assignment which was accorded to him during his first term of office as a Member of Congress. His spirit of patriotism and his love of country was exemplified when he became a member of the Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities some years ago, headed by our distinguished majority leader, Hon. JOHN McCORMACK. Mr. Kramer was very active on this committee. He worked hard and long because he felt that it was most important that we preserve this Government and preserve the Constitution under which this Government functions. Mr. Kramer likewise carried that message out to the people of his district. In his own unassuming way he did his utmost to see to it that the young school children of his district were instilled with a genuine love of country and a true spirit of patriotism. In his quiet way he encouraged that. On many occasions he presented flags to the schools and to the school children of his district in order that they might constantly have that symbol of this Nation before them, and learn to love and respect both flag and country.

I know his passing is a real loss to this body. He spent 10 years here and he was always vigorous and aggressive. Nothing pained him more than to realize during his last months that he was not able to give of his time and of himself to carry out the duties to which he had been assigned. We mourn with his wife and children his passing, and we pray God that he may have the reward of eternal rest and peace to which he is so justly entitled.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I know that every Member who served with our late friend, Charlie Kramer, felt grieved on hearing of his death yesterday.

The gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] referred to his service on a special committee to investigate un-American activities of several years ago, a committee of which I happened to be the chairman. I can give testimony to the strength of what the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] has said.

We were given $30,000 to make the investigation we did make. It was only as a result of sacrifice on the part of every member of that committee that the special committee was able to accomplish within the limited amount appropriated the great results that flowed from our investigation. Out of that investigation came the law compelling persons directly or indirectly engaged by any foreign government or agency of any kind for propaganda purposes in the United States to register. Under that law many indictments and convictions have been obtained of persons who have engaged in activities subversive to our country.

Out of that committee came the bill, later enacted into law, making it a crime for anyone to "knowingly or wilfully advocate the overthrow of our Government by force and violence." Prior to the passage of that provision of law the only legislation upon the books to meet subversive activities was the conspiracy statute, applying where two or more persons conspired to overthrow the Government. That meant that it was necessary to prove, first, conspiracy and, second, an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy, and it was practically impossible to do that. For all practical purposes the Conspiracy Act was a dead-letter law.

Other legislation, extending the power of the War Department and the Navy Department to meet the distribution of subversive literature, and of subversive activities in camps and on board ships, was enacted into law, all recommendations of the committee.

Our late friend from California played a very important part in the success of that committee, which I think has made a marked contribution by way of legislation to combatting the subversive elements that exist in our country.

As we all know, he was a very lovable character, a man with whom it was easy to get along, always with a smile on his face, but a man who was devoted to his duty. The death of our late friend is a personal loss to me. I know that all of those who served with him and the new Members who did not know him join with me in expressing and extending to Mrs. Kramer our profound feeling of sympathy in her great loss and sorrow.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the passing of our former colleague, Mr. Kramer, is a shock to the Membership of this House. Charles Kramer was a distinguished member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. I had opportunity to observe his activities on that committee. He was diligent and industrious and ever watchful that the rights of American citizens were protected and preserved. Charles Kramer was a real American. The members of his family have our sincere sympathy.

His life was gentle, and the elements
So mixed in his that Nature might stand up
And say, This was a man.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of personal loss of a good friend that I learned of the passing of our recent colleague Charles Kramer. He came to this House 10 years ago. He liked men; he loved his friends. He soon made many of them here. It was a pleasure to him to be helpful to others. That was a part of the happiness of his life so commonly reflected in a smile that seldom failed him.

Mr. Kramer's health began declining more than a year ago. All the years while he was here, up to that time he served his district to the satisfaction of its people to a remarkable degree.

He was in some instances influential in securing legislation highly creditable to him and useful to the Nation. I join with thousands of his friends in California in expressing an appreciation of him and an affectionate tribute to his memory.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with Charles Kramer dates back some 10 years to the time when he was first elected as a Member of Congress.

Charles was one of the most loyal friends I was privileged to make in this House. He served with me on the Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities, and it was our good fortune to assign to him the investigation of subversive activities on the Pacific Coast, which task he performed with integrity and a great deal of ability. He was able by his intelligent and conscientious method of cross-examining hostile witnesses to gain important facts which helped our Department of Justice to convict many spies and saboteurs.

He was also a member of my committee, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and his warm sympathy for the case of the downtrodden and underprivileged left its mark on the committee's legislative program as he was assigned many important tasks in connection with the legislation pending before our committee. Charles Kramer will long be remembered and his death at the expiration of his term of office was a serious blow to the Members of this House as well as to his family.

His personality will long be missed in the Halls of Congress, and those of us who were privileged to serve with him will forever cherish his memory.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, it is with a feeling of sadness that I learn of the death of our late lamented colleague, Charles Kramer, of California. I served with him for 10 years, and came to know him intimately well. He was an ardent and conscientious Member of this body. As chairman of the Committee on Patents, he contributed much to the arts and industries having to do with patents and appliances. He rightfully earned the respect and esteem of members of the patent bar.

As a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, he was fair and just in his attitude and ever kept in mind the paramount interests of the United States in the admission of refugees. On the other hand, neither did he lose sight of the fact that this country was built up out of the "blood, sweat, and tears" of refugees. He was ever mindful that his own forbears came from foreign shores. He ever struggled to make this land of ours a better place to live in, not only for these immigrants, but for all of us.

He was ever kindly, well disposed, and with a sweet disposition. I never heard him utter a harsh word of anyone. In his recent illness, he showed an unflinching courage and an indomitable spirit. He struggled valiantly against the physical disturbance that finally brought about his end, but all through that turmoil of body and mind, he never failed in his devotion to his duties as a Congressman.

My heartfelt sympathy goes to Mrs. Kramer and Charlie's loved ones. The Nation loses a loyal son, this body loses a staunch advocate, and I a true friend.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include some correspondence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] may have permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address by the Vice President of All-American Aviation before the Junior Traffic Club of Chicago, on January 14, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to speak for 30 minutes on Monday next at the conclusion of business on the Speaker's table and after any special orders that have been heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include notices from two Government agencies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Grinnell Herald-Register.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

THE HIGHWAY TO ALASKA

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, in 1935, after many years of discussion by the Governments of Canada and the United States, this Congress created the Alaskan International Highway Commission. Its purpose was to work under and with the State Department toward the completion of hemispherical agreements looking toward the completion of a highway to Alaska. Canada appointed a like commission. These two commissions, with various representatives of both Governments and with engineers, made a complete study of the entire terrain and the project's feasibility. Their efforts were met in some official quarters with enthusiasm, but in many others with complete apathy as to the importance of a means of access to the vital frontier that is Alaska.

Not only were recommendations made as to the feasibility of the project, but suggestions were also made to both Governments as to the route to be followed. The difficult task of coordinating all the various agencies—diplomatic, administrative and otherwise—of the two countries toward definite action during these years seemed almost insurmountable, and yet the crying need and justification for such roadway seemed to the Commissions to be apparent.

Even up to the outbreak of the war some military officials considered the highway to be of secondary importance; others were enthusiastic in their support. Interest, however, did not reach a peacetime pitch sufficient to sign the final treaty agreement, although step by step these two great countries were coming to the realization and to a practical working agreement to build this roadway. Hostilities with Japan clarified the whole matter, and the military necessity for such a highway superseded the peacetime commercial justification. The Army finally took the matter in hand and directed its engineering corps to proceed with this vital network to our northern front. Japanese activities hastened the conclusion.

Canada had built throughout certain portions of its northern provinces a series of airways leading to the Bering Sea and Asia. The military deemed it wise to connect up these airways with a so-called pilot road to Alaska. This reason was given as the basis for their decision of the route. Although the commissions and other Government officials had little or no knowledge regarding events leading up to this selection—nor were they asked for any suggestions regarding the possibility of routes—the military need as evidenced seemed an apparent justification for the so-called pilot road connecting the airports. Your commission questioned the feasibility of the route chosen as against the route determined by the joint highway commissions; however, it must be remembered that our selection was made under peacetime needs. In any event, the Army engineers got busy and did a marvelous job of completing the highway connecting the airports and on into Alaska within a short period of a few months. The two countries must not only admire but be proud of the great engineering task tackled and completed.

Trucks are now rolling over the so-called Alcan Highway, not only supplying vital needs to the air route and its fields, but also to our men in the northern armed forces. There has been some misunderstanding of the commission's attitude regarding the Alcan route. It was merely our contention—and I must admit it was based on peacetime observations—that the best possible route lies farther west, in the natural trough between the Rockies and the Coast Range. We merely offer the suggestion that this was the shortest possible way to Alaska and that this might be tackled first or even jointly with the so-called pilot road farther east, connecting the airports. Your commission, of course, has no objection or no valid criticism of the Alcan road for the purpose it was intended. We merely contend, however, that a further supply line to Alaska is needed up the before-mentioned natural trough.

All of the Alaskan highway has not yet been built, but it will be, we are sure, in due time. The complete highway to Alaska will be a continuation of a Pacific highway through Seattle, Vancouver and Prince George, thence northerly along the most direct and feasible route toward Whitehorse in the Yukon Territory, connecting up with the so-called Alcan route coming from the southeast. This would, of course, give us two approaches to our great territory and possession. This routing has been approved by both the United States and Canadian commissions.

The Alcan route is somewhat at present a different proposition. It is a well-constructed and, we must assume, a well-considered military road, primarily not only to connect the military airfields but to allow as much overland transport of military supplies as possible as an emergency war measure. It can be made suitable for all-time purposes and can fit into the plans envisioned for a permanent Alaskan highway, with connections to the east and to the Pacific coast, and in particular, a connection which parallels as closely as possible the commercial sea and air routes.

Your Commission can understand why, as a possible war project, the Province of Alberta prefers the development of an interior route as a main highway. We are confident that Canadians generally, and especially the residents of British Columbia, have the same adequate reason to press toward the completion of a so-called coastal route in order that both great sections of our country and Canada may project their commerce, trade, and military activities into Alaska and on to Asia.

Your Commission is going to continue its work toward the ultimate completion of these permanent highways to Alaska, and will give every cooperation to the military toward making the Alcan Highway an efficient proposition.

We have even expressed the prophecy that not many years hence will find both routes with broad, adequate roadways joining at some suitable, well-considered point in northern Canada and proceeding on, not only to the interior of Alaska, but on across the Bering Sea into Asia. It is then and then only that the dreams of those who have for many years fought for and advocated this great project will be concluded.

I know the House will be interested in a description of the opening of the marvelous Army achievement, the Alcan

Highway, not only because of its appeal to their great American sense of pioneering, but because this House, as a matter of far-sightedness, has for many years given me and my Commission every aid and encouragement in overcoming the difficulties incidental toward pushing this great project. Unfortunately, many of us interested could not be present at the ceremonies formally dedicating the Alcan Highway. Both Governments, however, were adequately represented. Present also was Lt. Richard L. Neuberger, aide-de-camp to Gen. J. A. O'Connor, who now commands the Alcan Highway. General O'Connor is one of the able brigadiers in the Army. This Congress can be assured that under his command things will run as smoothly as possible on this important network. Mr. Neuberger, prior to his entry into service, was one of the outstanding writers on economic and political questions on the Pacific coast. He writes to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. ANTHONY DIMOND] and myself as follows:

As Delegate in Congress from Alaska and as Chairman of the American Commission, you will be interested, I am sure, in some of the background of the opening ceremony. The most interesting features of any public event always occur in that twilight zone between its evident phases and the part which is wholly preparatory.

It was a ceremony international in character. Your friend, Bob Bartlett, led a representative delegation from Juneau. The Honorable Ian Mackenzie, of the Canadian Cabinet, headed an outstanding delegation from Ottawa. Gen. George R. Pearkes represented Canada's armed forces. In 1914 Pearkes was a constable in the Royal Mounted at Whitehorse. He told me that some of the territory he drove over en route to the ceremony he once patrolled on horseback in a scarlet tunic. When the first World War broke out Constable Pearkes resigned from the Mounted and enlisted in the Canadian Army. He won the Victoria Cross for valor and now commands the Pacific Command of his country.

Just as the construction of the highway demonstrated the ingenuity of our soldiers and workers on a large scale, the ceremony opening the highway demonstrated that ingenuity on a much smaller scale.

We had no printing press, yet programs seemed indispensable. What to do? Mimeographing was too colorless and drab. The blueprinting machine of the Public Roads Administration finally was pressed into service. Jean Ewen, Public Roads Administration design engineer, made some excellent Arctic drawings. Gay Pinkstaff, Public Roads Administration photographer, ran off the copies. The result was a program which many people thought was not only printed but actually engraved.

It was quite a task to find distinctive food because supply difficulties in the wilderness are enormous, as you know. We finally relied on nature's larder. Maj. Dick Luckow, whom you may remember as one of the men who helped build the Alaskan Railroad, sent out hunting parties. The result was moose meat, mountain-sheep steaks, and a thinned-out black bear. We gave all the groceries local names—viz, Dawson Creek crackers, Fairbanks cheese, and Slims River salad. The Slims River salad turned out to be lettuce and hot-house tomatoes, and we never succeeded in convincing any of the guests that the lettuce and tomatoes were picked right outside at 40 degrees below.

Where to hold the ceremony? This problem was a stickler for a month. Finally Col. T. W. Essig made a trip over the road. He selected Soldiers' Summit. This is a stretch of highway 1,500 feet above the wide swath of Kluane Lake. Above the road dark crags tower. Below, the lake is spread out like a vast inland sea. The setting symbolizes the fastnesses which the highway penetrates. Kluane Lake is approximately 100 miles east of the Alaska-Yukon international boundary.

The participants in the dedication ceremony, accompanied by newspaper correspondents and photographers, drove from Whitehorse to Kluane Lake on a day that the temperature crowded 15 below. Many feet, tender from the luxuries of civilization, were chilled by the time the new spruce barracks at Kluane were reached. Everyone slept that night dormitory style. The blueprinted programs were given out, and privates traded autographs with colonels. A Negro soldier asked General O'Connor for his autograph, and the general climbed out of his sleeping bag, put on his spectacles, and signed the soldier's program. "That's the epitome of democracy, isn't it?" Bob Bartlett asked Ian Mackenzie, as they watched.

When we went to bed, all of us were slightly apprehensive over the fact that neither General Pearkes nor General Ganong of Canada's Eighth Division had arrived. They had been delayed by bad flying weather but were expected later. I think I went to sleep about 10 o'clock. Sometime later I was awakened by a gentle padding on the lumber floor. I cautiously peeked out of a corner of the bag. General O'Connor, in his long underwear, with his fur cap on his head and his parka thrown around his shoulders, was tiptoeing to the door. He threw it open, and a lusty "Halloo there!" came through.

The red hat bands and lapels of British general officers appeared in the darkened portal and in walked Generals Pearkes and Ganong. I lay there in my sleeping bag and struggled between comfort and duty. The bag was warm and comfortable. Yet I was General O'Connor's aide. Could I stay in bed while he welcomed our latecomers? Soon from nearby another shape in long underwear emerged. It was Col. K. B. Bush, our chief of staff. He and General O'Connor, looking like union-suit advertisements, were convoying the Canadian generals to their bunks. My conscience overcame my drowsy laziness, and I got up and added my size 42 underwear to the scene. "You chaps look quite nifty in those," said Lt. Bob Sails, the aide to General Pearkes. This was British politeness at its kindest.

In the morning the ceremony was held. It was an event full of color, drama, and significance. Colonel Bush's hands became blue as he took off his gloves to read the statements received from yourself and many other distinguished men in public life. A long file of Royal Mounties stood at attention in their scarlet coats and leather boots. Their feet must have been as cold as anvils, but they stood as straight and rigid as signal poles. "Discipline and tradition account for that," said Colonel Bush and Inspector William Grennan, commanding the mounties in the Yukon Territory, nodded his assent.

All the speakers stressed the historic importance of what was taking place. Bob Bartlett presented an Alaskan flag sent by the Fairbanks chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, whose head is Mrs. Donald MacDonald. Colonel Bush described Donald MacDonald as a pioneer advocate of a land route to Alaska, and Bartlett said that the people of Alaska wanted their flag to grace the headquarters of the Northwest Service Command. Ian Mackenzie spoke most eloquently for Canada and brought an inspiring message from Prime Minister King.

The ceremony moved toward a natural climax. At its end Mackenzie and Bartlett were given a pair of scissors. These scissors had been especially engraved in Alaskan gold by William Osborne, pioneer resident of Juneau. Fittingly, Mr. Osborne's daughter is Mrs. Joe Crosson, the wife of the Arctic aviator who has saved so many lives. Mackenzie took one blade of the scissors, Bartlett the other. The crowd became tense. Then the blades closed and the red, white, and blue ribbon across the road was severed. In the cold and gloom of the Arctic morning an American Army band played God Save the King. Then the strains of The Star-Spangled Banner filled the snowy air.

As the basalt cliffs flung back the last strains of the music, a great cheer went up from the crowd. I hurried from General O'Connor's side and struggled to save the ribbon for posterity. The first truck bound for Fairbanks rolled forward as the band played The Maple Leaf Forever and Washington Post. At the wheel of this truck were two American Army enlisted men selected personally by General O'Connor—Corp. Otto Gronke, of Chicago, and Pvt. Bob Bowe, of Minneapolis.

The general had declared that rank-and-file soldiers, who did so much to construct the road, were to be given genuine representation at the ceremony. The ribbon was held by four enlisted men: Corp. Refines Sims, Jr., of Philadelphia, and Pvt. Alfred Jalufka, of Kennedy, Tex., representing the Whitehorse sector, and Master Sgt. Andrew E. Doyle, of Philadelphia, and Corp. John T. Reilly, of Detroit, representing the Fort St. John sector. Sims and Reilly are Negroes, symbols of the colored troops whose toil has played a material part in the 1,630-mile undertaking.

After the ceremony, lunch was served in the barracks. The smell of spruce pitch and wood grain was still in the air. Boughs hung from the ceiling. The crimson tunics of the Mounties mingled with the somber khaki of their American allies. We ate moose meat and mountain sheep. Cigar and cigarette smoke hung beneath the beams. The band played Johann Strauss' Tales From the Vienna Woods and the Blue Danube, lilting memories of a land which may soon be free. It was like some scene from a Graustarkian operetta. Inspector Grennan swayed his head to the gay waltzes, and so did the American mess sergeant who hurried along the tables seeing to it that no one's plate was empty.

It was an episode which will not soon be forgotten by those who participated in it. My own most vivid memory of it is the playing of our national anthem by the band at Soldiers Summit. As the music faded away and I looked around me at the stern faces of the American soldiers and at the grim countenances of the Mounties, I felt sure that in such a scene as this lay the future of the United Nations—that in the ability of us all, Canadians, Americans, and Alaskans, white and black, civilian and soldier, to fuse together our efforts in such a project as the Alcan Highway rests the hope of free peoples throughout the earth.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished Delegate from Alaska has again reintroduced H. R. 331, a bill to authorize the construction of a military highway to Alaska. This bill, in effect, provides for an additional route and highway up the natural trough between Prince George, British Columbia, Canada, and Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, Canada, along or in the general vicinity of the route which is called the A Route selected and designated as such by the Alaskan International Highway Commission pursuant to the authority of the act of Congress of May 31, 1938.

This bill, if enacted into law, would provide the connection mentioned above and would complete the necessary system of roadways not only needed in time of war to our greatest territorial possession, but would adequately meet the needs of a post-war development that is sure to come to the people of British Columbia, Northern Canada, Alaska, and our friends in Asia.

REPEAL OF THAT PORTION OF THE VICTORY TAX LAW WHICH REQUIRES CHURCHES TO BECOME FISCAL AGENTS OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein two letters, two newspaper articles, and two resolutions from a Baptist Church and a group of Protestant ministers protesting that portion of the Victory-tax law which requires churches to become fiscal agents of the Federal Government in collecting the Victory tax from their pastors and other employees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, on October 21, 1942, the Seventy-seventh Congress passed what is known as the Revenue Act of 1942. One portion of that act is, I think, grevious and wrong. Under the provision for imposing a 5-percent Victory tax, churches and religious bodies are made revenue-collecting agents of the Federal Government by being compelled to withhold, report, and pay to the Government 5 percent of the wages of their pastors and other employees with heavy penalties provided under this law for any church or religious organization that conscientiously declines to act as a fiscal agent of the Federal Government. This portion of the 1942 Revenue Act forces church people to violate the dictates of their conscience, by merging the institutions of church and state thereby violating the sacred principle of absolute separation of these two institutions and violates the spirit of the Bill of Rights and the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Ministers and churches do not protest the paying of the Victory tax, they are glad to pay it, but they do protest this infringement upon the sovereignty of church organizations and the making of churches revenue-collecting agents of the Federal Government. This grievance imposed upon the churches of America should be removed and removed at once.

WILBURTON MINISTERIAL ALLIANCE,
Wilburton, Okla., January 14, 1943.

Representative PAUL STEWART,

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE STEWART: Herewith, a set of resolutions passed by the Ministerial Alliance of Wilburton, Okla., relative to the Federal Victory tax law in its relation to church organizations.

We do not seek an exemption from this tax We only ask that the employees of the church be allowed to pay it rather than using the church as a tax-collecting agency.

Yours sincerely,
GUY C. HALL, President,
HERBERT M. PIERCE, Secretary.

PETITION TO CONGRESS FROM THE MINISTERIAL ALLIANCE OF WILBURTON, OKLA.

Whereas under the Federal tax law known as the Victory tax law churches and religious bodies are made revenue-collecting agents of the Federal Government and are required to withhold, report, and pay to the Government 5 percent of the wages of their pastors and other employees, with heavy penalties provided under this law for any organization which conscientiously declines to act as a fiscal agent; and

Whereas the Protestant position has consistently been that there should be complete and absolute separation of church and state and said law violates this fundamental religious principle by requiring churches to act as tax collecting agents of the Government, violating the spirit of the Bill of Rights: Therefore be it

Resolved—

1. That we, the members of the Ministerial Alliance of Wilburton, Okla., as individuals cheerfully pledge support to the Government in its efforts to collect the Victory tax.

2. However, we deplore the act insofar as it calls upon church people to violate the dictates of their conscience by merging the institutions of church and state and obviously violating the spirit of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

3. While we even now are engaged in a war for our very survival, we respecfully petition Congress not to legislate laws that will infringe upon the freedom of religion and thus tend to divide the Nation.

4. We therefore earnestly petition Congress that immediate action be taken to repeal that portion of the Victory tax law which requires churches to become fiscal agents of the Federal Government.

Respectfully submitted.

GUY C. HALL.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH,
Atoka, Okla., December 29, 1942.

Hon. PAUL STEWART,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have not had the privilege of meeting you, but I was pastor in Norman when you were in the Senate and took that house cleaning at the university and got rid of that bunch of Communists. Since that time it has given me a great deal of pleasure to follow your political successes. It is with pleasure to us all that you have taken our Brother Davis as your secretary. I know that you will have the confidence of our people with him in that capacity.

The purpose of this letter is to ask you to investigate and if it is consistent with your views, oppose the making of churches collectors of taxes in the matter of the Victory tax. Let me assure you that we do not oppose the tax as such, neither do we try to avoid it nor oppose its purpose, but rather we are afraid of the imposition of this requirement on churches will violate our American principle and cardinal Baptist doctrine of the "separation of church and state." Once the camel's nose is in the tent the whole beast will be in.

Let me refer you again to your secretary. He will tell you exactly how we feel about it.

We want to win the war; soon, now. Our church has 70 men and boys now fighting on the far-flung battlefields of the world and we want to preserve these liberties for them. I am not a letter writer to Congressmen, but I could not fail here. Will you kindly investigate it for us and give us representation in this matter?

Sincerely,
ANSON JUSTICE, Pastor.

MINISTER FIGHTS VICTORY LEVY—"IT'S NOT THE TAX, IT'S THE PRINCIPLE"

Holding his Bible in one hand, gesturing with the other, the Reverend Thomas Boorde, of Anacostia Baptist Church, today lambasted collection of Victory tax from church salaries and disclosed that a movement against the levy had developed among ministers.

Thumbing to Mark 12:17, the minister read: "And Jesus answering, said unto them, render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's."

The Reverend Boorde opposed the method of collection of the tax, not the tax itself, he explained. He broached the subject yesterday from his pulpit. Expanding today, he said:

"Clergymen and all other employees of the church should pay taxes because they are citizens, but the church should never become a tax collector. That is a violation of the separation of church and state."

His first weekly salary this year was minus the levy. His plans against deduction at source pends decision of "a group of ministers and others," he asserted.

PETITION TO CONGRESS FROM THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF WILBURTON, OKLA.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH,
Wilburton, Okla., January 6, 1943.

Whereas under the Federal tax law, known as the Victory tax law, churches and religious bodies are made revenue-collecting agents of the Federal Government and are required to withhold, report, and pay to the Government 5 percent of the wages of its pastor and other employees, with heavy penalties provided under this law for any church organization that conscientiously declines to act as a fiscal agent; and

Whereas the Baptist position has consistently been that there should be complete and absolute separation of church and state, and said law violates this fundamental religious principle by requiring churches to act as tax-collecting agents of the Government, violating the spirit of the Bill of Rights: Therefore be it

1. That we, the members of the First Baptist Church of Wilburton, as individuals, cheerfully pledge our support to the Government in its effort to collect the Victory tax.

2. However, we deplore this act insofar as it calls upon church people to violate the dictates of their conscience by merging the institutions of church and state and obviously violating the spirit of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

3. While we even now engage in a war for our very survival we respectfully petition Congress not to legislate laws that will tend to infringe upon the sovereignty of church organizations, which course would doubtless tend to divide the Nation, or to remove any safeguards to the preservation of the priceless heritage of religious freedom.

4. We, therefore, earnestly petition Congress that immediate measures be taken toward the repeal of the Victory tax insofar as it requires church organizations to become fiscal agents of the Federal Government.

[From the Orthodox Baptist, Ardmore, Okla., of December 10, 1942]

SHALL BAPTIST CHURCHES COME UNDER BUREAUCRATIC CONTROL?—THE VICTORY TAX MAKES NO EXEMPTIONS FOR THE LORD'S HOUSES

One of our Baptist editors recently wrote, "We believe that our churches and other denominational organizations can consistently assist the Government in collecting or withholding the taxes of individual employees, without violating any of our cherished principles. As a matter of fact, churches and denominational organizations are already paying taxes to the Government in one form or another, largely as emergency war measures.

Churches and various denominational institutions and organizations pay State or Federal tax, or both, on every long distance telephone call and telegram above a certain amount; on every gallon of gasoline used by such bodies; on railroad and bus tickets charged up to such organizations as legitimate traveling expenses, etc."

Now, let's look at this committal.

As a matter of fact, pastors who charge up to their churches the taxes they pay to the Federal Government on transportation tickets should be fired for compromising their churches by such deeds. Any pastor who would involve his church in any such a way loves himself too much to safeguard our faith.

As a matter of fact, our churches in Oklahoma do not pay State tax on long-distance telephones. The attorney general of this State stopped the practice of the State collecting toll taxes from churches by a special ruling and churches have already been reimbursed for the taxes paid out before this ruling came. Churches today do pay taxes on long-distance calls to the Federal Government. The First Orthodox Baptist Church of Ardmore pays this tax under protest, and expects to be reimbursed by the United States Government for the same. All churches should petition Congress to remove this grievance.

As a matter of fact, the Victory tax does not differ in principle from the social-security tax. Both are money-getting measures. Both would bring our churches under bureaucratic control, and it is the bureaucratic control that we must resist. The amount of money our churches would have to put up under the social-security tax might not be burdensome, but the bringing of our churches under bureaucratic control in its application would be grievous. The amount of time required of our churches to withhold said Victory tax, and then to send the money to Federal bureaus, with sworn statements concerning the honesty of the transactions, might not be great, but the bringing of our churches under bureaucratic control, making it legally possible for bureaucrats to come into our church offices and demand our church books and subject the Lord's workers to insults would be grievous—so grievous that no pastor and no church will willingly submit to such a thing.

James Otis once shouted, "Taxation without representation is tyranny," and he was right. Today we can shout from the housetops, "Bureaucratic control of our churches without church representation is tyranny." Since churches have no representation in Congress, and since they are barred both by the Bible and by the Constitution from such representation, then to impose bureaucratic control upon churches is tyranny.

The very moment our churches are made subject to bureaucratic control then our rights are flouted and our historic and cherished principles are outraged. Our Baptist forebears, during the dark ages, died by the millions before they would yield our cherished rights and doctrines to State control. If today we refuse to protest the invasion of the State into our church affairs, then we have already consented to the devil's program of socialization. Yea; even more than that, we have already confessed thereby that we are willing to play the role of spiritual blockheads for the sake of conformity. God forbid!

As touching the editor's statement above, we are mantling it with charity, assuming that the editor had not had an opportunity to read the tax bill before he made his committal. He is a good man, even though he is grievously wrong in what he says.

Our churches can neither scriptually nor constitutionally accept bureaucratic control. While the Master paid His personal tax to the Roman Government, He proclaimed the principle of complete separation of church and State when He said to His critics, "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's," Matthew 22:21. Our Constitution likewise provides for complete separation of church and state in the first amendment to our Constitution. The amendment says, "Congress shall make no law respecting establishment of religion or of prohibiting the free exercise thereof." The builders of our historic Democracy laid the framework for complete separation of church and State in this provision, and our Government should honor the same.

We have been amazed over and over at the thoughtless attitudes assumed by Christian leaders during the past 10 years. During this time we have witnessed movement after movement initiated by Washington left-wingers, all calculated to invade the rights of churches, and that without much protest from worshippers. 'Tis the business of the devil to put churches in chains. He has largely succeeded all over the world. He will not be satisfied until he brings the free churches of America under complete bureaucratic control. Surely there is much wisdom in the old adage, A stitch in time saves nine, and surely the application of this wisdom would cause every church in America to protest any act of Congress which would crimp the freedom of our churches. Brethren, our churches must continue free.

Personally, we shall be happy to pay the Victory tax, or any other tax needful to win this war. We believe that church employees all over the country will also be glad to so do. Accordingly, we are not protesting against the tax—we want to pay it, but we are protesting against our churches being made collecting agencies, without their will or consent, and contrary to the Scriptures and the Constitution of the United States.

Writing under the caption, "Shall Baptist churches go to jail?" Editor John D. Freeman, of the Western Recorder, says of the Victory tax:

"At first glance it might not seem to be a matter of any great moment when a church is asked to act as a collecting agency of the State. But is it? The power that can say to a church, 'You deduct 5 percent of the salary paid each and every one whom you employ or else,' can readily usurp the power to say to the same church, 'You will be bound by our rules both as to whom you employ and under what conditions * * *.' It will be a sad day indeed for all citizens of this land when the sacred rights guaranteed us under the Constitution as amended during its early days, have been taken away from us. 'Boring from within' is a process of gaining control which is both subtile and subversive. It may be that the authors of the Victory tax bill never once thought of all that is implied in it and how vitally it will affect the free church groups of our Nation. It is not too late, however, for them to undo the damage already done to the morale of the Nation and to make such alterations in the enforcement provisions of the bill as to free the churches both from the necessity of becoming agents of the Federal Government and of having held over their heads the threat of heavy fine and jail sentences if they fail to collect the tax.

"As we have already notified one influential Congressman, the bill must be altered or else we face almost certainly the spectacle of seeing Baptists go to jail in America for their religious beliefs."

Thus this good editor speaks out of his heart. He truly sees the import of the failure of Congress to exempt evangelical churches from bureaucratic control.

Dr. R. G. Baucom, vice president of the Baptist General Convention of Texas, writing in the same issue of the Western Recorder, in which Editor Freeman speaks, says:

"This provision of the bill is a clear violation of the separation of church and state and of the Bill of Rights, and the committee so states in the resolution. Furthermore it opens our churches to bureaucratic control. Nearly everything else except churches has been under bureaucratic control during the past 10 years, and now the churches are to be told what to do. This gives the Federal Government the right to check our churches' finances."

Dr. Baucom quotes a prominent southern Baptist pastor as saying:

"This (the Victory tax) is the entering of the camel's nose into the tent to put our churches under a dictatorship."

And he quotes another as saying:

"I wish I could feel that there was nothing back of this other than an oversight."

Dr. Baucom protests making our churches become collecting agencies of the Government. In that protest he is eminently right. We are happy to note we do not stand alone on this important matter. Baptists everywhere will so react, once they understand.

Then one inquires, "What can we do about it?" Answer: We can send memorials to our Congressmen and to our Senators affirming our desire to help finance the war, and petition them to get our churches exempted from bureaucratic control, and request them to secure a way for church employees to pay the Victory tax without involving our churches. We believe that such procedure would get results. Remember: Let our churches and denominational bodies act, and act at once. Let them petition our Congressmen and our Senators for relief, and we believe the job will be done.

Some action has already been taken. We trust that action will become widespread. Let our churches get busy now. Today is the day to work to prevent our churches from coming under the control of the state.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from Mr. Walter Dooley, of Anaconda, Mont.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Sprague Holden in the Detroit Free Press under date of January 16 commenting on the Grand Old Party's New Stand by Harrison Spangler.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD two brief poems as they appeared in the Zion Herald of the issue of November 11, 1942.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and all other special orders, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL] may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an article on the Old Telegraph Trail.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I received consent 2 or 3 days ago to extend my remarks and include certain material. The printer informs me that the cost will be $157.50. Notwithstanding that, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes after other special orders are concluded today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday next, after the legislative business has been disposed of and any other special orders, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include three editorials on the work of the Tolan committee of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to ask the floor leader a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the majority leader inform the House as to the program for the rest of the week, if we are to have one?

Mr. McCORMACK. I submitted a request yesterday that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next, and that was objected to. Tomorrow there will be two resolutions reported from the Committee on Rules extending the life of the small business committee and also a resolution in connection with the closing up of the special committee of which the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] is chairman. I know of no business on Saturday.

Mr. MICHENER. I take it then that the gentleman expects to adjourn over tomorrow until Monday.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not like to punish and I do not like to react. I think my friend from Michigan gets my point of view.

Mr. MICHENER. In other words, the gentleman is averse to making such a request?

Mr. McCORMACK. I shall make it now, just to see what interesting results we get. Mr. Speaker, I ask now that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I shall object, but I want to reserve the right now, in view of the panning the gentleman from Massachusetts is trying to give me.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman is going to object, I think he should object.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And I would like to ask if these gentlemen on either side, the assistant leader of the minority and the leader of the majority, advocate the 40-hour week in congressional service, or whether they have any aversion to serving the people 6 days a week?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, in answer to that question the gentleman from Michigan may kid some people outside, but he cannot kid me.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I think that would be impossible.

Mr. McCORMACK. Not yet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I object. The people on November 3 last—and I am sure that the majority leader and the assistant minority leader both are aware of it—registered their disapproval of a rubber-stamp Congress, of a Congress which failed to enact legislation which would have prevented the present labor troubles. If there is any valid reason why we should not now continue in session from day to day and work on legislation which will prevent further inflation, additional delay in our war production, I am not aware of it.

SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (H. Res. 18, Rept. No. 14) for printing, under the rule, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of nine Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a study and investigation of the problems of small business, existing, arising, or that may arise because of the war, with particular reference to (1) whether the potentialities of small business are being adequately developed and utilized, and, if not, what factors have hindered and are hindering such development and utilization; (2) whether adequate consideration is being given to the needs of small business engaged in nonwar activities, or engages in the transition from nonwar activities to war activities; (3) whether small business is being treated fairly and the public welfare properly and justly served through the allotments of valuable materials in which there are shortages, in the granting of priorities or preferences in the use, sales, or purchase of said materials; and (4) the need for a sound program for the solution of the post-war problems of small business.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) as soon as practicable during the present Congress the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to employ such personnel, to borrow from Government departments and agencies such special assistants, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member designated by him, and shall be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order which was granted me for today be changed to tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ZIMMERMAN). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

NAZI ATROCITIES AND PUNISHMENT

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, we need not wait for history to do our judging. We have stood and stand witness to crimes so enormous that we find not its scope in the story of mankind. In viewing the history of horror that are the Nazi and Fascist regimes, we face, however, a serious danger. Because story follows story of mass executions, of forced labor, of deportations, and internments, of the deliberate and systematic murder of millions of minority peoples in occupied and conquered territories, our minds and hearts must fiercely fight against becoming inured to these unspeakable atrocities. Repetition must not dull our senses into helpless acceptance. Each tale of outrage is just not another story. Each one must stand alone in violent condemnation of the perpetrators, for example, the number of Jewish victims deported or perished since 1939 in Axis-controlled Europe now reaches the appalling figure of 2,000,000 while 5,000,000 are in danger of extermination. Hitler and his jackals seek complete destruction of the Jews of Europe. Not since the days of Genghis Khan or Attila have we witnessed such horrors of mass torture and murder.

In the sight of God and men let the guilty be named and brought to punishment.

I am in wholehearted accord with what President Roosevelt has stated concerning the post-war world, namely, that the United Nations must set up the machinery to disarm and keep disarmed Germany and those parts of the world which would break the peace. "We must pull the fangs of the predatory nations of the world."

I am in wholehearted accord with what Vice President WALLACE has stated, namely, that the United Nations must devise means for preventing economic warfare and enhancing economic peace between nations.

To these ends there must be set up an over-all international council to determine policies of peace and an over-all international court to interpret and determine policies of this peace, and before which court shall be hailed offenders against the spirit and word of treaties. An international police force composed of services of land, air, and sea will have to be set up to enforce the pronouncements of this court and the decrees of this over-all world council. There may have to be some sort of psychological disarmament of Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy and the development of the modus operandi whereby the moral regeneration of these offending nations can be assured.

This might involve supervision and rigid control of the teaching and curricula of the so-called volkschule gymnasium, Hochschule or universities. This might require teaching the new generation of German and Italian youth to shun the totalitarian and embrace the democratic way of life.

But in keeping with these plans for world reorientation, what of the personal punishment of those who are the war guilty—the Nazi culprits who have violated the laws of nations and offended against the cannons of humanity?

I give you a quotation from a newspaper: "The establishment of a grand court of Allied representatives, civil and military, for the purpose of trying those guilty for crimes during the war is advocated." What paper was it and what was the date? It sounds like the New York Herald Tribune of yesterday. Actually, it was the London Daily Express of November 4, 1918.

Here is a headline: "Atonement for Atrocities"; subhead: "To pass this over would be to ignore a vital issue in the war." That has a familiar ring. But it appeared at the beginning of a letter in the New York Times of January 21, 1918. The writer drew attention to the lists that were prepared by the French of acts of wantonness, but the writer added, "We hear nothing of a definite nature respecting reparation along these lines." He asked that the thieves make reparations and the murderers be called to justice.

In 1918 John Hayes Hammond proposed an atrocities court to be made up of distinguished jurists of neutral countries to try perpetrators of atrocities. He added that if this were not done and the responsible directors of these inhuman acts are—to be given asylum in any civilized country, the great task before the peace conference of setting up a new and better dispensation for mankind will be intrigued by the sense of bitterness which unpunished barbarity cannot fail to engender in the most humane spirit.

Theodore Roosevelt, the same year, said:

Put them behind the bars; put them in a padded cell.

When we have struck the sword from the hands of the Prussian Junkers, as we are bound to do in self-defense, shall we parley with them as defeated equals, or proceed to punish them as offenders against the laws of God and man?

Was that a question propounded in the House of Representatives last week? No. It was culled from an article called Peace Without Amnesties, from the October 1918 issue of the Nineteenth Century.

When the time arrives His Majesty's Government is determined to bring to justice the criminals, whoever they may be and whatever station they may occupy. To such cases as these, the authors of the system under which such crimes are committed may well be the most guilty of all.

Were these words spoken in the British Parliament yesterday? No. They were the words of Mr. Asquith in 1918.

I have delved into the files of the Library of Congress and have found literally hundreds of articles and editorials, all urging the setting up of courts of some sort to try the Huns, as they were then called, for their barbarities, from the Emperor Wilhelm down. All these pronouncements are practically word for word with the proposals we read in our papers, periodicals, and books of today. The will was there then as it is now. We failed then; we dare not fail now. The question remains now whether to belie our conscience or to flay the conscience of the Nazis.

Far more horrendous than in the last war have been the scientific atrocities inflicted by the Nazis and Fascists upon the people of the conquered provinces. If the cry for vengeance in 1918 was strong, how much more piercing should that cry be today? But that cry today should not be in vain.

The Versailles Treaty demanded that Wilhelm 2d, of Hohenzollern, the former German Emperor, be publicly arraigned and tried for his supreme offenses against international morality and the sanctity of treaties. The Government of the Netherlands was requested to surrender him to the end that he might be brought to trial. Through miserable intrigue by the royal families of Europe, the Government of the Netherlands refused the request. The Kaiser continued his woodchopping in comfortable exile as the squire of Doorn. Thus we embarked on our journey of appeasement.

A list of 900 culprits to be tried had been prepared by the associated powers, among whom were the Kaiser, the Crown Prince, Field Marshals Hindenburg and Ludendorff, Count Bismarck, and Admiral von Tirpitz. They were accused by the so-called Commission of Fifteen of the peace conference of the following:

Murders and massacres, tortures, shields formed of human beings, execution of hostages * * * the massacre of prisoners, attacks on hospital ships, the poisoning of springs and of wells, etc.

This Commission of Fifteen recommended the setting up of an international judicial tribunal composed of three members appointed by each of the five chief Allied governments, and one by each of the governments of the lesser powers. This court was to try these 900. It was to determine its own procedure. The recommendations of the commission, however, were not followed. Significantly, the American representatives were the first to make reservations. They refused consent to the unprecedented, as they put it, proposals of creating an international criminal tribunal. The Japanese also had reservations. Debate, connivance, and intrigue then resulted in the conclusion that the German Government was to hand over the accused for trial before military tribunals of the powers against whose nationals the alleged crimes were committed.

In other words, the trial courts were to be national instead of international. France demanded then the surrender by the Reich of 334 persons accused. Britain demanded 100. Belgium demanded 265, and so on. Germany then had the effrontery to state that a political and economic revolution would rend Germany and topple the entire peace structure if these requests for extradition were granted. By way of compromise it suggested that all persons accused of war crimes be tried by the Supreme Court of the Reich at Leipzig. It consisted of seven Hun judges. The allies cowardly consented. Imagine these criminals being tried by their own countrymen. It would be like the Hitler jackals of today being tried by members of their own Gestapo. In the meanwhile the 900 names had dwindled to 45. It is a sad commentary that to this last list Britain contributed only seven names and we contributed none. The Germans continued to offer all manner of subterfuge and excuses. The Oberreichsanwalt—public prosecutor—in Leipzig complicated matters by legalistic pettifogging. Two and one-half years of bickering, scheming, and claptrap ensued. Meanwhile the British reduced the number of named guilty from 7 to 4. As a typical illustration of this gigantic farce, the Germans nonchalantly said they could not bring U-boat commander Patzig to trial because he had to deliver an address in Danzig.

Suffice to say, that of the whole number, 12 were actually tried and of these, 6 were acquitted. Two naval lieutenants received 4-year sentences and the other four received sentences of 6 months in jail. The two naval lieutenants, who were supposed to spend 4 years in jail, contrived to escape. The sum and substance of this attempt at international justice was 6 months in jail for four culprits. That indeed is the quintessence of absurdity—a mere international wink of the eye. It is a pathetic picture indeed.

We dare not repeat this mockery. But the same isolationist and parochial forces that balked Wilson and caused us to shirk our responsibilities are again afoot. They would again hold their skirts around them as if Europe were a carrion. They are again, as the President said, seeking to climb into an American hole and pull the hole in after them. They fail to realize that there are no longer any Maginot lines, be they in the form of chains of fortresses or oceans. Neither time nor space protects us from the furies of war. Only in mutual arrangements with other nations, who see eye to eye with us, can we accord future generations any protection. And in that unity, we may have to swallow, somewhat, our pride and to give up something of our sovereignty in order to get in return international peace and comfort for the years to come.

But that accord or comity with other nations must be implemented by punishment of the war guilty. In that regard, we dare not fail a second time. We beat the Nazis once; we will beat the Nazis again, but we may not be able to beat them a third time. Their punishment must be thoroughgoing and complete. Otherwise, they shall rise again to smite us.

Russia has no qualms on that subject. She is proceeding vigorously in her preparations to punish the guilty. She has appointed an Extraordinary State Commission whose purpose is to investigate now, not after victory is won, the loss of life and the damage to property caused by the Nazis, and to sentence now these Herrenvolk murderers. To indicate her seriousness of purpose, a Soviet trade-union leader is chairman. Among its members are a brain surgeon, a historian, a distinguished writer, and a woman pilot. They have already started their work and garnered and sifted much evidence and are soon to call some of the raging fiends to the bar of justice. It is interesting to note that no so-called diplomats are on the roster of these judges.

Why should we not immediately follow suit and set up now a commission to try these accursed scoundrels and to mark down their brutalities, to sentence them, even in absentia? If the Bill of Rights requires trial by jury and confrontation of witnesses and thus precludes civil trial, then let us set up military tribunals under the Articles of War where the Bill of Rights is not applicable. We should immediately try and mark out for retribution every known gauleiter, wehrmacht junker, every member of the S. S. regiments, the Gestapo, the Waffen S. S. Schutzstaffel, the Black Shirts, Hlinka Guards, all members of the Brown Shirts, the Uschla—Nazi punitive courts—and all who directly or indirectly are connected with the Nazi and Fascist Parties.

Our great President has stated:

> When victory has been achieved, it is the purpose of the Government of the United States to make appropriate use of the information and evidence in respect to these barbaric crimes of the invaders, in Europe and in Asia. It seems only fair that they should have this warning that the time will come when they shall have to stand in courts of law in the very countries which they are now oppressing and answer for their acts.

Bravo, Mr. President, but with one correction. Why should we have to wait until victory has been achieved? It is imperative to act now. We can prepare indictments now. We must try these brutes now. Hitler, Goering, Ribbentrop, and Goebbels have made of Europe a charnel house. Himmler has converted most of Czechoslovakia into a caravan of death. Horthy in Hungary, Antonescu in Rumania, Anton Adrian Mussert in Holland, Quisling in Norway, the stooges of Hitler, have inflicted indescribable atrocities upon the innocent.

Karl Rudolf Werner Best, chief jurist of the Gestapo, writes:

> History teaches that annihilation of an alien people is not contrary to the laws of life provided the annihilation is complete.

Poland is the proving ground of that plan of annihilation. Jews by the thousands are herded into cattle cars only to die of suffocation. Electricity, machine guns, starvation, lethal gases are the weapons of Nazi scientific barbarism. Each Jewish corpse, for example, has a utility value of 50 reichsmarks. The bodies are used to supply fat and the bones are used for fertilizer. Why should not these Nazi hyenas be brought to the bar of justice now? What reason is there to prevent their being given their own brand of punishment?

The New York Times recently commented editorially as to the Nazi war of extermination:

> The accomplished facts which the Nazis seek to create are forcefully indicated by the fears of refugee governments in London that the nations they represent face extermination or permanent crippling unless they can obtain aid this year. Hundreds of thousands of many nationalities have already been deliberately slaughtered by the Gestapo, millions have died of famine and privations, and the remnants of some smaller nations are now being deported, transplanted, brutalized by slavery or terrorism or—as a particularly cunning measure—pitted against one another in internecine strife.

A dispatch from Sweden, under date of January 18, is as follows:

> How Norwegians are being forced to accept the services of Quisling clergy, who do not shy at taking bodies from undertakers with police aid to perform "new order" funerals, and how the Quisling police forcibly drag children from their parents for the so-called youth front are revealed in the new year message of the Interim Church Council.

What about the Benedict Arnold broadcasters?

There emanate nightly from Germany and Italy short wave broadcasts by Nazi and Fascist radio broadcasters who unfortunately are Americans. These traitors are Constance Drexel, Fred Kaltenbach, Douglas Chandler, Jane Anderson, Ezra Pound and Robert H. Best. Douglas Chandler bradcasts under the pseudonym of Paul Revere. Fred Kaltenbach broadcasts under the salutation of Dear Harry. Constance Drexel entitles her traitorous utterances "News from Germany." Robert H. Best uses the alias Guess Who. He also urges Americans to write to their Congressmen to impeach Roosevelt. Jane Anderson apparently broadcasts from Italy and is introduced usually as a famous orator. Ezra Pound opens his damnable talk with a sort of verbal Fascist salute.

The Constitution, by article III, section 3, says that treason, among other things, consists in adhering to our enemies and giving them aid and comfort. Beyond doubt, these modern radio Benedict Arnolds are daily giving aid and comfort to our enemies by attempting to lessen our confidence in our Government and in the cause for which we fight. They bolster our enemies and try to convert their listeners to revere Hitler and his Gestapo, Il Duce and his Black Shirts.

It may be that they can not be brought to book, especially in absentia, by jury trial because the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution provides that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy trial by an impartial jury and shall be confronted with witnesses. Such confrontation includes the right to cross examine. Thus, trial by jury may be impossible and, therefore, civil prosecution may be barred.

Shall we stand idly by and do nothing? Assuredly these people must be punished summarily. Their trial now, even in their absence, might have the effect of deterring them or moderating their treasonable utterances. The gibbet is their due.

I, therefore, have offered a resolution to provide for amending Article 38 of the Articles of War whereby the President will be empowered to set up military tribunals, or commissions, to try these culprits, even in absentia. The Bill of Rights, which requires trial by jury, is not applicable to the Articles of War. If Congress so provides, persons tried before a military tribunal cannot demand trial by jury or confrontation of witnesses. The Articles of War, by article 38, may even now give the right to the President to set up these military commissions, but I believe it is proper for Congress to give them the specific power so as to remove any doubt.

Thus far in this war, these six knaves are the only known cases of American traitors on foreign soil. While trials in absentia are a bit strange to us, they are of every day occurrence in continental Europe. I am bold enough to suggest such a procedure only because without it, we would be helpless. It would be ridiculous to let these curs go unwhipped of justice—now.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, Article 38 of the Articles of War (sec. 1509 of the U. S. Code Title 10—Army), be hereby amended to read, as follows:

"The President may, by regulations, which he may modify from time to time, prescribe the procedure, including modes of proof, in cases before courts-martial, courts of inquiry, military commissions, and other military tribunals, which regulations shall, insofar as he shall deem practicable, apply the rules of evidence generally recognized in the trial of criminal cases in the district courts of the United States: Provided, That nothing contrary to or inconsistent with these articles shall be so prescribed: Provided further, That all rules made in pursuance to this article shall be laid before the Congress annually." (June 4, 1920, ch. 227, subchap. II, sec. 1, 41 Stat. 794.)

The next section is new:

SEC. 2. The President is hereby authorized to create military commissions for the trial and punishment of citizens of the United States, who, on foreign soil, are serving our enemies, Germany, Italy, and Japan, or other enemies of the United States, as radio propagandists. The President may by regulations prescribe the procedure for the conduct of such trials before such military commissions. Such trial before such military commissions need not require the actual presence of the accused.

Let us beware lest the delays and impedimenta that obtained in the last peace conference again come to the fore. Let us not repeat the "comedy of errors" of the last conference. Otherwise the mountain labors to bring forth a mouse.

In the thirst for retribution well might we quote from the Psalms of David, Psalm 58:

The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance: He shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.

And well might we chant with the Revelation, chapter 13:

He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword.

As a German himself had said—Bismarck, in 1871:

I have a lovely idea in connection with the conclusion of peace. It is to appoint an international court for the trial of all those who have instigated the war—newspaper writers, deputies, senators, and ministers.

I urge that President Roosevelt, in addition to his condemnation and protest against the carnage of Jews, address short-wave messages to the German people telling them of the crimes of their leaders and asking them to express and demonstrate their revulsion. If they refuse to express opposition and thereby acquiesce, then they shall be deemed guilty of complicity. Then hell fire shall be let loose by our flying fortresses. In reprisals the German countryside shall then be systematically razed. German cities, one by one, shall be block bombed and pulverized. As St. Paul stated in Romans, chapter 13:

For he—

is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

Sadist Hitler knows no law but the law of force. Only fire and sword will subdue him and his henchmen. Only triple reprisals now will prevent his carrying out the plans sponsored by Dr. Alfred Rosenberg and other brutes—to make the world Judenrein. Only triple retribution now will prevent Poland from becoming a Gargantuan Jewish grave. Why wait till the war is over before visiting revenge upon a culprit nation? We must act now. Wait, and then all Europe will be Judenloss. Why wait until Nazi Vernictungscolomen—extermination columns and destruction squads—commanded by the highest Nazi authorities in Berlin shall have finished their ruthless work. It shall then be too late.

This Jewish problem is really a Christian problem for it is only in the lands of Europe that are called Christian that this anti-Semitism comes to such full flood. Archbishop of York recently characterized the bestial cruelty practiced on the Jews as—the greatest crime in history. * * * These people have committed no crime. Their only offense is that they belong to the race of which our Lord and his Apostles were members.

Dr. Atkinson, general secretary of the Church Peace Union, states:

It is imperative that the Christian churches, Protestant and Catholic alike, help to make the winning of this battle against Jewish persecution and the other manifestations of anti-Semitism the spearhead of a new effort to rehabilitate the world and guarantee liberty for all people everywhere.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and insert in the RECORD an article appearing in the Chelsea (Mass.) Record of Wednesday, January 13.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing three statements constituting a discussion over the radio on the occasion of the Civil Service Week anniversary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

LABOR CONDITIONS IN THE SHIPBUILDING INDUSTRY ON THE PACIFIC COAST

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, a great deal of unsavory publicity is being circulated as a result of the strike of the coal miners, all of it deserved, but we should not overlook a situation that exists on the Pacific coast, to which I want to call particular attention this afternoon.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and I spent 3 weeks on the coast not long ago, investigating the naval shipbuilding program from Seattle to Los Angeles. In San Francisco we found a rather serious situation existing because two local union organizations were failing to comply with the master agreement which covers all shipbuilding contracts on the Pacific coast. In the San Francisco Bay area there are approximately 165,000 shipyard workers now engaged in building ships. In 1942 their efforts produced approximately 1,500,000 tons of shipping. They have been asked to produce in 1943 3,000,000 tons of shipping.

Back in April of 1941, after much negotiation, a Pacific coast shipbuilding stabilization agreement was entered into by the unions and by management up and down the Pacific coast. This was followed later by a master labor agreement, which consisted of a closed-shop agreement between management and the American Federation of Labor. The bargaining agents for the American Federation of Labor were the Metal Trades Councils of the various areas.

In San Francisco one local American Federation of Labor Machinists' Union, Local No. 68, headed by Business Agents Harry Hook and E. F. Dillon; and, across the bay in Oakland, a C. I. O. local of the steel workers' organizing committee, Local 1304, headed by James Smith, failed to comply with the master agreement. Remember those names, because you will hear a great deal more about those gentlemen. They claimed that they had separate contracts with the shipyards' management which did not bring them under the master agreement. Mr. Hillman, when he was joint administrator of the O. P. M., sent a letter out there stating that their contracts were not valid and that they had no right to bargain independently, and that they should abide by the terms of the master agreement. Many attempts have been made to reach a local agreement in the San Francisco Bay area. They were unsuccessful. Following my return to Washington, I wrote to the Department of the Navy to try to ascertain as fully as possible just what was occurring in that area. I have here a letter from Assistant Secretary Bard, of the Navy Department, which reads, in part, as follows:

One such local agreement, established for the purpose of providing continuous operations on a basis of three shifts per day, 7 days per week, in order to provide for the maximum possible production in the shipyard industry, set up a shift arrangement which provides for the payment of premium wages for the sixth and the seventh shifts worked in a regular workweek but not for any calendar days as such. This shift arrangement was consistent with the publicly stated policies of the national labor organizations to eliminate the payment of premium penalties for work on specific calendar days, which practice had formerly been in effect and required the payment of such premiums on Saturdays and Sundays regardless of whether or not any individual might have worked on any other days of the same workweek. The policy relative to the elimination of premium calendar days as such was further effectuated by appropriate provisions in amendments to the zone standards agreements established through voluntary negotiations in May 1942 between management in the shipbuilding industry throughout the United States and representatives of their employees in the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and as a national policy, by the issue of Executive Order 9240 effective as of October 1, 1942.

Now permit me to read the Executive order sent out by the President in October 1942. It is in part as follows:

Now, therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes, as President of the United States and as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, it is hereby ordered:

I. That the following principles and regulations shall apply for the duration of the war to the payment of premium and overtime wage compensation on all work relating to the prosecution of the war:

A. No premium wage or extra compensation shall be paid to any employee in the United States, its territories, or possessions for work on Saturday or Sunday except where such work is performed by the employee on the sixth or seventh day worked in his regularly scheduled workweek and as hereinafter provided.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend at this point in my remarks Executive Order No. 9240.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER 9240 (AS AMENDED BY EXECUTIVE ORDER 9248)

REGULATIONS RELATING TO OVERTIME WAGE COMPENSATION

Whereas many labor organizations have already adopted the patriotic policy of waiving double-time wage compensation or other premium pay for work on Saturday, Sunday, and holidays, as such, for the duration of the war; and

Whereas it is desirable and necessary in the prosecution of the war, and to insure uniformity and fair treatment for those labor organizations, employers, and employees who are conforming to such wage policies that this principle be universally adopted:

Now, therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes, as President of the United States and as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, it is hereby ordered:

I. That the following principles and regulations shall apply for the duration of the war to the payment of premiums and overtime wage compensation on all work relating to the prosecution of the war:

A. No premium wage or extra compensation shall be paid to any employee in the United States, its Territories, or possessions, for work on Saturday or Sunday, except where such work is performed by the employee on the sixth or seventh day worked in his regularly scheduled workweek and as hereinafter provided.

(1) Where because of emergency conditions an employee is required to work for 7 consecutive days in any regularly scheduled workweek a premium wage of double-time compensation shall be paid for work on the seventh day.

(2) Where required by the provisions of law or employment contracts, not more than time and one-half wage compensation shall be paid for work in excess of 8 hours in any day or 40 hours in any workweek or for work performed on the sixth day worked in any regularly scheduled workweek.

B. No premium wage or extra compensation shall be paid for work on customary holidays, except that time and one-half wage compensation shall be paid for work performed on any of the following holidays only:

New Year's Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas Day, and either Memorial Day or one other such holiday of greater local importance.

II. All Federal departments and agencies shall conform the provisions in all existing and future contracts negotiated, executed, or supervised by them to the policies of this order. All such departments and agencies shall immediately open negotiations to alter provisions in existing contracts to conform them to the requirements of this order.

III. Nothing in this order shall be construed as requiring a modification of the principle that every employee should have at least 1 day of rest in every 7 days. The continuous operation of plants and machines in prosecuting the war does not require that employees should work 7 consecutive days.

IV. Nothing herein shall be construed as superseding or in conflict with the provisions of the statutes prescribing the compensation, hours of work, and other conditions of employment of employees of the United States.

V. All Federal departments and agencies affected by this order shall refer to the Secretary of Labor for determination questions of interpretation and application arising hereunder. In any industry or occupation in which the Secretary finds that a wage stabilization agreement approved by a Government department or agency is operating satisfactorily, or in any industry or occupation in which the Secretary finds that the nature and exigencies of operations make such action necessary or advisable for the successful prosecution of the war, the Secretary may determine that any or all of the provisions of this order shall not apply to such industry or occupation or to any classes of employees therein. (As amended by Executive Order 9248 dated September 17, 1942.)

VI. The provisions of this order shall become effective October 1, 1942.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
September 9, 1942.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, another agreement was also entered into trying to control the migration of workers between yards and to eliminate absenteeism. Again these two labor unions objected. Now we get down to another point in Secretary Bard's letter to which I hope you will all listen carefully:

Particularly in respect to the action of the East Bay Local 1304, Congress of Industrial Organizations, the insistence of this union upon the terms of its own individual labor contract has resulted in its refusal to permit its members to work on Saturdays or Sundays without the payment of premium wages. In the case of union members who have disregarded this requirement of the union, Local 1304 has assessed fines of $10 per day against such individuals. Specifically, on the week ends of December 19 and 20, 1942, and of December 26 and 27, 1942, contrary to the demands of East Bay Shipyards for the work of machinists on vital and urgent war work, East Bay Local 1304 refused to permit its members to work on those week ends under conditions applicable to all other local labor. This refusal had the specific effect of disrupting work schedules on new vessels under construction and involving delays in several ship projects of extreme urgency.

Now, please get the next sentence:

A further consequence was failure to effect repairs on Navy and Army vessels so preventing these vessels from meeting schedules controlling convoys required for shipment of men and supplies with the result that convoys were delayed and schedules of troop movements to ports of embarkation were seriously disorganized.

I charge that the individuals who prevented that work are just as guilty of treason as though they had put a time bomb under these ships and delayed their sailing for 3 days, and I hope that in the future the military authorities will take the necessary steps to see that such delays are not further encountered.

Paying particular attention now to the other local union, Local No. 68, A. F. of L., there has been a refusal to furnish urgently needed machinists to shipyards within the jurisdiction of that union because of refusal in conformity with their mutual agreements of such shipyards to accept employees from other shipyards without clearances.

These are not jurisdictional disputes; I hope I make that clear.

All of this came to a head just before the Christmas holidays. It is covered in the letter from Secretary Bard. As a result of serious disruption of this war work, the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Maritime Commission found it necessary to call on the President and request that he take action in order to put these two unions back to work. On January 1 the President sent the following wire to the unions involved. I quote as follows:

I am informed by Army, Navy, and Maritime Commission that actions of your union are seriously interfering with vital war production and have delayed shipments of men and supplies to fighting fronts because, contrary to the action of practically all other labor, you have refused to abide by agreements for work on Saturdays and Sundays and to comply with measures established to prevent unnecessary migration of labor.

You are directed to conform with the amended Pacific coast shipbuilding and ship-repair stabilization agreements and to anti-migration measures adopted and generally operating in San Francisco Bay area.

When that wire reached the coast, the gentlemen involved, Messrs. Hook, Dillon, and Smith, were invited by Vice Admiral Greenslade and General DeWitt to confer with them the afternoon the wire arrived. These two prominent officers were left cooling their heels, however, because the local representatives would not call around to discuss the matter with them.

When we come to this point we get headlines in the San Francisco papers:

Bay union leaders defy Roosevelt on order for war work.

We are getting into a pretty pickle along about now. I should like to read briefly from an article which appeared in the San Francisco Examiner calling attention to the flat disobedience of these machinists' representatives and their refusal to permit their men to work in the yards on that particular week end:

From an indisputably reliable source, it was learned that a union spokesman had dismissed the matter by explaining offhandedly that "Secretary Perkins told us, in a phone call from Washington, not to do anything until her representatives got here, so we just didn't go to the conference with the admiral and the general."

Next:

Growing rebellion seethed within the ranks of the machinists' unions themselves, particularly the East Bay Congress of Industrial Organizations union. Four of this union's men have been suspended, and $25 fines imposed by the union on 30 others, because they disobeyed union orders and worked through the Christmas week end, in order to fulfill their patriotic pledges to Navy officials that they would complete vitally needed Navy construction work at that time.

Think of it! Twenty-five dollars assessed against patriotic machinists because they went to work that week end.

Why the hell should we be fined for doing our patriotic duty?—

A spokesman for these union men demanded.

I think we might all ask the same question.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place this newspaper article in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The article referred to follows:

BAY UNION LEADERS DEFY ROOSEVELT ON ORDER FOR WAR WORK—FINES KEEP 34 MACHINISTS FROM AIDING PRODUCTION AT ALAMEDA YARDS

The Bay region shipyards machinists' "beef" which last week drew a rebuking wire to Congress of Industrial Organizations and American Federation of Labor union bosses from President Roosevelt himself after Army and Navy schedules had been disrupted by the machinists' refusal to work on week ends, yesterday appeared moving to a climactic show-down with a new series of rapid-fire developments:

1. In flat disobedience of the President's directive, ordering the unions to cease interfering with war production, the East Bay Congress of Industrial Organizations union local's tactics yesterday prevented 34 machinists from working at the General Engineering and Drydock yards in Alameda, "crippling" production of new Navy warships.

2. By plane from Washington, representatives of the Department of Labor, dispatched by Madam Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, arrived here and went into a huddle with the machinists' union officials. At twelfth district naval headquarters, spokesmen for the Navy, most vitally interested in the effects of the machinists' work stoppage, had no official word of the Labor Department's agents' arrival, said "they apparently did not see fit to take us into their confidence."

3. It was learned that the union bosses on New Year's Day had deliberately let Vice Admiral John W. Greenslade, commandant of this Navy district; Lt. Gen. John L. DeWitt, commander of the Army's Western Defense Area, and Maj. Gen. Frederick Gilbreath, commandant of the San Francisco Port of Embarkation, cool their heels waiting vainly to hold a scheduled conference with the union leaders, in an attempt to effect a mutually satisfactory ending of the machinists' labor bottleneck which had already delayed Navy warship trials, and sailing of ships with war supplies needed by General MacArthur's men.

From an indisputably reliable source, it was learned that a union spokesman had dismissed the matter by explaining offhandedly that "Secretary Perkins told us, in a phone call from Washington, not to do anything until her representatives got here, so we just didn't go to the conference with the admiral and the generals."

4. Growing rebellion seethed within the ranks of the machinists' unions themselves, particularly the East Bay Congress of Industrial Organizations union. Four of this union's men have been suspended, and $25 fines imposed by the union on 30 others, because they disobeyed union orders and worked through the Christmas week-end, in order to fulfill their patriotic pledges to Navy officials that they would complete vitally needed Navy construction work at that time.

"Why the hell should we be fined for doing our patriotic duty?" a spokesman for these union men demanded.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker please understand that all this refers only to two local unions. All other labor on the Pacific coast is working under the master agreement and we have found some splendid relationships between management and labor, particularly in the Northwest area.

Now let me read you the statement of Mr. Al Wynn, who is the official spokesman for the San Francisco Metal Trades Council. This is what Mr. Wynn had to say:

This council and its affiliated unions have made an agreement with the shipyards and with the Government, and we intend to carry out that agreement. That agreement provides there shall be no stoppage of work; when a grievance arises, the Government has set up a committee to take it up, and our unions will abide by that, while our men stay on the job. I believe all other groups should do likewise.

Undoubtedly that represents the attitude of the vast majority of loyal workers throughout the country.

Here we have two local labor organizations in San Francisco, one of them a local of the C. I. O. and one a local of the A. F. of L., which have formed an unholy alliance in defiance of all orders from the President and from the Army and the Navy. It seems to me that the responsible heads of these organizations ought to be yanked out of their jobs to cool their heels as they made Admiral Greenslade and General DeWitt cool theirs when they were asked to confer with them. Their own national organizations have no control over their activities.

I have just this criticism to make of the Secretary of Labor: This situation has been fomenting out there for something like a year and a half. I cannot understand why Madam Perkins had to wait until this good moment before sending her representatives out to attempt to settle it. She should have had her representatives there long ago trying to prevent these disturbances and not wait until they have actually occurred before taking action.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are two points I would like to have cleared up in my own mind. The gentleman dropped the remark that the Army and Navy should do something about that. May I ask if it is the gentleman's opinion that the Army and Navy is authorized to take action in such matters?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. My attitude is that persons responsible for strikes which delay convoys going to the Southwest Pacific with materials for our fighting men should be treated exactly the same as traitors to their country. Have not the military authorities some rights where traitors are concerned?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not so sure about that. It is a legal question.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Then the Congress should give them such authority immediately.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what I want to bring out. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the instructions from Madam Perkins, Secretary of Labor, cut across the directive issued by the President and that the three or four union leaders kept away from the conference directed by the President because they had received an order from the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I am simply telling the gentleman what was stated in this newspaper article which I read. I cannot make the accusation that Madam Perkins' activities cut across the directive issued by the President. The union agents said they were not going to take any action until her representatives appeared and until they received instructions from her.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The observation which the gentleman has just made in answer to an inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] indicates that there is a difference of opinion as to what agency of the Government can aid us in doing away with strikes in war industries. The Labor Committee of the House of Representatives on November 26 and 27, 1941, prior to the passage of the so-called Anti-Strike legislation in this House on December 3 of that year, listened to the representative of the American Federation of Labor, President William Green, and to the C. I. O. through its secretary, Mr. James B. Carey. They were specifically asked the question if it were not proper for the Congress of the United States to write into the statutory law of this country provisions whereby we could meet the strike situation. I think the testimony will show that those men said in effect that the heads of the unions could control the problem, which was at that time and since, seriously curtailing defense and war material output. In other words, what they proposed to do in 1941 has not been accomplished, even though some leaders have tried, and the Congress of the United States without shifting the responsibility to the Army or Navy or the President should act as the House did on December 3, 1941. The Senate failed to act. The Seventy-eighth Congress not only in the House but in the other body, should affirm its courage to meet this unhealthy condition.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I heartily agree with the gentleman from West Virginia. I feel that the Secretary of Labor has been remiss in her duties and, as the gentleman knows, I feel that the Labor Committee has been a little remiss in some of its duties also. I agree with the gentleman that where the national heads of these organizations cannot control the situation we should take steps to see that it is properly controlled. We cannot have these strikes delaying the shipment of vital materials going to our men overseas who are doing the fighting.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. With some trepidation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It does not make any difference to me just so long as you yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Go ahead.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman said that the Labor Committee has been remiss.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. That was putting it rather charitably.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not disagree with the gentleman. As one member of the Labor Committee I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that bills to remedy that situation have been introduced, four or five of them, as long as 2 years ago, by the Member from the Fourth District of Michigan and the adoption of those bills has been urged on the floor of this House time and time again.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. That is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In fact, the patience of the House has been tried by remarks which I have made along the line of ending these subversive activities. And yet we have failed to get action.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I quite agree with the gentleman, but attention should be called to the fact that on several occasions the House has done its duty well. We have passed the type of legislation needed, it has gone somewhere else, and then disappeared.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman know of any reason why we should not continue in session 5 days a week, in an endeavor to put through legislation which would end this evil?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I am sure that the gentleman knows I have no objection to working as many days on the floor of the House as is necessary, but I hope he will leave me a few minutes for my committee work and other work.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is correct. We need time for committee and other work but we have no excuse for dodging corrective legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include the entire letter from Secretary Bard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, January 9, 1943.

Hon. JOHN Z. ANDERSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

MY DEAR MR. ANDERSON: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of January 4, 1943, in which you request details relative to recent labor difficulties affecting shipyards in the San Francisco Bay area. The essence of these difficulties is contained in a telegraphic directive, dated January 1, 1943, addressed to the responsible unions by the President, and published in the press on January 4 and January 5.

The present difficulties have been an acute action definitely connected with a chronic situation of which a brief summary may serve a useful purpose.

Beginning with the effective date of the Pacific Coast Shipbuilding Stabilization Agreement, made effective on April 1, 1941, the International Association of Machinists Local Union 68, American Federation of Labor, under the leadership of its business agents, Mr. Harry Hook and Mr. E. F. Dillon, objected to the agreement concurred in by all other American Federation of Labor organizations concerned, for the establishment of the standard wage rate of $1.12 per hour for skilled mechanics. They demanded a wage rate for their own membership at a rate of $1.15 per hour. This demand had subsequent repercussions in negotiation of contracts by the same labor organizations with the so-called up-town shops. The union demands developed into a strike which tied up some 50 or 60 San Francisco shops engaged in production of war material. The dispute was settled by reference to the National Labor Mediation Board, which made an award on the basis of union demands.

So far as the shipyards themselves were concerned, the Shipbuilding Stabilization Agreement was followed by the negotiation of a master labor agreement between the American Federation of Labor and practically all west coast shipyards then in operation. This agreement was established on a closed-shop basis and was applicable to all shipyards then parties to the stabilization agreement. However, subsequent to April 1, 1941, certain shipyards on the east side of San Francisco Bay renewed, as of that date, labor contracts which had existed previously and which had been made with a local union known as the East Bay Machinists Union, No. 1304, affiliated with the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, Congress of Industrial Organizations, James Smith, business agent. This contract operated for the benefit of machinists only, in the east bay shipyards only, but it immediately raised a contention on the part of American Federation of Labor that it was in conflict with the master agreement which actually covered all other trades in the east bay yards and presumably would control the supply of machinists also.

The contention of American Federation of Labor developed a jurisdictional dispute with the Congress of Industrial Organizations, local 1304, relative to which Mr. Sidney Hillman, his his then official capacity as Associate Director of the Office of Production Management, in a telegram to the Bay Cities Metal Trades Council, American Federation of Labor, replying to letter dated July 24, 1941, from the council, and stating their contentions, Mr. Hillman stated as follows: "There was absolutely nothing stated that could, even by the remotest stretch of the imagination, be construed as authorizing in any way the entry into additional agreements by the employers and local unions in addition to said master agreement. Any attempt, therefore, to negotiate such individual agreements would necessarily constitute an unwarranted departure, both from the letter and the spirit of the understanding reflected by my letter of July 24. Any such individual agreements with individual local unions that may have been entered into consequently constitute such a departure and cannot be recognized by us as binding." Subsequently local 1304 attempted to prevent the supply of machinists to yards with which the union considered its contract valid and the supply of machinists was maintained by direct action of the metal trades department, American Federation of Labor. This action did not, however, result in a complete settlement of the jurisdictional dispute.

Since the foregoing incidents, local No. 68 has withdrawn from the Bay Cities Metal Trades Council, American Federation of Labor, in order to maintain its independent autonomous action, and has evidently maintained close collaboration with East Bay local 1304, Congress of Industrial Organizations, to the extent of refusal to consider either union bound by the Shipbuilding Zone Standards Agreements or other local agreements participated in between the American Federation of Labor Metal Trades Department and local shipyards.

One such local agreement, established for the purpose of providing continuous operations on a basis of 3 shifts per day, 7 days per week, in order to provide for the maximum possible production in the shipyard industry, set up a shift arrangement which provides for the payment of premium wages for the sixth and the seventh shifts worked in a regular workweek but not for any calendar days as such. This shift arrangement was consistent with the publicly stated policies of the national labor organizations to eliminate the payment of premium penalties for work on specific calendar days, which practice had formerly been in effect and required the payment of such premiums on Saturdays and Sundays regardless of whether or not any individual might have worked on any other days of the same workweek. The policy relative to the elimination of premium calendar days as such was further effectuated by appropriate provisions in amendments to the Zone Standards Agreements established through voluntary negotiations in May 1942 between management in the shipbuilding industry throughout the United States and representatives of their employees in the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and as a national policy, by the issue of Executive Order 9240 effective as of October 1, 1942. By appropriate action of the Secretary of Labor, the shipbuilding and ship repair industry operating under the Zone Standards Agreements has temporarily been exempted from the application of Executive Order 9240 because the Zone Standards Agreements themselves nearly universally are so drawn as to comply with the intent of Executive Order 9240.

Another local agreement between the Bay Cities Metal Trades Council and Shipbuilders in the San Francisco Bay area who are signatory to the Pacific coast master agreement, was adopted pursuant to expressed national policies as exemplified by War Manpower Commission rules to control unnecessary migration of labor among war industries. This agreement provides, among other things, that no shipbuilder in the Bay area shall employ any person previously employed by any other shipyard in the area, unless such person presents a clearance card from the previous employer.

The present difficulty has arisen through failure of the cited unions to conform to the policies for elimination of premium calendar days on the grounds that they were not specifically represented in the Chicago conference and are therefore not bound by the amendments to the zone standards established by that conference, and that they are not subject to the control of the national policy expressed in Executive Order 9240 because of the exemption granted by the Secretary of Labor. These unions have further failed to comply with the local agreement relating to migration on the ground, so far as the Navy Department understands, that the unions are in disagreement with the policy expressed.

Particularly in respect to the action of the East Bay local 1304, Congress of Industrial Organizations, the insistence of this union upon the terms of its own individual labor contract has resulted in its refusal to permit its members to work on Saturdays or Sundays without the payment of premium wages. In the case of union members who have disregarded this requirement of the union, local 1304 has assessed fines of $10 per day against such individuals. Specifically, on the week ends of December 19 and 20, 1942, and of December 26 and 27, 1942, contrary to the demands of East Bay shipyards for the work of machinists on vital and urgent war work, East Bay local 1304 refused to permit its members to work on those week ends under conditions applicable to all other local labor. This refusal had the specific effect of disrupting work schedules on new vessels under construction and involving delays in several ship projects of extreme urgency. A further consequence was failure to effect repairs on Navy and Army vessels so preventing these vessels from meeting schedules controlling convoys required for shipment of men and supplies with the result that convoys were delayed and schedules of troop movements to ports of embarkation were seriously disorganized.

Particularly on the part of local union No. 68, American Federation of Labor, there has been a refusal to furnish urgently needed machinists to shipyards within the jurisdiction of that union because of the refusal in conformity with their mutual agreements of such shipyards to accept employees from other shipyards without clearances.

Accordingly, after consultation between the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Maritime Commission, these agencies, in order to accomplish their deep responsibilities in the efficient and expeditious prosecution of the war, and upon the definite assurance on the part of local 1304 that a Presidential directive would be necessary to establish the willingness of that union to conform with the provisions of the amended shipbuilding zone standards agreements which are accepted by and complied with on the part of all other local labor, were constrained to request the directive issued by the President on January 1, 1943.

Coincident with the issue of the directive as referred to in the preceding paragraph, the Secretary of Labor, after consultation with the Navy Department, sent representatives of the Department of Labor to San Francisco for the purpose of exploring the basic questions involved, with a view to establishing local understandings which may insure satisfactory cooperation among the conflicting interests, and avoiding further obstruction of war production because of these conflicts. In connection with this action of the Secretary of Labor, all local representatives of the Navy Department have been directed to cooperate and to assist in every practicable way.

Sincerely yours,

RALPH A. BARD.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have an additional minute. I would like to make a further observation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I appreciate the gentleman yielding to me a second time. I desire to make myself perfectly clear. I believe that the majority of the working men and women of America, especially in time of war, are of a type which we may designate as loyal labor and responsible unionism. I am only saying that in any legislation of a restrictive nature, we must of necessity direct it at a small minority group rather than the large group. I do not think that labor itself should take the attitude that Members of Congress like myself and others who attempt to solve this problem by legislation mean an affront to them. Just the opposite is true in my own case, because I would not knowingly tear down a single proper gain labor has been given.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I agree with the gentleman that the vast majority of the working men and women of this country are loyal and patriotic, but they have to be protected from their own misguided leaders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

FLORIDA BARGE CANAL

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced a bill providing an appropriation of $44,000,000 for the completion of the Intracoastal Waterway across Florida. The purpose of this was to provide the eastern seaboard with the necessary fuels. I said I would have something more to say about that this week.

Mr. Speaker, the most serious blow which the Axis has struck at us is the dangerous impairment of our transportation system. By driving our coastwise and intracoastal travel from the seas, the enemy submarines have created a threat to the success of our arms which can only be exceeded by successful invasion of our territory. This was and is the principal mission of the German undersea warfare, and so far it has been successful, even beyond their expectations. In addition to this it has recently been announced over the air that the Axis Powers will probably put in service 700 submarines in the spring. The devastation wrought by these submarines is not even at its peak if this is true.

The destruction of our coastwise transport has had the effect the enemy calculated it would have, and has set in train a series of internal difficulties which strike at the very root of our war effort and our capacity for carrying the war overseas. That we were unprepared and unable to meet this thrust is one of the tragic results of our failure to recognize the strategic necessity for developing a balanced system of transport. It should have been evident to all, but was clearly understood by too few, that the extent and nature of the physical geography of the United States automatically preclude sole reliance on rail transport.

We have failed to build up and connect our inland waterway systems; we have lost our coastwise ocean transport; and now our overburdened railways are breaking down.

The crisis is upon us. We are already too late with too little. By our failure we have fixed the limits of our war effort. The creeping paralysis of a failing transport has definitely set in, and unless we can arrest it, we must abandon our hopes for an early victory.

First. Among the already existing results of this failure of our transport system are acute and crippling gasoline shortages, especially in the East. This has multiplied and complicated our transport difficulty by reducing motor carriage of individuals to a dangerously uneconomic minimum, and overburdening the public urban and interurban facilities, and vastly diminishing truck transport via the highways. This is too well known to require elaboration but many of us do not yet clearly perceive the further results of this gasoline shortage. The manpower losses in hours due to the situation have been conservatively estimated to be more than 7 percent. No one who is cognizant of the general picture in industry fails to recognize this fact, and to regard it as equal to the loss of many divisions of our fighting men. Something must be done about it.

Second. The second disastrous result of the failing of our transport has been the famine in fuel oil. All are aware of the cold homes, cold schools, and churches, the lowered efficiency of workers, and the tremendous dislocation in employment brought about by the industrial rationing of fuel oil. But relatively few are watching the death graphs for pneumonia and influenza, the increase in accidents and the very serious loss of man hours resulting.

Third. A third result of our deteriorating transport system is seen in certain food shortages already existing. Sugar is an outstanding example. Milk and butter production are similarly affected. New dairy development has been precluded and existing production diminished by lack of distribution and collection facilities.

This is a brief outline of the situation as it exists. The Petroleum Coordinator, the Director of Defense Transportation, and the Director of the Office of Economic Stabilization have told us that not only have they been unable to prevent these conditions, but that they are wholly unable to prevent the present situation developing into an even worse debacle next winter. It is easy to see why this is so, in the absence of any determined attempt to throw into the breach our potential inland water transportation facilities. Not only will the deterioration of our rail equipment proceed at an accelerated pace, reducing the number of ton-miles of freight which it will be possible to move, but the African campaign has indicated clearly that the military policy of the United States will be to make shipments of petroleum and other supplies to the European theater direct from the east coast when possible. Only a little foresight makes plain that when a second front is opened in Europe, as we expect it will be, the need for movement of petroleum and all supplies to the eastern seaboard will be vastly greater than it is now.

Congress appears to have substantially recognized and ratified the truth of these statements when it enacted last July Public Law 675, Seventy-seventh Congress, providing for the connection of the Gulf and Mississippi waterway systems with the Atlantic intracoastal system by the construction of a barge channel across northern Florida. The act clearly stated that the authorization was made "in order to promote the national defense, and to promptly facilitate and protect the transport of supplies needful to the Military Establishment."

The urgency was so clearly recognized that the Chief of Engineers was authorized to employ temporary structures where necessary. The act was expressly an emergency war measure.

Nearly 7 months have elapsed and nothing further whatever has been done about it, either by Congress or the administration, and we have driven headlong into a situation which continues to grow worse. The people will want to know why.

There is not one single physical obstacle to bringing this relief to the people and our military forces within 10 months time. The equipment to build the project is available and idle. The manpower offers no problem. The amount of material is inconsequential, and for the most part can be furnished locally.

I have seen definite proposals from some of the largest and most responsible construction concerns in the country, offering to complete this job and to open it to travel next October, if it is begun immediately. Plans have long since been developed by the Army engineers and only an appropriation is required to begin the work forthwith.

I am aware that views have been expressed to the effect that the construction of this project would require 3½ years. I can understand how, under normal conditions, it would be possible to spread the construction over that length of time, but with all due respect to those holding these views, I submit that they are untenable in the light of these concrete proposals from construction people who are actually engaged in this kind of work and with a long record of achievement behind them. In fact, some of the engineers have confidentially stated that it could be built in 15 months if necessary. I just want to give you one example of what can be accomplished when we are faced with an emergency. When my committee was asked for an appropriation for the Douglas Dam in the necessity for a step-up they came to estimated it would take 18 months to build that dam, but when they were faced with a shortage of power and saw the necessity for a step-up they came to the conclusion that it can be done in 11 months, and I think they will do it in even less time than that.

I concur with General Summerall, former Chief of Staff of the United States Army, in his statement made in a letter to the Governors of all Eastern States under date of January 17. He says:

> Any statements to the contrary notwithstanding, it is possible to construct this connecting channel and to initiate barge traffic on a scale adequate to supply the entire petroleum needs of the Eastern States without rationing within 10 months after the work is begun. * * * The responsibility for the delay and the resulting situation rests squarely in the lap of the Government. * * * It is admitted by all that if this completed waterway were now in existence there would be no petroleum shortage in the East; no looming shadow of food and other vital supply shortages beginning to materialize; and no break-down of our rail transport. * * * Our transport must be maintained regardless of priorities, materials, or manpower. It is time for Congress and the Government to take a realistic view of the position; to cease to consider the Nation's arterial water transport in political and sectional terms; to look upon this work as the stark military necessity it is, and to think of construction in months instead of in years.

Bear in mind that this canal not only links up the oil fields of Texas with the East, but connects almost every point in the Mississippi Valley with the Atlantic seaboard. Cargoes can move to Philadelphia direct from points in Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, Arkansas, and other Valley States.

I do not think it is necessary at this time to argue the currently expressed judgment of Congress embodied in this act. It takes only a glance at the map to satisfy the average man of the common sense of this legislation enacted last summer.

In authorizing this project, and in the wording of the act, Congress has declared in effect:

First. The project is practicable.

Second. It is urgently necessary.

Third. It can be built in time to serve the situation.

I desire to make clear that while the act provides particularly for transportation relief to the eastern seaboard and for the facilitation of trans-Atlantic movement from eastern ports, it provides to an important degree, for the relief of the general transportation system in other portions of the country. The chief reason why there is a fuel-oil shortage in many of the Mississippi Valley States is the use of an enormous number of tank cars and railway facilities pressed into service for the haul to the seaboard. The opening of this continuous waterway would take out of this service practically all of these cars and make them available for their proper function of distributing petroleum products throughout the inland areas of the country.

The chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the Chief of Engineers have both stated that through the construction of this short connecting channel across northern Florida the entire petroleum needs of the eastern seaboard can be supplied by through barge transport. I quote from House Report No. 2153, Seventy-seventh Congress, second session, in which the chairman of the committee states:

> The barge channel across Florida authorized by this bill is the only proposal that can be made capable of supplying all the oil needs of the Atlantic seaboard, in the absence of ocean-tanker service.

Aside from the absolute necessity of providing for this through barge transport, the Congress can practice no more wise economy than by immediately providing the funds for construction. When the tremendous difference between the cost of barge transport and rail transport to the eastern seaboard is considered, and it is remembered that the Federal Treasury is now expending more than $1,000,000 a day to subsidize this transportation by rail, it will be seen that the project would pay for itself in less than 40 days' time and would permanently relieve the taxpayers throughout the country of a burden now amounting to more than $300,000,000 a year and which bids fair to continue as long as this war lasts.

For those who may not have a clear picture of the physical situation in mind, I want to again point out that there exists today a completed waterway over which barges may now travel from Corpus Christi, Tex., to Trenton, N. J., except for a small connecting channel across northern Florida, the length of which is only 3½ percent of the total length of the waterway, and the absence of which interposes an absolute barrier to the use of this system upon which we have spent tens of millions of dollars.

On yesterday I introduced a bill appropriating $44,000,000 for the completion of this Intracoastal Waterway. I sincerely feel that it is not only for the best interest of the Military Establishment but also for the civilian population of the Atlantic seaboard and every citizen of this Nation that this appropriation be approved and the construction of this project be begun at the earliest possible date.

I hope the committee to which this bill is referred will give it its present consideration.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I wanted to call to the gentleman's attention the very statement of General Summerall that he just read, to the effect that this barge canal could be completed in 10 months.

I also want to call attention to a more serious aspect of this proposition. The gravest danger with which we are confronted today is the submarine warfare. On yesterday, I believe, Viscount Cranborne, the Government leader, reported to the British House of Lords as follows:

> As German land and air prospects decrease, they are concentrating more and more on attacks on our sea communications. They realize this is the only chance of escaping total defeat.

Every day we are being told now that this is the gravest danger with which we are confronted, yet because of the failure to build this short strip of this great inland waterway our vessels are compelled to go around through the Gulf of Mexico, the Caribbean Sea, or the Florida Straits, the Windward Passage, and they are being destroyed by German submarines. This is not only preventing the eastern seaboard from securing the fuel it needs but is also destroying the fuel oil that is intended for our armed forces abroad and for our allies. It is also destroying the vessels necessary to carry this oil. Besides the oil ships we have lost large numbers of bauxite ships and other vessels carrying war materials.

Therefore, I submit that it is absolute folly to speed up the building of these oil-carrying vessels and then refuse to build this short strip of this great Intracoastal Waterway across the Florida Peninsula that would, if completed, relieve the oil shortage on the Atlantic seaboard and at the same time entirely eliminate one of the most dangerous preying grounds used by the German submarines in their attempt to destroy our intracoastal and transoceanic shipping.

For that reason, I say that the Congress ought not to wait another week. This provision ought to be brought to the floor of the House and passed now, because, if this submarine menace continues to increase as today's press indicates it is increasing, we may find ourselves unable to supply our armies and our allies overseas. Therefore, I sincerely trust that the Committee on Appropriations will bring this measure out and that the House and Senate will pass it without delay.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Mississippi for his contribution. His knowledge of intracoastal waterways is exceeded only by his knowledge of the Tennessee Valley Authority. He is a ranking member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I pointed out just a few moments ago that we had many reports that this spring 700 submarines would be turned loose on our transport system. I could quote a newspaper release by Elmer Davis of OWI, which points out that danger, but I don't think it is necessary as I think everybody realizes the danger, and I believe that unless this canal is constructed so that we can get fuel to the Atlantic seaboard for the coming winter, that the wrath of the people of that section of the country will fall upon the members of Congress in that section and not only fall from there, but from all over this Nation. We should not hesitate to spend $44,000,000 if necessary to provide those people with the fuel they need, and the fighting forces with the oil that they need. I now quote a short paragraph from the report of the Rivers and Harbors Committee on the bill that passed in July and I think it is apropos today:

> There is no shortage of oil or gasoline in this country. All storage facilities of the Southwest are filled to capacity, while the wells and refineries are being closed down. People there are suffering great financial loss because the surplus stocks cannot be moved to market. In the East, gasoline is being rationed because of the inability to secure transportation under existing conditions. As winter approaches the need for fuel oil to relieve actual suffering may become very acute.

That was predicted last summer, and I predict that if this canal is not completed, if provisions are not made to transport this oil from the West, conditions in the East will become more acute next winter than they have been this winter.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think that the gentleman knows that in Massachusetts, in New England, people are suffering today, and people have died as the result of the lack of fuel. We do not need legislation if we could only get people to act.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We do not need legislation. All we need is an appropriation, and I have introduced this bill to bring it before the people of this country and point out to them that they have something here if they could get Congress to act, and consider it, and I have pointed out that I have the names of four contractors who say that they will complete it in 10 months and have it in operation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the war production could go ahead even without that appropriation.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I thank the gentlewoman from Massachusetts for her contribution. I do not care how it is done as long as we get that fuel to the East.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And for the protection of our ships.

Mr. RANKIN. The proposal to put a 24-inch pipe line to the Atlantic seaboard will take some time, but even if we complete that it will have to pass through the Allegheny mountain region, where the freezing is very great, and when completed it can carry only about 240,000 barrels a day.

Mr. HENDRICKS. And it will take more steel to build a 10-inch pipe line, by three than it would to complete the canal across Florida. The oil pipe line would be able to carry about 30,000 barrels a day, and the canal could carry over a million barrels a day. It is mere stupidity to build these lines when we could get this canal.

PRICE OF CORN

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I hold here in my hand a copy of the Government magazine Victory which was issued yesterday by the Office of War Information.

On page 75 you will find this headline "Corn prices frozen at highest levels, 100 percent in excess of parity."

This headline, which is a dastardly slap at the already harassed farmers of the Nation, cannot be passed off under the classification of sloppy journalism.

Would it be by mere coincidence that this lying headline in an official Government document, with wide newspaper circulation, appeared on the same date as cartoons and articles in the metropolitan press portraying the so-called congressional farm bloc as the road hog for the farmers, and branding the efforts of the farmers to have farm-labor costs included on computation of parity as a threat of inflation?

This should be a warning to the people against a Government controlled or subsidized press which could counterfeit the truth with its own fraudulent headlines.

In this particular article it is necessary to read dozens of lines of print to learn that the headline is a contemptible lie. American people are headline readers and in glancing through this magazine one would readily assume that everything had been fixed for the farmer to receive double the amount of parity since the headline words "100 percent in excess of parity" certainly imply that.

And how strange that Victory's editor inserts an editor's note demanding that whenever anything is reprinted from the document that "the original meaning be preserved."

Mr. Elmer Davis, Director of the Office of War Information, which issued the magazine, should put into practice in his own backyard what he is trying to sell the American public.

In a recent chain broadcast on handling wartime news, Mr. Davis, who is at least Director of Government information, if not minister of Government propaganda, told his listeners, "We want our news to be accurate."

Read the purposes of Mr. Davis' Office of War Information, found on page 83 of the United States Government Manual, and you will find it is to "formulate and carry out, through the use of the press, radio, motion picture, and other facilities, information programs designed to facilitate the development of an informed and intelligent understanding at home and abroad of the status and progress of the war effort and of the war policies, activities, and aims of the Government."

If Mr. Davis wants the public to have an intelligent understanding, why does his publication imply that American farmers are going to get a fat plum in the form of 100 percent in excess of parity? Anyone who can tell a horse from a cow knows there has never been anything of the kind ever proposed, and if the headline writers of the Government's mouthpiece cannot keep abreast of the farm program enough to know what is going on, they had better take a leave of absence and substitute a straw hat for their eyeshades and a hoe for their blue pencils and get out and learn the difficult battle the American farmer is fighting for us and the rest of the world on our own home front.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. DILWEG. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, January 22, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 22, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God and everlasting Father, Thou hast abundantly succored us to this day upon the bosom of Thy innumerable mercies. Grant that these blessings may lead us to deep gratitude and unselfishness, building something of fidelity to Thee in our souls and helpfulness in the lives of others; thus securing our immortality on earth; the workman dies but the work goes on forever.

Do thou breathe upon all our land the spirit of knowledge and understanding; take away those things which separate our people and unite them in confidence, in cooperation, and labor; may men of every station learn to love as they have learned to hate. Dear Lord of our souls, we thank Thee for Thy surpassing love and wonder and we pray that the simplicity of Thy teaching may turn us to its sky-born beauty; the cup of water, the bread given to hunger-bitten lips, the clothing for the wind-chilled body, the visit to the cot of pain; Oh, thus is woven the robe of righteousness that will radiate forever in the light of the throne eternal. Hear our humble prayer as we thus go forth in Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, here is some food for thought and action for the special committee investigating civil-service employment. To those of us who see Washington thronged with Federal employees, hearing the complaints of some of them that they are not busy half the time, it is discouraging and disconcerting to see the Civil Service Commission putting out such propaganda as this:

TELEGRAM FOR MR. AND MRS. AMERICA

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Federal agencies must find stenographers and typists to fill thousands of vacancies. Situation critical. War program suffers delay. Will you inform girls 17½ years old and up that they will receive immediate appointment upon passing civil-service test? Salaries hiked to $146 and $164 a month. Apply any first- or second-class post office.

TENTH CIVIL SERVICE REGION,
New Orleans, La.

I assume that a similar statement has gone forth from every other region in the United States, and we hear such appeals over the radio. Certainly this special committee should look into this and stop this kind of practice.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a short poem.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 10 minutes today after the other special orders have been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech by ex-President Hoover on increased farm production, delivered last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short news article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HÉBERT and Mr. HOLIFIELD were granted permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

SOUTHERN VOLUNTEERS

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks and include therein one paragraph appearing in an article in yesterday's Post, entitled "America at War," by Selden Menefee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, in yesterday's Post there appeared an article under the title "America at War," in which this paragraph appears:

The South, with its high birth rate and large number of youths eligible for the draft, has a disproportionately high number of men in the armed forces. More than that, poverty is so widespread that to southern youth Army life seems attractive by comparison to life back home. Southerners are volunteering by the thousands, before their numbers come up.

Mr. Speaker, you know any writer who would say such a thing about the young men in the armed forces in this critical time and can still obtain space thereafter is something of a miracle. We need men who write in our papers today with patriotic pens, not with pens which are motivated apparently by their bellies. If this calumnist knew the young men that I know from my home district who are at present in Guadalcanal and in Buna and in Africa, and could he know the vital suffering, the terrific pestilence, and the constant danger which confronts them, he would bow his head in shame.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, one of the many troubles, in the case of applications from small business, is the long delay consumed in processing applications after they have been filed. For instance, I have personal knowledge of a small engraving company which filed an application for the use of a small amount of critical material months ago. In spite of its every effort to push the application to approval, month after month has passed and no decision has been reached on the application. The delays and red tape seem to be insurmountable in spite of the fact that this company needs the small amount of metal for the purpose of working upon Army publications. The company is producing company and regimental books for the Army containing histories and information about these units; and high Army authorities have certified without results as to the vital importance of such publications in maintaining the high morale of the men in service. I have in my possession photostatic copies of letters from War Department officials expressing the desire for them.

This is only one instance of the many thousands of applications which when filed are lost in the shuffle. By useless regulation requiring the filing of new application after the applicant has been working upon his original application for many months, by requiring an appeal to be taken in certain cases when a decision is what is wanted, by sending the application to other departments for so-called special study when a decision could be made promptly by the office which originally received the application, and by many other devious forms of red tape, applications are allowed to languish and die as the small businessman vitally needed by the Nation fights for his very existence.

I am confident the Patman committee will dig deeply into the many complaints which have come to me from Louisiana and elsewhere and will give to the small businessmen of the Nation promptness in the handling of these matters and by doing so will aid the the war effort and hasten the day of victory.

NEWSPAPER COLUMNISTS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we are all agreed with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] in what he said about this writer who reflects on our white boys of the South who are fighting the Nation's battles in this war.

He need not be surprised that the writer of such slander continues to get his column into a paper that persists in carrying what is called the Merry-Go-Round, written by those scavengers who perpetrated that loathsome volume known as The Nine Old Men, in which they attempted to besmirch, beslime, belittle, and destroy confidence in the Supreme Court of the United States.

It is about time the press of this country drove such scavengers from the columns of their publications if they wish to retain the respect of the American people.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from the Oil City Derrick of Oil City, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include a speech recently made by him before the Vermont Legislature.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next I may address the House for 20 minutes after the conclusion of the legislative business and the special orders, following the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

NEWSPAPER COLUMNISTS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, if I understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] correctly, the article to which he referred appeared in the Washington Post. The Washington Post, he must remember, is one of the publications in that plot to destroy the confidence of the people in Congress, and so to destroy Congress itself. It is not surprising that it and its publisher, Eugene Meyer, holding the views they do, should make such a charge. I call attention to the fact that I have Resolution 13 on the desk. If the gentleman will help get that resolution through, we will uncover the activities of those who are in that plot. I may also say that if you will refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of a few days ago to an article inserted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], you will learn that the percentage of volunteers from Texas in the present war is greater than that from any other State.

It is doubtful if there is any other publication in the country which would open its columns to so false—so dastardly—a charge as that referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG]. Certain we may all be that neither the publisher of the Post, Mr. Meyer, or his purge-smear artists, would venture to even hint at such a charge and to intimate that any motive other than that of patriotism inspired those enlistments, if he were within the State of Texas.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to extend and revise my own remarks, and to include an article from the Baltimore Sun.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the membership to an extension of remarks of my own which I want to put in the RECORD today in which I shall include an article from the Baltimore Sun which tells about the reduction of nearly $50,000,000 per year in telephone rates which has been brought about by certain action of the Federal Communications Commission.

I hope earnestly that the committee set up to investigate this body will sift thoroughly any charges that have been made against the Commission. But I also believe the committee should carefully consider the problems with which the Commission is supposed to deal and should take proper account of the benefits that can accrue to the people from proper, constructive, and courageous action by it.

REFLECTION ON SOUTHERN YOUTH

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I address you with further reference to the subject of which my colleague [Mr. KLEBERG] and my colleague, [Mr. RANKIN], have just spoken. First, I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan for calling your attention to some statistics that were placed in the RECORD last Tuesday by myself.

The newspaper article to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] referred is not the first time that some disreputable commentator has referred to and reflected upon the patriotism of the South. May I say that anyone who intimates that the great number of volunteers from Texas in the armed services of this country is occasioned by anything other than patriotism and good citizenship is either a villain or a fool and we can prove that by facts and figures.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSSETT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Any reflection by anyone, either directly or indirectly, upon the youth of this generation is vicious and reprehensible. If the youth of any generation has risen, and I refer to the youth of all parts of the country without regard to where located, to the greatest heights when our country has been imperiled, it is the youth of today.

Mr. GOSSETT. I thank the gentleman.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next at the conclusion of the legislative business in order for the day and after any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an open letter on the subject of the farm manpower situation, the letter being written by the secretary of the South Dakota chapter of the Citizens for Victory Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT]?

There was no objection.

CREATION OF SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 18 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of seven Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, one of whom he shall designate as chairman. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made.

The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a study and investigation of the problems of small business, existing, arising, or that may arise because of the war, with particular reference to (1) whether the potentialities of small business are being adequately developed and utilized, and, if not, what factors have hindered and are hindering such development and utilization; (2) whether adequate consideration is being given to the needs of small business engaged in nonwar activities, or engaged in the transition from nonwar activities to war activities; (3) whether small business is being treated fairly and the public welfare properly and justly served through the allotments of valuable materials in which there are shortages, in the granting of priorities or preferences in the use, sales, or purchase of said materials; and (4) the need for a sound program for the solution of the post-war problems of small business.

The committee shall report to the House (or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session) as soon as practicable during the present Congress the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems desirable.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjouned, to employ such personnel, to borrow from Government departments and agencies such special assistants, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony, as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member designated by him, and shall be served by any person designated by such chairman or member. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I shall later on yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] jointly 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, in the last session of Congress there was created the so-called small businessman's committee, which has done very splendid work in the short space of time that they had to act.

The resolution now under consideration provides for the re-creation of that committee. It provides for the appointment of nine members, who would continue in their effort to aid the small businessmen of the Nation. For many months, yes; for several years, we have heard a great many complaints from the Democratic as well as the Republican side against discriminations involving the small businessman. We have heard complaints that large business has been receiving 75 to 80 percent of all the war contracts, and that the small businessmen, the small plants and factories, have been ignored, thereby creating conditions of an unsatisfactory nature in many sections of our country—conditions which have not been wholesome nor beneficial so far as the production and aid to our war effort is concerned.

May I say that as early as 1931 I introduced a bill which would have created what was then known as the National Relief Corporation to aid the small businessmen. I tried to obtain the passage of that bill in 1931 when the conditions in our country were deplorable, not on account of any Democratic activities but due to mismanagement on the part of those then in power, unfortunately. Though I endeavored to obtain the passage of that measure to afford relief to the small businessmen, nothing was done because those in power at that time thought it would be better to wait until 1932, the Presidential election year, and that it would give them a splendid issue for the reelection of the then President, Mr. Hoover. I stated then that they were making a great mistake; that conditions would get worse, and no one could foretell what would happen. They failed to act. Finally we passed the act creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which was merely an aid to the big insurance companies, the bankers, and the railroads. The little fellow was left out.

I immediately started out again and tried to amend the act to make it possible to relieve the small businessmen. Ever since that time that has been my constant aim. I will tell you why I have been doing this. I recalled the conditions that existed in 1917. I saw the avariciousness of the big business people. In 1917 big business was grabbing all the orders and obtained nearly all the work of the Government at the expense of the Middle West and the small manufacturers.

In 1939, and again in 1940, to avoid making the same mistakes again, I urged that real consideration be given to the small businessman, and that the available plants should be utilized by the Government in promoting production for war needs rather than to construct huge new plants or to expand the present large ones.

Within the last few months charges have been made that the small businessman is still being annoyed and that nothing is being done for him. I wish to inform those who make such charges that they are in error—that within the last year a great deal has been done for the small businessman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the gentleman mean by sending them questionnaires?

Mr. SABATH. No. I may say to the gentleman that 6 months ago I called the attention of the President and of others to the matter of the sending out of unnecessary questionnaires. Shortly thereafter the President urged a simplification of these questionnaires, and that is now being done. Unfortunately, some of the new agencies have not carried out the President's desire to be of aid with as little annoyance as possible to small business or business in general. I hope that now that conditions are improving from day to day the small businessman will not be annoyed by these many questionnaires but instead will be given the benefit of many war orders he has been seeking and pleading for.

When we originally considered the creation of this committee, there were many who objected to taking favorable action. I for one am indeed grateful and pleased that I have been instrumental and helpful in bringing about the creation of this committee, of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is chairman. That committee has rendered the House, the small businessmen, and the country extremely valuable service. It is due to the efforts of the members of that committee that thousands of small businessmen are now being provided with work, and that the Middle West, the North, the South, and the East are receiving a much larger portion of the work and employment. Therefore, I believe it to be our duty in the interest of the small businessman to reestablish this committee, giving them additional power so that they can continue in the future to be of service as they have in the past.

I know that many complaints a year ago came from this side. Charges were being made that people came here to Washington and did not know where to turn, that they were being sent from one agency to the other, and, after having been here for weeks, were sent home empty-handed without any work. I am, indeed, pleased to know that ever since this committee was created, the departments and bureaus have paid some attention to the little fellows who do not keep special agents here by the year—men to whom the large manufacturers can afford to pay $10,000, $15,000, $20,000, or $25,000 a year—nor do they know those agents who have an "in" with some of the departments and who, as has been testified before our committee, have received as high as $100,000 to $150,000 in commissions. The little fellows do not know such men.

Now they have a place to go; they can appeal to our congressional committee for assistance and advice. They obtain that assistance and advice, and I know that many small businessmen in many sections of the country have been benefited to a great extent. I know that you on this side of the aisle do not now hear the complaints you heard up to a few months ago. The small businessman is now being taken care of to the best of our ability, but not to the extent that he should be, because it is generally recognized that big business, the large industries, have up to 75 percent of all the war work there is to be done and only about 25 percent is left for the small plants, of which there are nearly 280,000 in the United States. However, conditions are improving. The small businessman is being taken care of and receiving consideration, mainly due to your efforts and the efforts of your committee. I appreciate and I am gratified and pleased with the services this committee has rendered.

Mr. NEWSOME. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. NEWSOME. As a little businessman, may I say that this resolution goes much deeper than just the preservation of the little businessman. It goes to the heart of the preservation of our system of distribution and the preservation of opportunity for the young men coming back from the war.

Mr. SABATH. I am grateful to the gentleman for his statement. I know that is true. I am indeed pleased that the activities of this committee will aid in the direction the gentleman has mentioned.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I am interested in the cost of the various investigating committees. About how much does a committee like this cost?

Mr. SABATH. I believe this committee spent a little over $15,000, but the chairman of the committee will explain that. May I say to the gentlewoman from Illinois that we have on that committee perhaps the two hardest-working Republicans in the House, men in whom I and the House have the utmost confidence. I know they will thoroughly and clearly explain the activities of the committee and that my distinguished colleague and every other Member will be satisfied with its activities and accomplishments and will vote unanimously for the resolution to continue its effective work for the small businessmen.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is the gentleman of the opinion that the work of that committee is such that it will require a great deal of the attention of the committee members; that is, is it a hard job, a job that requires for some time, anyway, quite a little attention?

Mr. SABATH. I do not believe that a great deal of time will be required. They already have a splendid foundation. They have made a good start, and I think from now on all they need to do is to follow the program which they began, and it will be much easier to attain speedier and still greater results. I also think that with the aid of the help the committee will obtain from some of the departments, the members of the committee will be able to give the time to legislation that may require their presence on the floor of the House—and you know I would not like to deprive any Republican from being on the floor of the House, especially at this time, because we will need all of them here at all times.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I just want to know if the gentleman thinks that it could do something for the farmer. Does the power of the committee go far enough?

Mr. SABATH. Oh, yes; that is included.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If they can restore some of the dairy herds, that would help a lot.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. And I would like to see these investigating committees have meetings here where we can attend them. Has this committee been on any trips?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know. I have not been with them. They have made some trips, but they spent very little money, taking into consideration the amount of work they did. I think that every dollar that was spent, was well spent, and has been of great benefit to the small businessmen of the country.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Has the gentleman not observed and does he not feel that a lot of this attitude which has been in existence in respect to the small businessman has been aggravated unnecessarily by some of the bureaucrats who have wanted to get their names in the newspapers, who have been telling these small businessmen that they might just as well lock their doors in their places of business? That has done a lot of harm. It may not have been intentional but it should never have been said.

Mr. SABATH. I agree with the gentleman that the conditions and the viewpoint of the small businessman have been aggravated by statements that have been made, but I will not say that it is by the bureaucrats. Unfortunately, I think it is being done by people who are unfriendly to the administration. It was done for the purpose of creating prejudice and resentment against the administration, which has actually tried to aid the small businessman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What about the results of the November election?

Mr. SABATH. Oh, well, we have no election today.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We had one the other day in Missouri.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman please yield for an observation?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. There is no politics in the matter so far as I am concerned, but I took a small businessman from a little town to a man and I do not know whether he was a Democrat or a new dealer or a Republican, but I do know that the first thing he said to this man was "Well, you might just as well go home and turn the key in your door until the war is over." My friend nearly went through the floor.

Mr. SABATH. Was this man to whom you took this individual in one of the departments?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Yes, in the War Production Board, but my little man is still in business, and is staying in business, I hope.

Mr. SABATH. I will tell the gentleman where the trouble lies. The trouble has been that too many of these one-dollar-a-year men have been brought in by various gentlemen who have been originally designated and appointed by the President, in good faith, believing that they had the interests of the country at heart and that they would supply men or surround themselves with men who also would have the interest of the country at heart and bring about economy in the departments, as well as efficiency and a greater production, but unfortunately, as I have stated, some of these men who have been brought in by these dollar-a-year officials in various agencies and departments were connected with large industries, with large corporations, and they had their friends and favorites to take care of. Consequently when a little fellow came in he would be pushed aside, and he would be discouraged, so that those on the inside could exercise free rein in giving those whom they knew and favored advance information and award them the bulk of the contracts. That is the reason this committee was created, and that is the reason I am urging its reappointment.

I say to the House that here is a file, only a portion of a file, compiled in my work to aid the small businessman. I know that 2 years or 2½ years ago I sought the assistance of Donald M. Nelson, then Director of Purchases of the Office of Production Management, and after explaining the situation to him he finally promised that he would create a separate division to aid in the fair distribution of contracts to small manufacturers. I stated to him that the President urged such a division, and I know that Mr. Nelson talked to him about it and I know that the President did say that he was interested in the small businessman. Well, the division was created in the agency—the Division of Contract Distribution—and a businessman was put at the head of it, but the division failed to effect a distribution of contracts to the small manufacturers; whether through lack of cooperation of dollar-a-year procurement officials or due to inexperienced officials within the Division itself who did not have a knowledge of the problems of small manufacturers seeking contracts, I do not know. Therefore, the efforts of Mr. Nelson at that time to help the small manufacturers did not materialize, as I had hoped they would, and as he had hoped.

Nevertheless, we have created a new organization through the aid and assistance of this committee. A law was enacted in July 1942 establishing the Smaller War Plants Corporation which is in position to see that every small businessman or manufacturer who has a plant that can be utilized will have it utilized in the war effort. We know that the operation of small plants will tend to economy and efficiency and also will expedite production as well as serving to balance employment in various sections of the country.

Mr. NEWSOME. May I suggest to the gentleman that through the necessities of the war, through shortages and restrictions, we are actually eliminating so many little businesses that we are creating a monopoly.

The purpose of this committee is to formulate plans so that individual opportunity will exist in the future. It is very important.

Mr. SABATH. Yes, sir.

Mr. DEWEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. To my colleague, of course, I could not refuse.

Mr. DEWEY. I would like to call to the gentleman's attention, as well as the attention of the members of this committee, which I feel very certain will be continued, the fact that due to the cooperation between members of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on the Judiciary, section 12 was put into the so-called small-business bill, which permits cooperation between small businesses without running foul of the provisions of the Anti-Trust Act and the Federal Trade Commission Act. I think the committee should draw the attention of small businesses to that possibility of cooperation in the war effort. It is not usually given.

Mr. SABATH. Yes. I am familiar with that provision. I know that Senator MURRAY and his committee, in conjunction with our committee, has worked on it, and the men who represent so-called small business have been active to bring that about. I was indeed pleased with the inclusion of the provision in the Smaller War Plants Corporation Act and that it will materially aid the small manufacturer in negotiating war contracts without running counter to the Anti-trust Act and the Federal Trade Commission Act goes without saying, and I appreciate the cooperation of the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Banking and Currency that led to the incorporation of section 12 of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that since the passage of the Smaller War Plants Act there have been some complaints as to its activity—complaints here and there that it was not effectively functioning in aiding the small manufacturer to obtain contracts. Aside from its duty to effect the distribution of contracts to small manufacturers, it has at its disposal an authorization of $150,000,000 for loan purposes and for a slightly higher award price in sections where a manufacturer is compelled to pay high wages and rentals. I regret that I have not had the time to check or investigate the activities of the Corporation to date—as to the number of contracts that it has been instrumental in placing with small manufacturers, the loans made, et cetera. I am told that within the last few days a change has been made in the directorship of the Corporation and that a gentleman has been appointed who is a business executive and a man of ability.

There has just come to my notice a release dated January 18 from the Office of War Information of the War Production Board, carrying an announcement of Hon. Lou E. Holland, Deputy Director of the War Production Board and Chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. The release carries a heartening report as to the placement of contracts awarded to concerns employing from 5 to 500 persons, totaling over $1,000,000,000 in the last 2 months. I am inserting it in the RECORD for the information of the Congress and the small businessmen of the country, as follows:

Over a billion dollars' worth of Army contracts have been placed during the last 2 months with concerns employing from 5 to 500 persons, it was announced yesterday by Lou E. Holland, Deputy Director of the War Production Board and Chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. This is in support of the personal pledge given by Lt. Gen. Brehon Somervell, Commanding Officer, Services of Supply, War Department, to Mr. Holland that the procurement officers of the War Department would cooperate to the fullest with the Smaller War Plants Division.

Mr. Holland hailed the cooperation of the War Department procurement officers and predicted that this was simply the forerunner of an even greater distribution of war contracts among distressed plants.

"During November and December alone," Mr. Holland pointed out "7 supply services of the War Department awarded 43,056 supply contracts totaling $846,000,000 to plants employing between five and five hundred persons. These contracts account for 24 percent of the total dollar volume of all contracts awarded by these services during these 2 months. Additional subcontracts were distributed by the Army among 3,274 firms with a total spending of $151,500,000."

The Air Forces procurement officers at Wright Field in Dayton, Ohio, have placed during November and December a total $50,300,000 among 733 firms employing less than 500 wage earners. This business, Mr. Holland said, was increasing steadily.

The credit for the distribution of this total of $1,047,800,000 of war contracts to small plants, according to Mr. Holland, is due to the full support being given by the procurement agencies of the Army to the principles established by the Smaller War Plants Division.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether all the complaints registered against the Smaller War Plants Corporation are justified, but I feel that credit should be given when due, and the release indicates aid has been given in the past 2 months. The Corporation was appointed in August 1942, and has been operating approximately 6 months. To those of us who know of the trials and tribulations of the small businessman coming to Washington during the past 2 years, who were given the run-around and forced to return to their homes empty-handed, it can be surmised that the Corporation had many difficulties to overcome. As I stated earlier in my remarks, the infiltration of dollar-a-year men in the early defense agencies and the appointment of business executives connected with firms seeking Government contracts, all led to the awarding of contracts to the firms with which they were associated, to the exclusion of the small manufacturers. The task of the Corporation has been to break down the grabbing of contracts by the large firms and the fair and equitable distribution to the small manufacturer. The release indicates that some departments and agencies are cooperating with the Smaller War Plants Corporation and I feel that it should be the immediate duty of our small business investigating committee to ascertain what departments and agencies have not cooperated with the Corporation since its establishment, or why they have not done so sooner. I know that the membership will encourage the new chairman and it is hoped that the $150,000,000 authorization will be utilized in addition to the other aid that we can give to small business. The small business committee has been created to aid small business and that is what the administration and the President are anxious to have accomplished.

I reserve the balance of my time and I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] 30 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a statement made by former President Herbert Hoover last night.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that has already been done, but, without objection, permission will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important resolution. It comes to the House with the unanimous report of the Committee on Rules. It continues the special committee that was set up in the last Congress to study the problems of small business. The only amendment made to the resolution was to increase the membership from seven to nine.

I believe one of the most important problems before the Congress and the American people is that of small business. The plight of the small businessman is appalling and tragic. Some 400,000 small businessmen are faced with the very serious danger of extinction. They are fighting for their very existence against regimentation, against red tape, against the burden of taxes, and if this Congress does not do something immediately hundreds of thousands of small businessmen will be ruined and wiped out with all their investments, goodwill, and employment. Therefore, the expenditure of a mere $25,000 to help solve this problem is little enough.

I wish I could agree with my colleague, the chairman of the Rules Committee [Mr. SABATH], that the condition of the small businessmen is greatly improved and they are facing happier and better times. We have to face conditions as they are. Everybody knows, because there are small businessmen in every congressional district in the United States, including the big cities, that they are being backed to the wall and are being squeezed out of business, and that most of them are afraid they cannot continue much longer in their livelihood.

Every Member of Congress, particularly on this side, knows that one of the main issues in the recent campaign for Congress was the preservation of free American enterprise and opposition to collectivism and totalitarianism. The small businessman for the past 150 years or more has been the backbone of the American system of free enterprise, based upon private initiative and reasonable profit. It is the small businessman that has made for the growth, development, and prosperity of the United States. Today the small businessmen are appealing, Democrats and Republicans alike by the hundreds of thousands, to the Congress for immediate assistance and protection. They are properly giving Congress the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help." It is the duty of Congress to act before it is too late.

I admit that this special committee we are about to re-create, or any other committee of Congress, cannot solve the entire problem, and that hundreds of thousands of small businessmen may be forced out of business within a year due to the regimentation of the New Deal and its collectivist doctrines. They cannot hire labor. They cannot compete in the labor market. They cannot get goods to replace those taken from their shelves. The war is taking their sons and salesmen, and gasoline restrictions and priorities make the plight of the small businessmen desperate. Back of the entire problem is the question of free enterprise as opposed to collectivism. This special committee has rendered great service already, and we believe it will continue to render even greater service to the small businessmen, but none of us must be so foolish as to believe for a moment that this committee will have the power to solve the problem.

The problem is far deeper. It has to do with our times. It has to do with the war and taxes. It has to do with the New Deal and the march to collectivism, regimentation, and bureaucracy, and its failure to distribute war orders to the small shops and factories.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman from New York will agree that every member of the committee, both Democrat and Republican, is wholeheartedly working to try to make the maximum contribution toward solving this very trying and difficult problem.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the gentleman's statement is correct; it is a very able committee. I shall yield 10 minutes each to 2 of the minority members, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER], under the rule so that the new Members, and the old Members too, may know what has been done and what the committee expects to do for the small businessmen of America. Everybody knows that neither this committee nor even the Congress can solve the whole problem. They know also, however, that without assistance the small businessman cannot continue in existence. We must do everything we can to help him and do it immediately.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the chairman of this special committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], 5 minutes.

SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of this body for 14 years, and every year during this time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has done something toward aiding and assisting small business. Everything he said here this morning I remember. I remember his efforts to aid small business; the small businessman does not have a better friend in either the House or the Senate than the able and distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Obviously, in the short time allotted to me, it will be impossible to give a full account of the activities of this committee, but may I suggest, that the committee is entitled to the major part of the credit for the passage in the House of four important laws in the past year for aid and assistance to small business.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman needs it—and I think he is entitled to it—I shall be pleased to yield him up to 3 minutes of the time on this side.

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman will yield me 3 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois yield me 7, that will give me 10 which I will appreciate very much.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I had a request for 2 minutes; I yield that time to the chairman of this special committee.

Mr. FISH. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the chairman of the special committee should be heard in the House, should be given an opportunity to tell the House what their committees are doing on such occasions as this.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I say in the beginning that I denounce—and I hope you listen to this—I denounce as untrue and unjustified any statement by any person or any official of this Government who says it is necessary for 300,000 small businessmen to go out of business during the next year or at any other time during this war. It is absolutely unjustified and unnecessary. This Congress has done everything that a Congress could do to save the small manufacturing and producing companies, and if the law is placed into execution as contemplated by the Congress when it passed it, there is no reason in the world why even 1 percent of the manufacturing and producing concerns of America should be forced out of business. That law states that the Smaller War Plants Corporation with plenty of money shall have the power to do what is necessary to save every manufacturing and producing concern that can make either war supplies or essential civilian goods, and I submit to you that any such concern can make either war supplies or essential civilian goods. This being true, when this Smaller War Plants Corporation is put into effect in the way and manner contemplated by Congress, not even 1 percent of the concerns of America should go into bankruptcy or go out of business; it will be unnecessary, and if they do the fault will be in the administration of the act.

It is true that in the distributing business Congress has not done much to help the distributors. It is necessary that we preserve our distribution system. Without the distribution system we shall be forced into socialism or some other form of paternalistic operation. We do not want that; we want independent business to survive. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] said, it is the backbone of the country and should be protected and preserved by this Congress. On distribution our committee has heard much evidence, and we have made certain reports to the Office of Price Administration and to the War Production Board, and the recommendations we have made are being put into effect. We believe they will be helpful. Just because there will be a scarcity of goods does not mean that the distributors should be put out of business; it means that they can all continue in business if they are not hampered, or harmed, or injured in some way, but are given a fair and square deal. They may receive diminished incomes and diminished profits, but that does not mean that they should absolutely go out of business. It is my belief that the people of this country expect Congress to delegate plenty of power to the Executive. I do not think there is a question but what the people of this country want Congress to check up carefully on the administration of these laws, and do it frequently, to make sure that these laws are being administered as Congress intended they should be administered. It is true that lots of mistakes will be made; the people expect mistakes to be made, many of them, in any huge program, but the people have a right to expect, and this Congress has a right to expect, that these mistakes will be quickly corrected when they are discovered.

One thing that was seriously and vitally wrong with the Office of Price Administration was that they would not quickly or within even a reasonable time correct the obvious, the known, the gross errors that they had committed.

That was the fatal mistake that O. P. A. made. Let us hope that from now on the O. P. A. will delegate some power, and plenty of power, to their district and regional offices to pass upon these minor questions, certainly they will be able to pass upon them, and people will not have to come to Washington, and that they will not be bogged down with red tape in the administration of that law.

May I say a word about the laws that this committee has helped to secure the passage of during the last Congress. First, there was the law to help the automobile dealers and the tire dealers, who were the first victims of this war, the first casualties of this war. The law that this committee sponsored and secured the passage of has been satisfactory and has kept those people in business. They are indeed grateful to this Congress and to our committee for the help that we gave them.

Another law was the Smaller War Plants Corporation Act which has helped tens of thousands of small businesses, although the Smaller War Plants Corporation itself has not been functioning satisfactorily. It has been a failure. But by reason of the intent and the purposes as expressed in that act, the various procurement agencies of the Government have been carrying forward that intent and purpose and have kept materially and substantially tens of thousands of small businesses operating in this country.

The other bill that I have reference to is a bill having to do with red tape, or Federal reports. Our committee went on a trip. We had been persuaded to go to nine cities in this country to hold public hearings. We heard every witness who came before us to be heard. We listened to testimony from 6 to 9 hours a day and we heard hundreds and hundreds of witnesses representing hundreds of associations. We heard the problems first hand. I believe the people appreciated the fact that they had an opportunity, without having to come to Washington, to appear before a legislative or a congressional committee and present their grievances or their complaints and knowing that they would be printed and distributed to every Member of Congress and to every member of the Executive department and would therefore receive consideration. As I say, I believe they appreciated that, but we found out very soon that the red tape, the useless questionnaires, the unnecessary reports, were causing people to get so mad about them that they were actually forgetting they had sons in the service engaged in an all-out war, total war. They were really irritated to the extent that they were forgetting we were at war. So it was necessary that we do something to try to eliminate these unnecessary reports.

We came back here after holding four hearings and appeared before a legislative committee in support of our bill which we had introduced on Federal reports to try to eliminate some of this red tape. The House passed our bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the House passed our bill and by reason of that every report that any agency wants to ask some one to give, or every inquiry, every questionnaire, must first be submitted to the Director of the Budget and the Budget Bureau will determine whether or not it is necessary. In many cases they already have the information.

In conclusion, may I praise the members of this committee, Republicans and Democrats alike. They are all good, sincere, conscientious men, who have the interests of the small businessman at heart. They are doing an excellent job and I am doing my very best to cooperate with them.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER] a very distinguished member of that committee.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I am going to devote myself briefly and pointedly to a part of a preliminary report made by this committee on December 17 and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at that time. Our distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas, has very ably pointed out some of the problems which the committee met in the field and a part of the analysis made with particular emphasis on our concern over the Smaller War Plants Corporation, a creature of the past Congress.

On December 17, our committee made this preliminary report, and may I explain at this point that the final report is now in printers' proof form and will, in a few days, be ready for final distribution to the Members of this House. Among other things this report stated as follows:

> On June 6 of the present year, the Congress established the Smaller War Plants Corporation. The Smaller War Plants Corporation was created for the purpose of assisting small manufacturers who could produce war supplies to obtain Government contracts and thus to utilize to a maximum degree the full producing power of the country in the war effort.

We found very definite, vital war machines, instruments needed in the war effort, lying idle throughout the country, while other concerns were fighting over priorities for new machines which actually duplicated these idle devices.

> The Corporation was given large powers by Congress to rectify a situation which had been too long neglected. Upon the successful functioning of this Corporation depended, in large measure, the fate of many thousands of small manufacturers in the United States.

I want to pay particular attention to this because it is a very brief and a very much condensed preliminary report, and, if you please, an indictment of a situation which we found deplorable.

> The committee was shocked to find that though the Corporation had been in existence for nearly 6 months, its results in the important south and southwestern parts of the United States have been practically negligible. In none of the cities visited was there an operating organization set up to represent the Corporation and to do the work for which it was created.

We came back to Washington and held hearings in joint session with the Senate Small Business Committee and heard the heads of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. These officials had the temerity to come before the joint sessions of the two Small Business Committees and tell us that they virtually had a Nation-wide functioning, active organization. We know that, and subsequent events have proved this organization was nothing but a paper organization existing only here in Washington, and that they had no instructions of any benefit whatever to men in the field, nor did they have any men in the field.

The Small Business Committee of the House went to work to see that something would be done to rectify this very terrible situation, with the result that changes have recently been made. We found Donald Nelson, head of the War Production Board, willing to cooperate. There has been a shake-up in this Corporation. We are hopeful now that we will get some definite, progressive results. Up until now it has been pathetic, it has been an insult to the intelligence of this Congress.

Mr. MUNDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLOESER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. I wonder if the gentleman could advise the House as to the number of primary contracts that have been negotiated by the Smaller War Plants Corporation in the 7 months of its existence?

Mr. PLOESER. If the gentleman means by "negotiated" the number of prime contracts which have been accepted by the Smaller War Plants Corporation as a prime contractor, up until the time of these hearings—none.

Mr. MUNDT. That is my understanding. May I say to the House that the Members have confidence in this committee and I am sure it will be instructed to continue the work, although we are bitterly disappointed with the past results of some of these agencies. Can the gentleman advise the House, further, whether the newspaper reports that Colonel Johnson is to be the new chief indicate that Mr. Holland has been removed? Has he resigned or has he been reduced in rank?

Mr. PLOESER. I have not been sufficiently informed in the last few hours to give the gentleman anything definite on it. I will say this for Mr. Holland, there never was a time when this committee questioned his integrity. I do not mind saying that at least one member of the committee—and I am talking about myself—questioned his ability to do the job.

Mr. MUNDT. The results have been bitterly disappointing. Unless he can explain to the country the reason for that failure, it seems to me his removal and resignation are certainly merited. However, I for one believe that Mr. Holland has a right to be heard if he feels something beyond his control has contributed to this dismal record.

Mr. PLOESER. There has been no explanation for the failure. It was 3 months before an Executive order was ready to set this operation into motion. We created the law in June. In July Mr. Holland was appointed. In August he was permitted to start looking for an office and for a staff. Finally, in the middle of September, an Executive order was issued giving him authority to function. and 3 months later nothing had been accomplished.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLOESER. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BROOKS. I am tremendously impressed with the importance of and the need for the work of this committee. As the gentleman has just indicated, one of the things that has impressed me as being needed is speed, promptness, and dispatch in handling matters that must be attended to so that industry may be continued. For instance, an application goes in for materials. If month by month a delay occurs and no action is taken, that is tantamount to smothering that business. There should be promptness.

Mr. PLOESER. May I say at this point that we are getting increasing cooperation from the Army and the Navy. It is not always necessary and it may not even be desirable for the Smaller War Plants Corporation to become a prime contractor. If merely the influence of the law as passed by the Congress and the creation of the Smaller War Plants Corporation were sufficient to keep the Army and Navy reminded that small business must live, we would go a long way toward alleviating many of the problems. But, the Smaller War Plants Corporation has great authority and power, which should be used whenever other agencies fail to perform in the proper distribution of war-production contracts.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLOESER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Does the gentleman think Colonel Johnson, who I understand is the head of Johnson & Johnson, the biggest corporation in the medical supplies business in the United States, is particularly familiar with or sympathetic with the problems of small business?

Mr. PLOESER. I hesitate to say. I do not know Mr. Johnson. But let it be said that the fact that the man may represent big business as far as his industry is concerned should have no bearing on the question. If he is able and is a good big businessman he will know that if small business is crushed so will be big business. There is no chance for big business to live if small business is crushed behind the screen of this war effort. Let the socialistic planners accomplish the destruction of small business and big business will find its management taken over by Government. If we are to have American free enterprise small business units must live.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. We had Floyd Odlum in there. He was a big businessman, a Wall Street operator, but he was not successful in the field of lining things up for small business.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], another distinguished member of the committee.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is any question about whether or not this resolution will prevail here today. I am convinced it will. However, I think it is very much in order that some report be made of the things that have been accomplished and possibly something said about what may be expected in the way of accomplishment in the future.

To go back a little, when the extraordinary defense effort of the country began in June of 1940 we began to see something of the impact of that effort on the small business of the country. Members of Congress, being peculiarly responsible and responsive to the people of their districts, began to get the reverberations of that impact. Demands were made that the Congress try to lessen the force of that impact if at all possible.

The distinguished chairman of our Committee on Rules has gone back into quite ancient history to talk about some things that might border on politics although he himself has for years been an ardent champion of small business. In view of that, possibly it may be in order for me to suggest that in August of 1941 the first official action in the Congress looking to the solving of some of these problems of small business was taken by the minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Honorable JOSEPH MARTIN, in the appointment of a Republican committee to study these problems. I served as chairman of that committee. The day that committee appointment was announced, the resolution for the creation of this official committee was dropped into the hopper.

That Republican committee held hearings during that summer and fall and did much, I am sure, to convince a lot of the folks downtown who are in charge of administering these different programs that practices and policies could be corrected to the end that small business would be benefited, and that without interfering with the defense, either.

Finally, on December 4, we got around to the adoption of the resolution setting up this official committee, and I am sure that all of us on the minority side were glad to terminate the operations of our Republican committee to join in the efforts of the official committee.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in 1939, 1940, and 1941 I introduced bills and resolutions to aid the small businessman. The gentleman remembers that, because he has always been interested in this problem himself.

Mr. HALLECK. I certainly would not question the gentleman's statement. The gentleman has been interested in small business, and he has been working in that direction, although I must say again that as far as any official notice and effort in this direction was concerned on the part of the leadership of the majority generally in the Congress it was not in evidence.

Something has been said about legislation that has been enacted as a result of various committee hearings. But really the legislation enacted, helpful as it is, is not the only good result that comes from public hearings like those of this committee. It is highly important that the small businessman over the country, the fellow who cannot come to Washington and who is not represented by full-time operators here, be given a forum in which his views can be expressed and his voice heard not only by the Congress but by those in charge of administrative agencies who have directly to do with the various practices and policies which so vitally affect him. Let me suggest to you, because I know whereof I speak, that sometimes these people will not listen to anything other than the loud voice of a lot of indignant people who finally get an opportunity to make their views felt and heard.

I might suggest, also, that these hearings have in my opinion done much to establish the confidence of the people in the Congress of the United States. They have exhibited an earnest and sincere desire upon the part of the Congress, through the agency of its select committees, to find out what their problems are and do something about them. For that reason, among others, the work of the committee has been highly valuable, and will continue to be valuable.

As Federal controls of business increase, as the O. P. A. is set up, and rations this article and it rations that article, and all these controls extend over the country, the opportunity for discriminations and inequities against small business become more prevalent, and so the need for doing something for small business becomes greater.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes; I yield to my colleague.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I take it my colleague from Indiana, who is on this committee, is familiar with certain practices of some of these Federal employment agencies throughout the country, who are imposing their will upon the small operators, and taking away their key men; that is, their mechanics and such as that, and putting them in defense industries or demanding if they do not go there they must go into the draft. I wonder if the committee has looked into that at all or has any views upon it?

Mr. HALLECK. The committee has looked into that, and in respect to various operations has taken considerable evidence, and I am sure the gentleman will find when our report is filed, that much attention has been given to that very subject. And much more attention will be given to it. Just one illustration: Everyone knows that if we do not keep some automobile mechanics in the shops over the country, one of these days the cars cannot carry the workers to their jobs. There has been a terrific drain upon the men in the automobile shops. That has been investigated, and now there is a directive that will in a measure cure that situation.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. MUNDT. I take this time because I do not want the colloquy that I had with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER] to be construed as any indictment made by me against Mr. Holland until he has had ample opportunity to speak for himself. There may be some extenuating circumstances in the matter, and the country is entitled to know them. Mr. Holland told a group of Senators and Representatives at a small businessmen's meeting in the Wardman Park a few months ago he would either get results or tell the country why. The Nation is entitled to the facts. Can the gentleman shed any light as to why 3 months elapsed between the time that Congress authorized the establishment of this Corporation and the time the President issued an order permitting Mr. Holland to begin to function?

Mr. HALLECK. I think there are some things about it that probably should be said, although this committee has not been carried on as a political matter at all and I do not think it should be. It is entirely fair to say that Mr. Holland was not appointed until months after the act was passed by Congress, and the gentleman knows where that responsibility lies as well as I do. In the second place, the directive which made it possible for him to enter upon the discharge of his duties was terribly delayed. And it should be said for Mr. Holland that he undoubtedly accomplished much in bringing about a better cooperation by procurement agencies.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. JENSEN. I hope, before the gentleman concludes, that he will explain how these small businessmen can proceed to take advantage of this legislation. Many of them do not understand just how to go about it. I know some of them, and I wish the gentleman would give some attention to that.

Mr. HALLECK. That involves the operation of the Small War Plants Act. It was the intention of the committee and of the Congress that there be set up in each W. P. B. office throughout the country a division of the Small War Plants Corporation, which would include in its personnel trained engineers and others who could actually advise and help the little fellow to find his place in the war-production effort. These divisions are now being set up. I would advise any small businessman who thinks he can produce something essential to contact the division in his territory. Those separate and distinct agencies were not created with the speed we thought they should be created. There has been much criticism of the delay, but the failures cannot be charged to our committee, as the report read by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER] points out. The committee itself criticizes the delay.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a portion of the report heretofore filed by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Indiana 1 minute more.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. Did the gentleman find that the Small Business Division had to fight for its very existence against the parent organization and all of its connections?

Mr. HALLECK. I do not know whether I quite get what the gentleman means, but will attempt to answer his question. It has been suggested that the creation of this committee and its work has created a consciousness in the minds of all procurement agencies of the needs of small business and the rights of small business. That there has been some resistance on the part of procurement agencies to the giving of contracts to the small men cannot be denied. Insofar as that is true, it does represent resistance to the Smaller War Plants Act and small business. On the other hand, I think there is no question but what there is now a more enlightened and sympathetic attitude on the part of the procurement agencies, much of which has resulted from the hearings and reports and the work of these small business committees.

Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON. Is that friction being removed, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. HALLECK. I am confident that it is.

Now, to conclude, everyone must realize that when the Nation changes from a peacetime production of consumer goods to a wartime production of war goods, business as usual is out the window. There can be no such thing. Producers who cannot convert to war production are hard hit. Distributors with little or no consumer goods to sell are hard hit. But it is the job of all of us to lighten the blow as much as possible and equalize opportunities wherever we can. If that is done, much of small business, otherwise doomed to extinction, may be kept alive for the duration to be on hand and functioning when our great need for reconstruction arises.

Our committee has striven in that direction. The gentlemen from Texas and Missouri have already discussed at some length our efforts to bring the manufacturers into the war picture. The gentleman from Missouri has read from our intermediate report regarding the Smaller War Plants Corporation. The report which we filed is no soft-soaping proposition, as its reading will disclose. On the contrary it has called a spade a spade, letting the chips fall where they will.

The problems of distributors were definitely before our committee. We made recommendations in our report of benefit to them. We are glad to report that these recommendations are now being out into operation at least in some measure. To show what I have in mind, I quote from the report:

We have, however, discovered certain conditions which we believe to be so urgently in need of relief that they should be called to the attention of the Congress, the administrative agencies responsible for their existence, and the country, at once. We desire to invite your immediate attention to the following critical situations, which we have found to exist in the war effort of the Nation:

1. On June 6 of the present year, the Congress established the Smaller War Plants Corporation. The Smaller War Plants Corporation was created for the purpose of assisting small manufacturers who could produce war supplies to obtain Government contracts and thus to utilize to a maximum degree the full producing power of the country in the war effort. The Corporation was given large powers by Congress to rectify a situation which had been too long neglected. Upon the successful functioning of this Corporation depended, in large measure, the fate of many thousands of small manufacturers in the United States. The committee was shocked to find that though the Corporation had been in existence for nearly 6 months, its results in the important South and Southwestern parts of the United States have been practically negligible. In none of the cities visited was there an operating organization set up to represent the Corporation and to do the work for which it was created. Yet in all the localities visited, the committee found many unused facilities, and many distressed small manufacturers who have been trying desperately to obtain contracts to produce necessary war materials. On December 15 the House Committee on Small Business attended a joint session with the Senate Committee on Small Business to hear Mr. Lou E. Holland, Chairman of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, make a report on the progress of his agency. It is the considered opinion of the House committee that the failure of the program of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, as evidenced in our hearings, can be attributed to the management of the Corporation.

2. Our existing system of distribution of consumer goods has been seriously undermined and weakened as a result of the policies thus far pursued by the Office of Price Administration and a collapse which might gravely imperil the entire war effort appears inevitable unless these policies are speedily corrected. To factors, all of which could and should be adjusted by the Office of Price Administration and the War Production Board under existing law, are primarily responsible for this threatened break-down on the home front:

(a) Price squeezes: In so many instances as, in the aggregate, to constitute an insuperable obstacle to thousands of distributors remaining in business, the operating margins between replacement costs and ceiling prices are too thin to permit of continued operations except at a loss. In some instances, the current replacement costs are actually higher than the current ceiling prices.

In other cases the retail price ceiling has been so low as to induce a decline in the production of commodities vitally necessary to the health of the Nation. The outlook for an adequate supply of dairy products, for instance, is dark indeed, unless the Office of Price Administration will revise its retail price ceilings so as to stop an impending wholesale slaughter of milk cows. Many dairy farmers are finding it more profitable to sell their cows for meat rather than try to make a profit on their milk.

The situations to which we refer are situations of long standing. The committee listened to complaint after complaint of urgent appeals to the Office of Price Administration in Washington for relief from such situations, which were completely ignored, or which were handled with so many complications of red tape and bureaucratic buck passing as to leave the complainants bewildered. The general inflexibility of price ceilings on the retail front is apparently widespread and is causing many retailers either to close their doors or to contemplate going out of business. The failure of the Office of Price Administration in this matter has seriously crippled and indeed threatens to destroy distribution in the United States.

The obvious practical remedy for this is, of course, to pass on cost increases permitted by the Government at any level to all other levels, plus such reasonable operating markup as will protect the retailer or other distributor against actual loss and the consumer from unwarranted gougings. Consumers must be protected and inflation avoided, but those worthy objectives are not properly attained by requiring retailers to do necessary business at a loss. The consumer can be protected and inflation prevented without the destruction of the retailer.

(b) Inequitable distribution of merchandise: In addition to the burden of price squeezes, the distributor is also faced with an acute problem of obtaining his fair share of available consumer goods. From the testimony which the committee heard, the conclusion is inescapable that some method for an equitable distribution of consumer goods is necessary if many distributors are to survive.

3. Unnecessary reports and complexity and multiplicity of regulations: We recognize that it is necessary for administrative agencies to obtain information from time to time through the medium of questionnaires and that certain administrative regulations are a necessary evil, especially in time of war. However, the present situation is one of bureaucracy run riot and, unless corrective measures are speedily taken, this factor alone will close the doors of thousands of businesses which might otherwise remain open. And what is said here about unnecessary governmental red tape in the field of distribution of course applies equally to manufacturing.

As was stated above, these conditions can and should be corrected by the executive directors under existing law. If they are not, however, our committee proposes to offer legislation at the beginning of the Seventy-eighth Congress to compel their correction in order to avert the destruction of independent small business—and with it, the middle class—in this country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, during the past several weeks there has been a concerted effort to discourage and stop unnecessary driving of automobiles throughout the country. People are saving their tires because of an acute shortage of rubber. Gas is rationed to the minimum. In the Eastern States a ban is put on pleasure driving because of a dire shortage of gas. I am informed gasoline sales in the eastern part of our country have been further reduced as much as 40 or 50 percent during the past few weeks. People are warned to comply with rules and regulations established for saving every bit of rubber and gas possible.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are advised through a Washington press release that Federal officials in Washington, exclusive of those in the War and Navy Departments, traveled about 673,000 miles during the last month. That is 27 times the mileage around the earth.

According to figures obtained from the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department, Government department automobiles in the District of Columbia consumed 44,868 gallons of gasoline last month. And, as I have said, this does not include Army and Navy automobiles. This is 15 percent more than was consumed during the same period last year. It is suggested there are more employees in Washington than during the same period a year ago. The fact, however, is that the 45,000 additional employees who came to Washington during the past year are nearly all clerks and stenographers, and do not rate free official transportation.

Mr. Speaker, while the Government is clamping down on motorists in order to conserve a dwindling supply of gasoline in the East and to save every ounce of rubber possible needed for war purposes, it would be well, I think, to do a little cracking down on some of the useless driving that is being done by certain Government employees and bureaucrats in the Nation's Capital. It would save rubber and gas and would have a wholesome effect. Of course, we want to save gas and rubber; but why not begin at home?

The SPEAKER. All time has expired. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 2, strike out "seven" and insert "nine."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation:

JANUARY 20, 1943.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I respectfully tender herewith my resignation as a member of the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, this action being necessitated by the fact that I have been assigned to the Committee on Naval Affairs, an exclusive committee.

Cordially yours,

WINDER R. HARRIS.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

CONTINUING THE SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE AIR ACCIDENTS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 33, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee to Investigate Air Accidents authorized by House Resolution 125 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, and House Resolution 403, Seventy-seventh Congress, second session, be continued for a period of 90 days from this date for the purpose of allowing said select committee to complete its unfinished work and investigations and file its report and make recommendations to the House covering the hearings held and the studies made by said committee since March 12, 1941.

That said select committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to act during the present Congress for a period of 90 days from this date with all powers granted to it under House Resolution 125 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, and House Resolution 403 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, second session.

That the funds appropriated to said select committee by House Resolutions 525 and 570 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, second session, or any part thereof not already expended by said select committee, are hereby made available to said select committee to take care of the further expenses of conducting said investigation and study, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistance, and shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or subcommittee thereof conducting the investigation and study or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the last two words, and in line 5, strike out "days from this date" and insert "from January 1, 1943, to March 1, 1943."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "period", strike out "of 90 days from this date" and insert "from January 1, 1943, to March 1, 1943."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the committee amendments are agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I shall later on yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] 30 minutes. I hope he will not take that much time. I am going to be very brief and I will not take up any more time than is absolutely necessary. For that reason I ask unanimous consent that I may have the right to extend and revise my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this resolution originally contemplated to extend the life of this committee for 90 days, but after the Rules Committee heard the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] and had taken the matter up, we agreed that the time should be limited to March 1, by which time that committee is to make its final report. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, it has been made clear to the Rules Committee that the select committee has done an extra amount of work and they did not have time to complete some extremely important investigations and prepare their report in full. However, the Rules Committee came to the conclusion that the select committee will be able to complete its work and prepare its report by March 1. That was satisfactory and the Rules Committee unanimously agreed to that shortened time.

Mr. Speaker, most of you heard the report of the committee yesterday in executive session. I am satisfied that any Member who listened to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW], and the others, is satisfied that the committee has rendered very valuable service. They have called attention to many of the shortcomings and abuses. I, for one, feel that many lives will be saved in the future because of the recommendations made by this committee and the work this committee has done. Originally I was criticized for favoring this resolution, and especially because the committee made one trip outside the country, but having heard the statement of the gentleman from Texas, I am sure you feel the committee has rendered our country a great service. Their studies and their calling attention to conditions existing in other countries resulted in our controlling the air lines that formerly were controlled by the Nazis, Italians, and others. This in itself, I feel, deserves the unanimous approval of all who are interested in the future of our Nation and the welfare of the country.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. It is not contemplated that the committee will take any trips between now and the time it winds up its affairs, is it?

Mr. SABATH. No; I do not think it is contemplated that they shall make any trips. The trip they did take cost only a few dollars, yet is has been worth millions for every dollar it cost. I do not know whether the gentlewoman was present when the report was made in executive session, but had she been present, she would be more than pleased that the committee did make that trip, and I feel sure she would say it rendered wonderful service.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I was present. Let us put it this way: There are able men on that committee; there is work to be done in the Congress. I hope they will stay here to help us take care of the affairs of the country.

Mr. SABATH. As I stated before, I am not in favor of having Members away from the House when important legislation is being considered. I know that as a rule these four Members are here. When they did make that trip they were not gone any length of time, and although they are very capable men the House did not lose a great deal from lack of their presence at that time. The service they rendered, I repeat, has been justified. They should be commended instead of being criticized for making the trip.

Mr. Speaker, after hearing the reports of these four gentlemen of the select committee, and in the light of the extraordinarily valuable service they have rendered to the House and to the country, I, myself, would not hesitate to extend the life of this select committee for the next 2 years, and not only up to March 1. However, the gentlemen of the select committee are reluctant to continue this work, due, I presume, to some unjustified criticism directed against them, which I, myself, greatly deplore.

In conclusion, let me say that unfortunately more planes and more lives are being lost, and, consequently, I feel that every effort should be made to reduce these accidents investigated by the select committee and reported in the newspapers. Certainly it is our duty to ourselves and to the country to do all in our power to prevent this tremendous loss of lives and planes. I regret exceedingly there are some committees and some members of committees who have felt and who feel now that this select committee has encroached upon their jurisdiction and prerogatives. My own view is that it is not a question of what committee should retain jurisdiction, but the question uppermost in my mind is how we can best serve the country, in further safeguarding the terrific losses to which I have called attention, while at the same time doubling our air power. I feel that the select committee in calling attention to the control of the air routes in the Central and South Americas has brought about the taking over of this control by American interests and by our Government. It is impossible to overestimate the tremendous value of our control of these air routes to our national interests during this war period, and certainly to the postwar development of our foreign commerce. Though I naturally feel that we must continue to devote our entire energies and efforts now to the winning of the war; nevertheless, we must not neglect our duties for the postwar period.

Mr. Speaker, I promised I would not take up much time, so I conclude my remarks. I reserve to myself the balance of my time and now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this rule comes before the House with a unanimous report of the committee. There is no reason why this committee should not be extended to March 1 in order to permit it to finish and complete its report to the House in every detail. I have been assured by the chairman of the committee [Mr. NICHOLS] that there is no intention on his part or that of anyone else to delay consideration in the Committee on Rules or in the House in case the Committee on Rules acts on a resolution to create a permanent standing committee on aviation; so, adoption of this resolution extending the life of the committee will not in any way delay consideration by the Committee on Rules or the House of a resolution creating a standing committee on civilian aviation.

I was interested in what the chairman of the Committee on Rules had to say. I was not able to be present during the entire discussion in executive session the other afternoon to hear the full report of the committee by its chairman and other members, but the chairman of the Committee on Rules referred a few minutes ago to the taking over of the Nazi and Fascist air lines in South America. I desire to take this occasion to say that I introduced a resolution long before the Special Committee on Aviation was organized, empowering the State Department to acquire the Nazi and Fascist air lines in South and Central America, and spoke on it on a number of occasions in the House, saw the Secretary of State about it, saw Mr. Jesse Jones, and they were all in favor of it. I received finally a note from Mr. Jones or a telephone call that it was not necessary to press that legislation because the administration thought it had the authority to proceed without legislation to buy or acquire the lines.

In order to make the record clear, I asked Mr. Jones to kindly write me a letter so at least I could have something to show that I had initiated this legislation. He wrote a letter to me to this effect, which I have in my files. This was long before the Special Committee on Aviation was created or went to South America.

Mr. Speaker, in the course of human events and in the progress of this country certain things become inevitable, and one of these, in my opinion, is the creation of a standing committee on aviation. I take this opportunity to give a few reasons why such a committee should be created. At the present time we have engaged in our aviation industry about a million and a half people in a civilian capacity and about an equal number in our armed forces, in the Army and the Navy. As a result of the war and the progress and development of the country, aviation has become one of our greatest industries, employing millions of Americans; yet it is only in the infancy of its destiny. It is inevitable that there must be a standing and permanent committee composed of experts who will devote their entire time to trying to solve the tremendous problems with which aviation will be confronted after the war.

Post-war problems involving the continuation of this great industry which employs millions of Americans must be gone into with the utmost care and study for the safety and welfare of the Nation. The whole matter, I presume, will be discussed later on in the Congress. I am particularly interested in the creation of a permanent committee because I want to see the United States continue its dominance in aviation, not only in this country, where we have it for the first time since the start of the war, but for all time in the future throughout the world. Today we are producing more airplanes than any other country, probably twice as many. The President reported that 48,000 war planes were built last year and probably a hundred thousand war planes would be this year. We want to continue our domination in aviation after the war, not only in America, but over the airways of South and Central America. We want to make sure that we will maintain our rights and interests where we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars for airfields in north Africa, in South America, in Australia, and on islands in the far Pacific Ocean.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I assured the gentleman from New York last week that he and all others who have resolutions pending on the subject of creating a standing committee will be heard. I promised some of the Members day before yesterday that we would have a meeting for that purpose on Monday, but, unfortunately, due to conditions over which I have no control, that meeting will be postponed until Tuesday.

Mr. FISH. I am glad the gentleman makes that statement to the House because I have introduced a similar resolution to six or seven others to create a permanent standing committee. I believe other Members during the last session introduced this type of legislation also.

My resolution to create a standing committee on commercial and civilian aviation is the first one numbered in this Congress. It has the support of the minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], who intended to present one in his own name, but when he found out I had presented a prior one, he decided not to offer his, and wanted mine considered among the others. Of course, I realize it will come out under the name of either the chairman of the committee or some Democratic member of the Rules Committee. This is in accordance with the regular order, and I am entirely satisfied. All I am asking for is action, and I have been assured that hearings will be begun early next week.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Is it the gentleman's idea that this new committee that he proposes would have jurisdiction over civil aeronautics only?

Mr. FISH. I am glad the gentleman asked that question because apparently there is some confusion in the minds of some Members. As one of the sponsors of this legislation, it is my intention that it shall be confined to civilian and commercial aviation and that alone, not interfering with the Military Affairs Committee or with the Committee on Naval Affairs, although I assume the new committee will cooperate with them on matters affecting the aviation industry which is supplying the needs of the Army and Navy.

It is nothing revolutionary or nothing new to create a standing committee. The State of New York has had a standing committee for a number of years on aviation and I think many other States have likewise permanent committees on aviation. It is absolutely necessary to have a committee of experts to try to solve the post-war aviation problem and to give their entire time to solving it. This is no reflection on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, one of the greatest committees of this House and having among its members some of the ablest Members of the House. But they cannot work 24 hours a day. There is no bigger problem facing post-war America than that of aviation. Are we to maintain our dominance? Are we going to continue to train pilots? Can we employ a hundred thousand pilots? Can we continue our domination over the airways extending throughout the world unless we have such a committee? If Congress does not act and fails to do its duty to preserve our existing air leadership I anticipate an aviation tailspin that will make the panic of 1932 look like a picnic and at the same time endanger our own safety and destiny.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], a former aviator, who desires to speak on this question.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that there is no opposition to the resolution now before us to continue this select committee of the House. Every Member who has read the reports of this committee or who attended Wednesday's executive session and heard the off-the-record report is certainly satisfied that this committtee has done an outstanding piece of work and has made a very real contribution to the future of aviation in the United States. I want to refer in the few minutes available to me this afternoon not to this particular resolution but to a resolution that I hope will be brought before the House in the very near future to create a standing committee of the House to deal with civil aviation. There is no doubt in my mind but what this special committee could have been continued and would have been continued by the Congress if the members of that committee had so recommended.

I think the fact that the chairman of this select committee, and at least one of the minority members of the committee, have introduced resolutions asking for the creation of a standing committee of the House to deal with civil aviation indicates the way that committee feels about the need of having such a standing committee in the House. It is a very simple question that the members of the Rules Committee and finally the Members of the House must answer, and that is simply this: Is the aviation industry, is the future of aviation, of sufficient importance, and are the legislative matters that will come before the Congress in order to properly develop aviation in this country of such a nature, and will they require such time that we need a standing committee to devote its attention exclusively to legislation of that type?

I think those of us who heard the report of the select committee in this Chamber last Wednesday afternoon are thoroughly convinced that the problems are of such magnitude that we do need at this time and for some time in the future such a standing committee. In my congressional district at the present time more than 50,000 men and women are dependent upon this industry for their livelihood. We could bring down to hearings before the Rules Committee representatives of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, airport managers, State commissioners of aviation, manufacturers in the industry, and others, all of whom could testify to the benefit that will be derived by the industry if we have such standing committee as is now proposed.

In my humble opinion, no truer words are printed in the report of this select committee than the sentence which states in substance that the nation that is best prepared to bring about a sound aviation expansion after the war may well be the first nation to recover economically. I want to see the first nation to recover economically, and the nation to control the tremendous air commerce that will be available, the United States of America. I do not know that there is any serious opposition to the creation of this committee except possibly from some members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. May I tell the gentleman that I, a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, am opposed to the creation of such a committee and that the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Military Affairs are also opposed to it.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I can speak only of my own knowledge. I am glad to have that information.

May I say to the gentleman, who is a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that if that great committee could devote practically their full time, at least for the next few years, to this problem—and we have a tremendous problem relating to our railroads, and there will be a post-war problem there as well as in the fields of other means of communication and transportation—I can think of no committee of the House I would rather see handle the problems of aviation than the present Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

There is plenty of precedent for the setting up of such a committee. The Congress itself and the executive branch of the Government have recognized the wisdom of separating aviation from other means of transportation. We have an Interstate Commerce Commission that sets the rates for our railways, waterways, and trucks, but this Congress did not turn over the problem of establishing airplane rates, either passenger or freight, to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Aviation passenger and freight rates are set by the Civil Aeronautics Board. This certainly indicates the desire and the intention of the Congress to deal separately with the problems of aviation.

We have had other cases where some of the heavy work of committees has been taken from them and given to a new committee. Flood control was handled that way, and I think we are all satisfied that it has worked out quite successfully.

In the State of Connecticut in 1927 I had a very small and modest part in writing what we believe to be the first State legislation relating to the control and policing of aviation within the State, dealing, of course, only with flying intrastate. As a result of that legislation and later amendments to that act we were able in that one little State to keep a very fine commission of men busy a good deal of the time filing each 2 years with the General Assembly of Connecticut a report of their activities and their efforts to develop aviation within that State.

That is all we ask that you do with this great national question here in the Congress, that we establish a committee that can devote its full time to the needs of aviation. If the day ever arrives when that industry is on such a firm foundation and the problems we see immediately ahead of us are such that they can be handled by another standing committee of the House along with its other work, I for one will be glad to see this proposed new committee disbanded and the work turned back to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

I hope the Members of the House will give some consideration to and try to visualize some of these tremendous problems we are going to face after this war.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma, the chairman of the committee [Mr. NICHOLS].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I am sure there is no controversy over the pending resolution providing for the extension of the life of this select committee to the 1st of March. This is only for the purpose of winding up the work of the committee, also to permit us to pay the personnel for work they have already done in 1943, work which could not be paid for unless this resolution were passed. So I do not care to talk about the work of the select committee.

However, since two gentlemen have talked to some extent on the creation of a permanent standing committee of the House on aviation, I should like to say a few words about that. You can go back through the history of this country and you will find that wherever progress has been proposed there has been opposition to it. That is true now. Three great committees of this House, all of whose members are splendid, high-class gentlemen, for reasons known best only to themselves have started to fight the creation of this committee. My distinguished friend the gentleman from North Carolina Major BULWINKLE, just called attention to the fact that the Committe on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs are opposing the creation of this committee; why, I cannot understand.

The resolution which would create this standing committee provides specifically that the committee would deal only with civil, commercial aviation. Probably some member of one of those two great committees can tell me what power that would take away from the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs. In the name of common sense, can the creation of a committee to deal solely with commercial, civil aviation have anything to do with the carrying on of this war? Can it interfere with military or naval aviation? I think not by any stretch of the imagination.

The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs just a minute ago told me that the reason he is opposed to the creation of this committee is that the first thing we have to do is to win this war and that all aviation now is either military or naval. I am inclined to agree with that statement entirely. Commercial aviation today is, of course, lending almost 100 percent of its effort to the naval and the military effort.

However, as was stated the other day here in executive session, after this war is over the United States must return to an era of economics. We must begin to think then, if we refuse to think now, of recouping world markets. We must begin to think about world trade. We must never be so ill-advised as to think that aviation will not play a tremendous part in the world trade of the post-war world.

Why create this committee now? Because now you can pass basic legislation which will permit commercial aviation to grow and expand and compete with the other aviation of the world in the post-war period.

Let no one tell you that the creation of this committee will in any way interfere with the war effort. Men on naval affairs and men on military affairs have no corner on patriotism. Men in those two committees have no corner on wanting to win the war more than any other Member of this House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, certainly no one will say that there is anything that I would do that would retard in the least the war effort. No one will say that there is anything that I would do that would retard in the least the activity of the Army's air force or of the naval air force. No; there has to be some other reason than that. Oh, I do not blame the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That is a splendid committee, it has a splendid chairman, and it is membered by splendid members. I do not blame them for opposing it, because at the moment that committee has under its jurisdiction all commercial aviation, despite the fact that it is a committee that has so much other business before it that it cannot do justice to all of the business before it if ever they were called on to do all at once. A great member of that committee just a few days ago told me that if it was necessary for that committee to appoint a subcommittee for every subject before the committee, that there are not enough men on the committee to provide personnel for those subcommittees. I am not fussing about it. They are a great committee, and it does a great job. At the same time that committee already has jurisdiction over matters pertaining to all railroad, bus, and truck operations, the inland waterways, the radio, the telegraph, the telephone, the Pure Food and Drugs Act, and it is also concerned with many other matters.

Mr. Speaker, commercial aviation has become so potent in this country that a subcommittee of no committee can do justice to the job that has to be done, if we are to meet Great Britain, if you please, or Canada, if you please, and Germany and Italy—the rest of the nations in the world, if you please, in the post-war period, when it will be necessary to go into the markets of the world and compete with them, because they are as anxious to win the war as you are, but they do not stop at winning the war. Plans by them are going ahead every day for the post-war period. When this committee was in South America, we ran into trade commissions from Canada, trade commissions from Great Britain, down there for the purpose of gathering trade and making arrangements to get into trade with South America in the post-war period. Good business, I say it was. What is the United States doing? Win the war; of course we want to win the war, but are we not big enough, do we not possess enough intelligence and ingenuity to look a little bit beyond the war, for the economics of this country after the war is over? All right, now this fight is in the open. I did not have any idea that there would be a concerted fight against the creation of this great committee. It means no more to me than to anybody else, but if the fight is in the open, and if the three great committees are going to oppose it, then there is a country boy from Oklahoma who is ready to take up the cudgel and see where we end up.

I think there can be no question—and any unselfish person must agree—that now is the time to start to give some impetus and support to one of the greatest industries of today—one that will be in the post-war period probably the greatest industry in the world, and certainly the greatest new industry in the world. I said before, and I say it again, that that country which is first ready with huge cargo-carrying fast airplanes is the country that will likely first recover from this war effort; and you do not have on the statute books today a basic law which will permit commercial aviation to grow. You do not have on the books today a law which will permit your American aviation, which leads the aviation of all the world, to grow and expand; and it is your job, Member of Congress, to see that it is put there, irrespective of what committee you are on.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I favor the resolution we have before us at this time, the purpose of which is to extend the life of the Select Committee to Investigate Air Accidents for another 90 days in order that this committee can wind up its work and file its report and make recommendations to the House. I have read the report of this committee, and I believe the work of the committee has been of great value to the country and also that it has been of great benefit to the aviation industry and also to our war effort. The suggestion that this Congress or this House pass some legislation to set up a permanent aviation committee should be given serious consideration not only because of the great importance of aviation during this war but also because of the great importance aviation will play in the post-war period.

While we are discussing aviation, I feel it is important that I call your attention to the importance of the Civil Aeronautics Administration and the wonderful ground work it has laid in aviation prior to the war, its great contribution to successful aviation during the war, and its plans for commercial aviation after the war.

I am a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which handles appropriations for the Department of Commerce, and we have worked very carefully on all of the problems facing the Civil Aeronautics Administration. The lengthy records of our hearings on aviation have been available to the membership of this House. These hearings had to do with most of the activities of civilian aviation, and I am certain that these hearings have proved of considerable value to the committee which has been investigating our domestic air accidents. Therefore, in discussing present and future civilian aviation, it is important that the work already done by the C. A. A. and the committees responsible for that agency should not be overlooked. Also, the records of these committees and the valuable records of the entire A. A. A. set-up should not be overlooked.

You are discussing now not only the matter of extending the life of this committee for 90 days, but you are discussing and also laying the ground work for some kind of a permanent committee on aviation to work on aviation in its present and future phases.

In discussing aviation of the present and its contribution to our war effort, I will call your attention to the fact that after many months of work on the part of the committee having to do with appropriations for C. A. A., this House in its wisdom kept alive the civilian-pilot training program. The result was that when war broke out, the C. A. A. had ready to offer to our Army and Navy a reservoir of thousands of trained pilots, many of whom today can be numbered among the many heroes of this war. At the same time, this House through its support of our committee and its support of the civilian-pilot training program through C. A. A., made possible a turn-over of pilots and students amounting to thousands. The story of the long fight to save the civilian-pilot training program is an interesting one, but I will not take up your time today in long details. I do wish, however, to commend those in this House whose far-sighted support saved this pilot-training program which is so valuable to our fighting forces in the time of our war crisis.

There are many men who first laid the ground work in the C. A. A. which resulted in the organization and completion of the great civilian pilot training program in the early days of aviation. General Connolly, now serving in the War Department, a former Administrator of C. A. A.; Charles Stanton, the present Administrator; Robert Hinckley, former Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Air, now an executive with the Sperry Co., known as the father of civilian pilot training; Frank Tischnor, editor of Aero Digest; and many others can be named as the pioneers of this great service. I wish I had the time to give you other names. Scores of aviation pioneers contributed much of their time, energy, and money to keep aviation in the United States alive at a time when the value of their efforts was neither realized nor appreciated.

The airports scattered throughout the States, the new methods in communications, the better styles of planes, the increased speed of our planes now in use in combat and in commercial service, the newer aids to air navigation, the safety controls, and many other valuable aviation assets can be traced to the pioneering work of these men and especially to the activities of the Civil Aeronautics Administration. In considering a permanent committee on aviation, the basic and valuable work of these individuals, organizations, and the C. A. A. must be made the foundation, and neither the C. A. A. nor the regular committees responsible for aviation should be subordinated. The permanent committee should be a committee auxiliary to the already great foundation laid for present and future aviation. It should be such an auxiliary committee as would aid in the development of work already done.

The various State legislatures certainly should come in for some commendation while we are discussing aviation of the past, present, and future. The Governors and State legislatures of the various States have not neglected aviation. The great State of Nebraska was one of the pioneers in aviation. The Nebraska State Legislatures of the past and present have been and are composed of men who have great vision. Very early our State legislature appropriated large sums of money for aviation expansion. Our Governors have appointed men of flying experience to membership on the State aeronautics commission. Our State aeronautics commission works in the closest kind of cooperation with Civil Aeronautics Administration to the end that State aviation laws, regulations, and policies may be coordinated with the master plans of the C. A. A. Other States have worked along that line, but Nebraska was a leader in that endeavor. The States which followed that rule and the States which, like Nebraska, saw the possibilities of future aviation are many and are to be commended. The result was a Nation-wide interest in aviation among the youth of America long before the outbreak of war, and a great reservoir of young pilots available at a time when pilots were badly needed. So I want to join others in doing whatever I can to give encouragement to the formation of any committee which will help in this great effort to make the United States the leader of the world in aviation not only during this war but in the post-war period when, I predict, aviation will be one of the chief facilities for the relief of the world's economic ills.

If I may be permitted to do so, I would like to digress briefly to call your attention to some aviation matters that affect a number of Members here. In our period of depression and also during the time when war clouds approached us and the world realized the importance of aviation during a war, many of our communities were induced to undertake the construction of airports. Federal agencies came to our communities and urged our community representatives, official and civic, to build airports. Many communities feeling that the Government would need airports badly in wartime, voted bonds and went into debt to buy land for airport sites. The Federal Government, through the W. P. A., aided substantially. Large investments were made in some of these airports. Many of the sites have been graded, drained, and made ready for hard surfacing of the runways. Many communities had contracted for the paving and many were ready to advertise for bids on the work to complete the projects. The W. P. A. had earmarked large sums for the completion of some of these airports with the approval of the C. A. A. Then came liquidation of the W. P. A. Communities ready to complete their airports suddenly found themselves with large unfinished projects on their hands, although much work had been done. Work which in many cases would be destroyed by time and erosion. The amount of money invested in these airports by the Federal and city governments is being ascertained by the C. A. A. A full picture of this situation should now or soon be in the hands of that agency. My plea now is that these airports be completed not only to save the investment the Federal Government has in the projects but for the purpose of putting them to immediate use in our war effort.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to discuss aviation briefly in the light of the resolution before us. I have great faith in our committees now working on aviation, and I have faith that this House will give full consideration to the plan for a permanent aviation committee to help in present and future aviation problems. No one will deny that aviation will win the war and that aviation will help solve many of our problems in the post-war period. No one with vision will deny the prediction that you and I will live to see the day when myriads of airplanes with passengers, freight, and mail will connect all corners of the earth.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to touch upon a phase of this general approach which was missed the other afternoon in the grand presentation made to us by the members of the aviation committee, and which has been overlooked here today in the debate.

Between Christmas and January 1, I attended a meeting of the Rotary Club in Detroit, at which were present about two or three hundred members of greater industrial Detroit. There were three 8-minute speeches made by speakers on that day. The gentleman who closed the round table presented his argument on the basis of the trade that we are going to recapture or take or create in the different countries of the world in the post-war period. At the end of his talk I raised this question, as to what he was going to do about section 4 of the Atlantic Charter, which reads this way—speaking of the United Kingdom and the United States:

SEC. 4. They will endeavor, with due respect for their existing obligations, to further the enjoyment by all states, great or small, victor or vanquished, of access, on equal terms, to the trade and to the raw materials of the world which are needed for their economic prosperity.

If we overlook that language in connection with the trade that we expect to control and the cargo ships that we expect to send out and the cargoes on those ships in the post-war period, I think we may wake up some day with a headache. If I can understand English, section 4 of the Atlantic Charter will have something to say about what markets we recapture, what markets we create, and about the goods which we move into those markets, the terms which we apply to that trade, and all about it. So I want to call your attention to section 4.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Does not the gentleman think that that probably means just what it says, "on equal terms with all other nations," that every nation in the world would be a competitor of every other nation, and those who competed with us would be up against the disadvantage of our being able to take the markets by reason of our own expansion and capacity to produce?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No. I do not read that meaning into the language; and if you will go to article VII of the British Master Agreement, which is a part of this whole approach, you will find that the Atlantic Charter and the Lease-Lend Act of March 1941 are tied into the British Master Agreement. And if you will go one step further and carefully digest the general approach and the philosophy of the concept, you will also find that the "four freedoms" and the declaration by the United Nations are two other facets of this many-sided international trade diamond which has been designed, I must say, behind the curtains of international diplomacy. These documents state "ends", not "means"; and it is up to the Members of this House to explore into the meanings of these vague political and economic and social international terms. They point the way for a new order—good or bad, I am not saying—for the American people. Of course, the people have not spoken on these highly important matters which involve the highest policy of government. But in due course the people will speak with understanding. The phrase "on equal terms, to the trade and to the raw materials of the world which are needed for their economic prosperity" is made up of beautiful words. But to effectuate the intent is an entirely dissimilar, and I must say very difficult, problem. Any man who has engaged in trade on a large scale knows that "on equal terms" is something that just does not exist in the very practical world of trade and commerce, and more particularly so if many national interests are involved. For instance, how are you going to put little Finland on equal terms with Britain in the Argentine market in the post-war period? Or Norway on an equal footing with the United States in the Chilean market or Italy on equal terms with Japan in the Chinese market?

Now let me read to you article VII of the British Master Agreement:

> In the final determination of the benefits to be provided to the United States of America by the Government of the United Kingdom in return for aid furnished under the act of Congress of March 11, 1941, the terms and conditions thereof shall be such as not to burden commerce between the two countries, but to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between them and the betterment of world-wide economic relations. To that end, they shall include provision for agreed action by the United States of America and the United Kingdom, open to participation by all other countries of like mind, directed to the expansion, by appropriate international and domestic measures, of production, employment, and the exchange and consumption of goods, which are the material foundations of the liberty and welfare of all peoples; to the elimination of all forms of discriminatory treatment in international commerce, and to the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers; and, in general, to the attainment of all the economic objectives set forth in the joint declaration made on August 12, 1941, by the President of the United States of America and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom.
> At an early convenient date, conversations shall be begun between the two Governments with a view to determining, in the light of governing economic conditions, the best means of attaining the above-stated objectives by their own agreed action and of seeking the agreed action of other like-minded governments.

And, may I ask you just what does the term "countries of like mind" mean? Another question: What meaning shall we now read into the language "by appropriate international and domestic measures?" That will undoubtedly call for many treaties and statutory acts before the plan is properly functioning. and these conversations that are to be held. Just when and where?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am wholeheartedly in favor of this resolution. I think the Nichols committee, officially known as the Select Committee to Investigate Air Accidents, has done a most commendable job, and certainly this body should permit them to wind up their affairs and complete their final report; and for that reason and for that reason only the life of this committee should be extended the additional 90 days requested by the chairman and other members of that committee.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken this time primarily to address myself to the very important question of the several resolutions now pending before the Rules Committee looking toward the creation of a standing committee of the House on Civil Aviation. It is, of course, understood in advance by everyone properly informed that this committee should have to do only with the question of nonmilitary aviation. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why the Naval Affairs Committee, the Military Affairs Committee, or even the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee—or any other committee—should object to the formulation of this standing committee on civil aviation in this House. Certainly, no question of patriotism is at stake, and there should be no question of politico-personal jealousy permitted to enter the picture. Civil aviation has in the past been dealt with by a subcommittee of the powerful and splendid Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. There has been no criticism of their handling of the problem in the past, but the future problems demand undivided attention by a standing committee.

Up to the last World War, aviation was in the diaper stage. It grew into the romper stage in that war. For many years its growth was stunted and until very recently it had not advanced beyond the short pants stage. But within the past few years, Mr. Speaker, civil aviation had just begun to put on its long pants and civil aviation merits careful and above all undivided attention in the future. No presently standing committee of this House can, in justice to its other work, give it the consideration to which it is properly entitled.

Insofar as commercial civil aviation is concerned, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] has stated its extremely important position very wisely. We might streamline and modernize the historic words of the Confederate General Forrest in this fashion: "In the post-war world that nation will recover 'fustest' which gets there 'fustest' with the 'mostest' and the fastest transport airplanes." But the question of commercial aviation has been adequately covered heretofore. There is an angle to this aviation question, which it seems to me has been overlooked in the present discussion and to which I address myself now.

I refer to the matter of private flying after this war. Mr. Speaker, for many years I have been intensely interested in this question of private flying. I have owned and, although never a licensed pilot, flown several different airplanes of my own, and, in fact, against the advice of some of my political advisers, I conducted most of my initial compaign for Congress by air. I found it expedient. I found it very valuable as a time-saver in covering the huge spaces in the 16 counties of northern Michigan which I have the honor to represent, and which—thanks to a farseeing policy of the Michigan Department of Aeronautics—is quite well studded with many strategically located, and adequately equipped, small airports and landing fields. For a number of years I have been a member of the Sportsmen's Pilot Association and the National Aeronautic Association. I have followed private flying rather closely until the war brought an end to all such activity, with the exception of the remarkable work now being done by the Civil Air Patrol, which is a wartime organization of private flyers.

Mr. Speaker, after this war has been ended, aviation is going to continue to be a very large industry in this Nation—make no mistake about it. It will be the salvation of America. Turn back the pages of history. About the turn of the century this country made a great financial and industrial recovery. Why? Due to the advent of the automobile—the creation of a new mode of transportation. Following the last war, there was a brief depression, and yet this country was placed back on its economic feet by the advent of the radio and certain of the new mechanical devices used in the home, such as the vacuum cleaner, electric refrigeration, electric stove, air conditioning—to mention only a few.

The recovery of the entire world after this war is going to be due solely to aviation—a new mode of transportation. I repeat that I agree with the gentleman from Oklahoma when he says that country will recover quickest which is best capable of capturing the markets of the world through the seas of the sky—that country which can get its products to the markets of the world in the quickest time—by means of civil aviation. It has been said, Mr. Speaker, that England is mistress of the seas. That statement may be properly challenged in the future. But in looking into the post-war world, Mr. Speaker, America must retain its title of master of the skyways.

And so I say that civil aviation is the most vital subject which this House should be considering today. It is a most vital subject which this House should be considering through very carefully trained and experienced experts serving in a standing committee dealing solely with the future of civil aviation.

After this war shall have ended, we will have literally hundreds of thousands of carefully trained pilots in this Nation. That presents a potential market for hundreds of thousands of private aircraft. It takes a war to bring about a change in our domestic economy of such magnitude. Bear in mind that in normal peacetimes, it costs almost $1,000 for the average young man to learn to fly. Where can the average young man get that money? He cannot, and if he did, he could not afford to buy an airplane after he learned how to fly. But even then, he is still not a pilot in the accepted sense of the word. Sure! He can take off, fly around the country and land in fair weather and following contact flight rules—which means keeping in close touch with the ground by means of a map lying on his lap—find his way reasonably well. But that young man is not a real pilot until he has learned to conquer the elements, or in other words until he has learned to fly blind and has obtained an instrument rating, which means that he can fly out of contact of the ground—over the clouds—by means of instruments and radio. This postgraduate training in pre-war days cost the young man another $1,000 more or less, and most fathers, and certainly not the young man, did not have that money to put up.

War changes all of that and when we have won this war, Mr. Speaker, we will have literally a hundred thousand or more of these trained instrument-rated private pilots in the market for airplanes, or their services will be available to you and me and others of us who will be forced to employ their services in order to fly about the country and about the world, in order to compete with our fellow man in the economy of the world.

And so I say to you that the creation of a standing committee on civil aviation in this House is an absolute necessity. The post-war recovery of America will be very definitely linked with civil aviation. A civil aviation committee must be created. It has been overdue for some years past. The post-war protection of America may well be dependent entirely upon military aviation. The two subjects do not clash in any sense of the word and military aviation should—as it has in the past—be handled by, and in the future receive No. 1 priority in, the standing Committees on Military Affairs and Naval Affairs. Unfortunately that has not been true in the past.

These three committees should cooperate closely together, because the skyways of the world will be traveled by all, but very definitely rigid regulations will of necessity be imposed to see to it that each of the several classifications of aircraft remain within their own sphere of the skyways. The sky traffic of the post-war world is going to be a tremendous problem. Reference has been made here today to the fact that we today have 48,000 military aircraft; that next year we will have 100,000 in the skyways. But they will be scattered all over the world. Prior to Pearl Harbor we had, roughly, 300 commercial air liners in the skies over our country. Contrast these puny figures with the roughly 30,000,000 automotive vehicles that we had on our highways prior to Pearl Harbor, then you will get some inkling—just a faint inkling—of the skyway travel of the future. Just this morning I read, as you probably did, the prediction of a noted plastic engineer with the Glenn L. Martin plant in Baltimore to the effect that shortly after this war is over, we shall have plastic helicopters ascending vertically and descending vertically and capable of being stored in an ordinary garage the same as cars are stored today. While it may sound fantastic, still I tell you that within 5 years after this war there will be hundreds of thousands of helicopters and other light aircraft—maybe not today on blueprint but certainly existing in the minds of our own, the world's leading aircraft designers—carrying you and me and other citizens of this country in our daily pursuits, not in our own home town, not in our own State, not in our own Nation, but, conceivably, all over the world. This problem demands intensive, careful study by men who have their minds focused on that particular industry and the problems related thereto.

Now, just to go back a bit into recent past history; let me point out just one or two little angles which have hitherto been befogged and which need clarification. The Civil Aeronautics Authority and the Air Safety Board, prior to Reorganization Plan No. IV, did a mighty fine job in endeavoring to bring order out of chaos in the private flying and the commercial flying picture. They made a good start, but they did not have time to accomplish all they had in mind, and so, as one flies around the country in the private plane of yesterday from State to State, he found different local regulations applying to the operation of airports. He found different taxes on aircraft gasoline. He found some different local regulations with respect to operations near certain airports. These were all handled as local problems; aviation must be handled on a national, a worldwide basis. This has not been a serious thing in the past, because there was not enough traffic in private aircraft to create much of an operational hazard, but that is very definitely going to be a problem in the future and one which must be dealt with nationally. In the post-war world and by cooperative action, House Committees on Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, and Civil Aviation will have to get their heads together to keep America foremost in the world as king of aviation. We may hear that England will choose to remain mistress of the seas, but I say to you in all sincerity, with America paying the bill for this war, paying the bill for this war, as the President recently asked in his Budget—that America is today and in this coming year going to spend more on this war effort than all the world put together—we in this Congress must see to it that Uncle Sam remains the king of the skyways of the world, and a Civil Aviation Committee is the answer. Do not kid yourselves, gentlemen; just today one of our colleagues from California informed me that he knew from first-hand information that right today some of our latest and best civil air transports are being delivered to some of our friends abroad, possibly under lend-lease—he was not sure; I leave it to you to guess. But it is definitely known that those American transports are today being used not only to prosecute the war effort but to build up in the eyes of the post-war markets a serious competition to America's future position as king of the skyways. Wake up, colleagues. Do not let them talk you out of a standing Committee on Civil Aviation.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEMBERSHIP OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 72), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the Seventy-eighth Congress the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall be composed of 26 members; the Committee on Insular Affairs shall be composed of 23 members.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article which appeared in the Baltimore Sun of January 22 regarding the election of my colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MARION BENNETT].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, it is with some reluctance that I ask the Members of the House to bear with me for a few minutes today, as I am not unaware that I am one of that large body of new Members sent here by the people to represent them and their interests in this most important session of the Seventy-eighth Congress. I am also aware that it has been a rather unwritten rule that the function of new Members is mostly to be seen and not heard.

In former days, when the people of the country and their Government were gliding along in peaceful and normal times, I am inclined to believe that this rule was more applicable than it is today. Some 65 Members representing their districts with a total population of 15,000,000 people or more, with property holdings of billions of dollars, with their sons being called into the armed forces in this cruel war, with their civilian life being restricted and regimented; after giving consideration to the facts and issues in the past campaign made the decision to send to this august body these new Members to represent them in this Congress. In the stress of these abnormal wartimes, it is fair to assume that the constituents of these Members are expecting them to assume their full share of responsibilities in representing them now in the conduct of the affairs of their Nation.

Speaking for myself, and I think I represent the thought of most of the new Members of this session, I have been deeply impressed with the sincerity of purpose of the Members of this body with whom I have come in contact, on both sides of the House. I have been greatly encouraged by the apparent and expressed intense interest and determination of the Members of this body in carrying forward the business of government, their eager desire to measure up to the great responsibilities that are now before this body and will continue to weight it down throughout the session.

I want at this time to express my appreciation of the splendid fellowship, advice, and helpful counsel of the older Members. I am sure that the other new Members have the same feeling and the same appreciation for the older Members of this body. I am further certain that I vouch their sentiment when I say that it is our earnest desire to follow your leadership and be helpful in the solution of the problems, so far as it lies within our power, that are before the country today. I think it was Dr. Johnson who once very wisely and graciously said:

> God Himself, sir, does not purpose to judge man until the end of his day; why should you and I?

I feel certain that the Members of this most important Congress will not be too quick to judge the new Members, and they will be forbearing with us neophytes who are anxious to take our place in helping in the work of the Nation's business.

Mr. Speaker, my purpose today is to bring to the attention of this body some thoughts that have been on my mind for many months. In calling them to your attention, I am not unmindful of the old adage that "fools rush in where angels fear to tread." I know it is a question which might be regarded as dangerous to one's prestige and political future; however, I prefer to follow my conscience and let the future take care of itself. I do not deem it of much importance whether a particular Member is returned to this House, only insofar as his services are important to the Nation and the public welfare. How well he serves his country in these trying times while he is here is what is really worth while.

For almost a year now the question of manpower has become increasingly more serious, and has been engaging the attention of the administration and the Congress. In the last few months it has become acute.

High wages from Government war plants have drained millions of men away from industry and the farms. Under our selective-service agency, millions more have been inducted into the military service.

We are faced today with the serious facts that manpower on the farms of our country is so depleted that we are likely to have a serious food shortage here in this country. The farmers are not able to get the additional machinery needed with which to carry on efficiently, and they are not able to procure the necessary labor to plant, till, and harvest their crops. Secretary Wickard is urging greater production to feed our Army, our civilians, and for lend lease, with the slogan that "food will win the war."

Young men have been taken from large farms all over this country, with the result that such farms have quit producing. Public sale bills have gone up all over the farming sections of this Nation announcing the sale of stock and equipment. Dairy cows by the countless thousands have been slaughtered and we are short of butter and milk throughout the country.

There have been some silly proposals that young city women and high-school children be sent to the farms to help in planting and production. Such ideas are too impractical to be given consideration. I understand the Government is now holding schools of instruction on farm machinery repair for high-school students. This, too, is a waste of time and money.

This is the thought that I wanted to bring to the attention of this body. It has had some appeal to me for several months.

Have we not reached the point where less men can be taken from civilian life as the months of 1943 face us?

Have we already drawn sufficient manpower when they are trained and equipped to win this war in the shortest time with the least loss of life? It is estimated that we have possibly 7,000,000 men in the armed forces now. There is talk of inducting some 3,000,000 men during 1943. Such a procedure will work additional hardships on the civilian economy, will cause married men, with children, to be taken from their jobs and their family, and will add tremendously to the financial burdens of the Nation.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Has the gentleman given any consideration to the question of getting our troops over to the fighting lines?

Mr. VURSELL. I will get to that.

Mr. FISH. In connection with this whole question of having a huge army, I think that is the most important issue to discuss.

Mr. VURSELL. I will get to that a little later. Food for our people, our Army, and our allies is most important. The buying of bonds, our contribution in taxes to help finance the war is just as important. The preservation of our financial structure now and for the postwar period is just as important if we are to save our American form of government. take our proper place at the peace table, and do our proper part in helping to feed the stricken and helpless people of the world in the years of reconstruction to follow.

While we are all proud of the marvelous achievement of our Nation in making such rapid strides in preparing and equipping our military forces, and are proud of the heroism and valor displayed and the victories of our American soldiers, the smartest and best in the world, as a Nation we must guard against calling to the colors possibly 2,000,000 more men than are needed to do the job. There has been talk of mobilizing an armed force of ten or twelve million men. Such estimates to me seem entirely too high.

Question: Will we need such a large force? Can we build or get the ships to put even 5,000,000 men on foreign shores and provide them an adequate flow of supplies? These are questions that I know are in the minds of many of the people in my State and are giving Members of this body serious thought.

This is a mechanized war and calls for a mechanized army. One man in the field now can use three times the munition in a day than could be used in World War No. 1. I am told that it takes 10 tons of shipping to supply one man in Africa or in the Pacific. Three million men would require 30,000,000 tons of shipping. Can we get supplies to them—can we get the ships?

Our Nation started in this war as the arsenal for the Allies; later, through lend-lease, we assumed our full share as the granary for the Allies. Now, added to that, we are fast moving into the center of the picture, with the exception of Russia possibly, with the largest army of them all. We are proud of the part we, as a nation, are able to play; but are we not justified in at least exploring the thought and possibilities that we can win the war more quickly, at less loss of life and with less financial strain placed upon our Nation with an armed force smaller than is now contemplated?

More planes and tanks to Russia will hit the German Army more effectively now than a year later in the hands of American boys that are using that equipment now in training. Russia needs equipment now. She has the manpower.

China, lying close to Japan, can hurl an army of 10,000,000 men against her if we can get guns, planes, tanks, and munitions to her.

Many of the Members of this House in a conference I was permitted to attend heard the officers of the Independent Oil Producers of America in this building Monday appeal for help to keep oil-well workers on the job in order that they might drill the Government's program, 16,000 oil wells in 1943. They told how their men were being taken into the Army and some going to work in war plants.

In this meeting a high Government official expressed the seriousness of the labor shortage in the oil fields, making the statement that 70 percent of the tonnage that was going abroad to supply the Army was petroleum products. He was anxious that production and reserves be increased and pointed out the tremendous amount of oil and shipping that was required to supply this mechanized world army.

In conclusion may I say, Washington, the seat of this Government, in its influence in winning this war, writing the peace, and aiding in reconstruction, is now and will be the focal and most important point in the world. This Congress cooperating with the administration, the War and Navy Departments, may well be the most important Congress that has ever functioned since the beginning of this Republic. There is no question about the interest, earnestness, and great ability of many of the veteran leaders of this body. Because of my high regard for your leadership, my desire to be helpful, my faith in representative government, I have attempted in my humble way to call to your attention these thoughts which I have deemed worthy of your consideration.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VURSELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. I wish to congratulate the gentleman upon his excellent contribution to a very important subject.

Mr. VURSELL. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIKES). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to call to the attention of the Members of the House the fact that the Federal Works Agency has at last taken an important step in the right direction. I was informed yesterday that it would be the policy of the Agency in the future to let all contracts on the open, competitive bidding basis, rather than on the closed, select bidding basis.

Heretofore, by select bidding, they have singled out a few contractors, perhaps in some cases, a favored few with the understanding that they and they alone were eligible to bid on a certain project and, therefore, eliminated many worthy contractors. Reasons given were hardly plausible in view of the facts which I am about to present in regard to a project with which I am very familiar.

It is claimed that select bidding was initiated in order to economize in the preparation and distribution of plans and specifications; that, for open bidding, the cost of preparation and distribution of additional plans and specifications would amount approximately to $500 per project. It is my firm conviction that open bidding will save much more than that and that the quality of the materials used may be substantially improved.

The case I wish to point out to you now is that of the armory at Shelby, N. C. The successful bidder on this project got the contract to furnish precast stone at $6,200. The Ingalls Limestone Co., of Bedford, Ind., placed a bid of $5,075 on furnishing natural Indiana limestone delivered on the scene at the time specified. In this bid submitted on Indiana limestone an allowance of $1,840 was made for freight charges to the project, leaving the cost of the stone fully processed in the mills $3,235. This made the price paid for the precast stone at the processing plant 91.6 percent higher than that of natural limestone at its place of production.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I understood the gentleman to say that the man who got this contract received nearly $4,000 more for the stone than the gentleman's concern there in Bedford, Ind.

Mr. WILSON. That is correct in regard to the price that was received for the stone at the place of production. The point I am trying to bring out there is the fact that they paid 91.6 percent more for an entirely inferior product. It happens that the Ingalls Stone Co., of Bedford, Ind., agreed to deliver limestone at a cost of $5,075, which was about $1,100 less than the other stone delivered on the site. Allowing $1,840 for freight, they paid 91.6 percent more for precast stone f. o. b. than they would have had to pay for limestone—at least twice what they should have paid.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Was this an open-bid contract?

Mr. WILSON. No; it was a closed-select-bid contract.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman imagine the man who secured the bid was compelled to make certain contributions to certain charitable and eleemosynary organizations?

Mr. WILSON. Well, in answer to your question, I do know that the whole thing stinks and that there were other contracts in the same State that were let under the same conditions and that they did pay more for this inferior product than the price they would have paid to have had Indiana limestone delivered on the ground. Also, I know that the excuse they gave for doing this is entirely in error.

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, we from the Hoosier State are well aware of the fine qualities of Indiana limestone as a building material. Is it not true that it is one of the outstanding and best building materials in the whole country and that it has been used in a great many places with very great success?

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and I thank him for his contribution. I am told that about 75 or 80 percent of the permanent Government buildings here in Washington were built of Indiana limestone.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is true all over the country.

Mr. WILSON. Yes; it is of stone buildings. Another friend of mine from the Granite State of Massachusetts told me yesterday that the post office in Boston was built of Indiana limestone. We can ship limestone and compete with any building stone anywhere.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I gladly yield to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Is it not a fact that Indiana limestone is the standard stone for constructing buildings?

Mr. WILSON. That is absolutely true and I thank the gentleman. I am glad the gentleman asked that question, because it brings to my mind some more information in regard to this particular project. I am informed that the man who got this contract to furnish precast stone, John J. Norton, in North Carolina, also processes limestone, that he preferred to have the bids let only on the precast stone because there was too much competition in the limestone field. Therefore, he wanted to eliminate competition in order to get the bid—and on this inferior product at a much higher price.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. May I inform the gentleman, if he does not know it, that a great deal of the Boston Post Office is built of granite, of which there is such a lot of very fine material in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. WILSON. Is it true that there is Indiana limestone in the Boston Post Office?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes; but there is a great deal more granite also.

Mr. WILSON. Of course, the gentlewoman will agree that the lion's share is limestone, because we can ship it all the way from Indiana and compete with granite in your home State of Massachusetts. The people in Boston, Mass., are not afraid that the Indiana limestone will crack, are they?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Of course, we feel, and I think the gentleman will find the experts in the different departments will verify this, that the granite is the most durable of all stone.

Mr. WILSON. The gentlewoman did not answer my question.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think I did answer it. I think it is not inferior, but that the granite is better.

Mr. WILSON. Just more expensive.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. May I ask the gentlewoman from Massachusetts if that is because it comes from a New England State, just like the beans?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am prejudiced, I suppose, but I am stating now what experts say, not giving my own opinion.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have noticed that whenever there is anything of that kind on New England always has the better of the argument. It has better material and gets more money for it, no question about it.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think New England has wonderfully fine material, and everybody admits it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We do, and we admit that they get their share, if not a little more.

Mr. WILSON. The people of the Indiana limestone area always welcome open, competitive bidding. They are glad to submit their product entirely on its merits.

I think you will agree that the price which was paid for this precast stone down in North Carolina was entirely out of line by any stretch of the imagination.

For instance, in the Bedford limestone area, precast stone producers always have to underbid the limestone people in order to get a contract. On this very small job alone, $1,125 was paid for a wholly inferior product delivered at the project. I have reason to believe that this has been going on in many large and small projects all over the land. Another reason given by the officials in charge was that Indiana limestone is an inferior product, that it chips and cracks, which argument is, of course, ridiculous. Most of our Government buildings of the permanent type here in Washington, our Nation's Capital, are built of Indiana limestone. This pragmatic proof should satisfy even the most inexperienced or skeptical hireling of the Federal Works Agency. Indiana limestone is a pure carbonate of lime product, than which there is no better building stone.

Another argument was advanced that the Ingalls Limestone Co. of Bedford was not mailed copies of the plans and specifications and were, therefore, not entitled to bid, which argument was entirely false, for the Ingalls Limestone Co. did receive copies of the plans and specifications.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that while we are making investigations in the interest of economy and fairness that the Federal Works Agency should not be overlooked.

Mr. Speaker, I have pointed out a concrete case and given you facts which indicate gross incompetence and possible graft.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I commend the gentleman for the solicitude he has shown for this great industry in his district, and commend him also for the diligence with which he has sought to protect the interests of that industry.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the gentleman from Indiana.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two editorials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO], is recognized for 10 minutes.

COMMERCIAL AVIATION'S POST-WAR FUTURE

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, for the past several months there has been a growing interest in post-war planning in this country. The subject is being widely discussed in the press, over the radio, and in magazines. We have a special board set up to make recommendations and work out a program to be put into effect immediately upon the cessation of hostilities. So far as I can gather from press releases our board is dealing with the post-war program as a social and not an economic problem.

There has been some criticism of those who are making preparations for the day when peace again returns to all nations on the ground that we should devote all our energies and talents to winning the war and allow the post-war problems to be solved when they arise. If we follow this line of reasoning we will probably find ourselves in another war in less than 20 years. If a baby is expected in the family the parents do not await its arrival to provide for it, but make plans for its welfare many days in advance. If we want lasting peace, we must make plans now to play our part in the post-war period.

It is not unwise to have idealists make recommendations for the part we will play. Some of them want to remake the world and feed, clothe, educate, regulate, and control all the peoples on the globe. Some of their suggestions may, by accident, prove of great value. Some people want to set up an international police organization and assure posterity that another Hitler cannot rise again. Some Americans would have us, when the war is won, take no part in international affairs. With all the different views we hope that a sound policy can be worked out that will insure a lasting peace and that our country will justify its existence as a progressive Nation by playing a major role in the days to come.

We Americans have by now, or should have, learned that we cannot build a wall around our territorial limits and have the things that it takes to make our standard of living so much higher than the rest of the world. Our automobile depends on rubber from the East Indies, chromium from Turkey and Russia; our food is better because of the coffee of Brazil, the tin of Malaya and the spices of India; our health is better because of quinine from the East Indies and South America; benzedrine from China and rare herbs from all parts of the globe. We must not allow a wall to be built around us if we are to continue to have the luxuries and necessities to which we have been accustomed.

Others have made suggestions about the part we are to play in the post-war world and I have decided to offer some suggestions that I have not yet seen in print.

It is nice to dream of a Utopian world, but we must be realists if we want to stay in the picture. We must build our post-war position in the world by commerce operated by private enterprise with Government assistance when necessary to put us on an even footing with our competitors. We must not blind ourselves to the fact that the burden on our taxpayers will be too heavy when this war is over to undertake an international W. P. A. We all recall how our Uncle Sam was repeatedly referred to by all European nations after the last World War as Uncle Shylock. If we have not learned already that we cannot buy good will and friendship, it is high time that we learn. The only way to win international good will is by having some commodity or service that other nations need and are willing to pay for in cash or trade and make them live up to their bargains. If we are fair with them in our dealings and give them value for what they buy, they will continue to be our friends instead of becoming ingrates when the cow goes dry and the milk fails to be delivered.

To my humble way of thinking, the nation that controls the most commercial aviation lines throughout the world after the war is over will be the nation that recovers quickest. Today we have many hundreds of thousands of workers in aircraft factories and associated industries. They are making machines of destruction now, but unless we decide to take advantage of our opportunity to become the dominant commercial nation 90 percent of these workers will be thrown out of work when the war is over. Today we are training thousands of crews to fly multiengined bombers who can step into commercial aviation and carry our commerce to the four corners of the globe. Today we are building, with the money of our taxpayers, excellent airports on every continent in the world. I hope we have had foresight enough to secure the rights, in perpetuity, for American air transports to use these fields. If we have not made these arrangements we should do it at once before our commerce goes the way of Phoenicia.

When peace comes we should insist that provisions be made that certain designated air routes and landing sites be made available to the air lines of all nations. A group of experts should be authorized now to prepare data and suggestions as to proposed air routes over every nation. There will be stiff opposition to this suggestion, but it will insure equal commercial opportunities to the air lines of all nations and will enable every nation to keep an eye on military preparations of every other nation. We have always insisted on the freedom of the seas. Now that air transport is a vital part of our economy, we must insist on freedom of the air.

It is highly probable that within the next 2 years huge cargo planes will be in operation with a cargo capacity of 300 tons or more and speed of 400 miles with a cruising range of 10,000 miles. Motor efficiency and structural design will increase the wing load, thereby reducing per pound operating cost, thus enabling the cargo planes of tomorrow to successfully compete with slow water transportation. We must begin preparations now to play our part in the air commerce of the future. Careful study should be given to necessary international regulation of air commerce.

We should start today training young men and women to become representatives of this country in every land. We should offer courses in every civilized language. These young people will not only serve our commercial adventures but can be trained to be ambassadors of good will. We must train them in ethics and diplomacy for if we let unethical representatives go to other lands to represent our private concerns and they make a reputation of being cheats and frauds, our Nation will be thus branded and we will be sowing the seeds of another terrible war. These trained representatives will be in a position to keep our State Department advised of the internal conditions in all countries. They will enable us to prevent the rise of another Hitler or another sneak attack.

Unless we start preparations now to support private commerce, we will awaken too late and find that the planners have regimented the world and destroyed private enterprise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] is recognized for 2 minutes.

THE UNITED STATES MARINES

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, we are all extremely grateful that the marines are to have a well-earned rest after 5 months of the most intensive fighting. The Navy believes that this is the longest period of day-to-day fighting, 24 hours a day, that has been performed by any American unit. On August 7, when they leaped from their ships and dashed onto the sands of Guadalcanal, they probably did not realize what intensive fighting, under horrible conditions, they would face. But they were there to accomplish a purpose, and nothing could have stopped them. During the First World War the First Division had 223 days of fighting, but a period of training and a few lulls were included in that period.

We owe the marines our undying gratitude. The bravery, endurance, and superhuman skill and strength that those men put into their battles for us thrill you and me to our very souls. We salute the marines.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, following the remarks of the gentleman from Washington, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on the question of a special committee on aviation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on the same subject as the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, following the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes in opposition to the creation of a new committee on aviation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Raymond Clapper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Robert L. Norton.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short newspaper editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MORRISON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, January 25, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

86. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report of investigation by the office of the Comptroller General of the United States of the contracts and other records of the United States Maritime Commission; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and ordered to be printed.

87. A letter from the Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, transmitting the Seventh Annual Report of the National Labor Relations Board for the year ended June 30, 1942; to the Committee on Labor.

88. A letter from the major general, United States Army, Administrator of the Federal Works Agency, transmitting a report on work done by the Public Roads Administration under the provisions of the Federal Highway Act in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1942, and recommendations concerning future work; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

89. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a certified volume comprising the acts of the second and third special sessions of the Fifteenth Legislature of Puerto Rico, June 15 to 28, 1942, and October 26 to November 8, 1942, respectively; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

90. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill authorizing appropriations for the United States Navy for additional ship-repair facilities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

91. A letter from the Under Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a report on forest roads and trails for the fiscal year 1942; to the Committee on Roads.

---

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1143) for the relief of Jennie M. Elben, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

---

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARLSON of Kansas:

H. R. 1445. A bill to provide for issuance of a duplicate adjusted-service certificate to any veteran who establishes that the original has been lost or destroyed, or is being withheld or concealed from him, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DREWRY:

H. R. 1446. A bill authorizing appropriations for the United States Navy for additional ship repair facilities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GWYNNE:

H. R. 1447. A bill to incorporate the United Service Women of America; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PETERSON of Florida:

H. R. 1448. A bill to provide for adjudication of any claim for compensation, pension, or retirement pay upon evidence in file at time of death of the veteran; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. RANKIN:

H. R. 1449. A bill to amend the Social Security Act with respect to old-age assistance, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ROWE:

H. R. 1450. A bill to incorporate the Army Air Corps Mothers' Organization of America, Second World War; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 25, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of all life and light, by whose love we have the gift of today's fresh beginning, we thank Thee for this reverential moment of quiet as we bow in Thy presence before the pressure of demanding hours lays its hand upon us. Lord of the new day, who spreadest the mantle of light about us when purple morning breaketh, fairer than morning, lovelier than daylight, dawns the sweet consciousness we are with Thee: If we take the wings of the morning and fly to the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall Thy hand lead us and Thy right hand hold us.

Even as the dawn has climbed to the zenith with glamor and golden dart and has grown into the fullness of noontide, so let Thy radiance banish all shadows of unbelief, of fear, and of guilt. May the day star from on high rise in our hearts with healing in His wings. So may we walk the steep and sharp road of duty and service as children of the light. In bitter and baffling days, when the earth is full of thunder and the seas are dark with wrath, give us a courage that never quails, give us a faith that never wavers, give us a hope that never dims. Thus, in the glory of the morning grant us Thy blessing, and in the gloaming of the evening let Thy peace be upon our hearts. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. THOMAS of Utah, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 21, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution adopted by the council of the city of St. Paul, Minn., favoring continuation of the National Youth Administration, or some other worth-while youth training program; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A letter from Fred Whitmore, of Kalamazoo, Mich., relative to his plan to provide security for every person, to simplify the tax structure and place it on a pay-as-you-go basis, and also to stabilize the national income; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition of sundry citizens, young women of Wesleyan University, Salina, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the common defense in relation to the sale of alcoholic liquors to members of the land and naval forces of the United States; ordered to lie on the table.

By Mr. WALSH:

Resolutions of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts, memorializing Congress to take immediate steps to relieve distress and suffering caused by the shortage of fuel oil in Massachusetts; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

(See resolutions printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 18th instant, p. 196, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

By Mr. GREEN:

A resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, requesting the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States to take all necessary steps to provide for proper, substantial recognition of the status of the men of the American merchant-marine service; to the Committee on Commerce.

(See resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. GERRY on the 21st instant, p. 251, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

By Mr. TRUMAN:

A resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Missouri; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"Whereas Wiley Blount Rutledge has been appointed by President Franklin Delano Roosevelt as judge of the Supreme Court of the United States; and

"Whereas Judge Rutledge has been, for a number of years, a leading teacher and educator connected with various universities and schools of law; and

"Whereas Judge Rutledge was dean of the law department of Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., for some years; and

"Whereas during the period of time that he was dean of the Washington University Law Department, he made many friends in the State of Missouri, and the people of the State of Missouri became conscious of the ability and learning of Judge Rutledge: So, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second General Assembly of the State of Missouri, That we commend the President of the United States for his wise choice in selecting Wiley Blount Rutledge for the high position as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and wish for Judge Rutledge a most successful and happy tenure of office; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be directed to send a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, a copy to Judge Wiley Blount Rutledge, a copy to Washington University Law Department, St. Louis, Mo., and a copy each to the two United States Senators of Missouri, HON. BENNETT CHAMP CLARK and Hon. HARRY S. TRUMAN."

By Mr. WHEELER:

A resolution of the Senate of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"Whereas there is a genuine need for more farm machinery than has been allotted the State of Montana if the farmers are to produce the foodstuffs desired; and

"Whereas a diminishing supply of available labor makes farm machinery even more necessary than in normal times; and

"Whereas lack of both materials and labor is making it increasingly difficult to make repairs to machinery: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana, That we petition the War Production Board and the Secretary of Agriculture to reconsider both the national quotas of new farm machinery for 1943 and the present Montana State quotas, to the end that quotas may be increased and more equitably allocated and that farmers may be equipped to handle the huge task of farm production which it is well known is so vital to the successful prosecution of the war and the feeding of our armed forces, our allied soldiers, and our civilian workers; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies properly attested by the president and secretary of the senate be transmitted by the secretary of state to the War Production Board, Donald M. Nelson, Chairman, and to Claude R. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Montana."

A resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"Whereas the War Production Board has seen fit to severely curtail the 1943 production of farm machinery, despite representations of need by county and State war boards and the Secretary of Agriculture, and despite the fact that the steel needed for producing farm machinery is a very small percentage of total annual steel production and further despite the fact that more farm machinery is needed in order to meet 1943 war production goals of food and fiber crops and to replace lost farm labor; and

"Whereas the quotas of both 1943 farm machinery production and other new machinery which it has been necessary to set up to allocate available supplies entails unfortunate discriminations among States, counties and individual farmers needing machinery and replacements; and

"Whereas as an example of the foregoing, Montana now needing hammer mills and feed grinders for grinding winter feed for livestock and having requests for approximately 500, has been allotted only 49 in comparison with 379 allotted North Dakota whose total livestock units are practically the same as the State of Montana; and

"Whereas a survey conducted among the many members of the house of representatives who are engaged in agricultural pursuits revealed that inability to buy sufficient badly needed farm machinery is one of the major factors which threaten to seriously handicap food production: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the house of representatives in session assembled, That we petition the War Production Board and the Secretary of Agriculture to reconsider both the national quotas of new farm machinery for 1943 and the present State quotas to the end that quotas may be increased and more equitably allocated and that farmers may be equipped to handle the huge task of farm production which it is well known is so vital to the successful prosecution of the war and the feeding of our armed forces, our allied soldiers and our civilian workers; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon the journal of the house, and that a copy thereof properly attested by the speaker and the clerk of the house, be transmitted by the secretary of state to the War Production Board, Donald M. Nelson, Chairman, and to Claude R. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Montana."

PARITY PRICES ON FARM PRODUCTS—RESOLUTION OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I present a copy of engrossed House Resolution 8, adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma, and I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred as requested by the Senator from Oklahoma, and printed in the RECORD, under the rule:

House Resolution 8

Resolution memorializing Congress to revise a method of arriving at parity on farm products by taking into consideration the increased cost of farm labor, farm machinery, and the increased cost of living

Whereas it has been and is being stated in high public places that food will win the war and win the peace, and to that end our farmers are being urged to make every possible effort to increase production; and

Whereas farm income has not kept pace with the increased cost of labor, the increased cost of farm machinery, and the increased cost of living, and is also being hampered by the scarcity of farm labor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma:

SECTION 1. That the Congress of the United States be and the same is hereby memorialized and petitioned to revise the method of arriving at the parity price of farm products by taking into consideration the scarcity of and the increased cost of farm labor, the increased cost of farm machinery, and the increased cost of living.

SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be mailed to each of the Oklahoma Senators and Members of the National House of Representatives, to the floor leaders of both parties in the House and Senate, and to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Adopted by the house of representatives the 18th day of January 1943.

HAROLD FREEMAN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

RESOLUTION OF LOYALTY AND SUPPORT IN WAR EFFORT ADOPTED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Legislature of Oklahoma has passed Concurrent Resolution No. 1, which is of interest to the State of Oklahoma, and might be of general interest to the country; so I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD in full as a part of my remarks and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, under the rule, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 1

Resolution commending the President of the United States of America and the Congress for the war effort and pledging the support of the State of Oklahoma in the winning of the war

Whereas Franklin Delano Roosevelt became President of the United States of America on the 4th day of March 1933; and

Whereas under section 2 of article III of the Constitution of the United States, he, as President, is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy; and

Whereas the President pointed out to Congress from time to time in his annual messages the necessity for expanding the Army, Navy, and Air Corps, and the fortifying of the Philippine Islands, Pearl Harbor, Wake Island, and Midway, and other outposts of American defense; and

Whereas for some years following there were in Congress obstructionists, isolationists, appeasers who delayed the rearming of America and the fortifying of its defense outposts; and

Whereas the President of the United States had on numerous occasions pointed out that there were criminals at large and nations denominated as aggressors who made their living by taking what others had worked for and earned over generations of peaceful and quiet living, such as the stout-hearted Holland Dutch and the peaceful working Danes; and

Whereas the Congress failed to heed his pleas and warnings until a state of war existed in the four corners of the globe, and finally a poll of the American people convinced Congress that the President was right in the rearming of this Nation and in the preparation to defend ourselves; and

Whereas on December 7, 1941, Pearl Harbor was attacked without warning while the envoys of the Japanese war lords were sitting as invited guests at the peace table in Washington; and

Whereas this act constitutes a declaration of war by the Japanese Empire on the United States; and

Whereas Germany and Italy declared war on the United States the following day, it then became necessary for the President, as Commander in Chief, to call upon Congress to recommend that war be declared upon Japan, Germany, and Italy; and

Whereas from that day until this the Congress of the United States, as a whole and in the main, has supported the President's war program: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Nineteenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, the Honorable Senate concurring herein, do commend the President of the United States of America, as President and as Commander in Chief of the armed forces, for his leadership and his war effort in winning the war; be it further

Resolved, That we commend the Congress of the United States for its support of the President's war program since December 7, 1941; be it further

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Nineteenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, the Honorable Senate concurring therein, pledge the unqualified and undivided support of the State of Oklahoma to the President and Congress of the United States of America in whatever is necessary to win the war now being fought by the United Nations against Japan, Germany, and Italy; be it further

Resolved, That we pledge our full cooperation to the President and the Congress of the United States of America in securing a just and lasting peace, based upon Christianity, equality, and democratic principles after conclusion of the war; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted by the clerk of the house of representatives to the President of the United States, to each of the Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Oklahoma.

Adopted by the house of representatives the 6th day of January 1943.

HAROLD FREEMAN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Adopted by the senate the 13th day of January 1943.

ROBERT BURNS,
Acting President of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. TRUMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

S. 414. A bill for the relief of Thaddeus C. Knight; without amendment (Rept. No. 21).

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

S. Res. 39. Resolution continuing the authority for an investigation of the use of public lands and the filming of motion pictures thereon, and increasing the limit of expenditures; with an amendment, and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

By Mr. MEAD, from the Committee on Civil Service:

S. Res. 68. Resolution continuing the authority for an investigation of the administration and operation of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; without amendment, and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

By Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

S. Res. 73. Resolution continuing the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 58, Seventy-seventh Congress, and Senate Resolution 310, Seventy-seventh Congress, relating to the investigation with respect to the development of mineral resources, including oil and gas, of the public lands of the United States; with an amendment; and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

ADJUSTMENT OF SALARIES OF METROPOLITAN POLICE, UNITED STATES PARK POLICE, WHITE HOUSE POLICE, AND MEMBERS OF FIRE DEPARTMENT OF THE DISTRICT—MINORITY VIEWS: AMENDMENT

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted minority views on the bill (S. 17) to provide for a temporary adjustment of salaries of the Metropolitan Police, the United States Park Police, the White House Police, and the members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia, which were ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 19.

Mr. BURTON also submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 17, supra, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR TEACHERS AND OTHER EDUCATIONAL EMPLOYEES OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF THE DISTRICT—MINORITY VIEWS: AMENDMENT

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted minority views on the bill (S. 18) to provide for a temporary adjustment of salaries for teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia, for the duration of the war and for 6 months thereafter, which were ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 20.

Mr. BURTON also submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to Senate bill 18, supra, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 82, submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] on January 21. The resolution in context and import and provision is similar to other resolutions along this line. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 82) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. LUCAS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 83, submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] on January 21, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 83), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-eighth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject referred to said committee, the total expenses pursuant to this resolution (which shall not exceed $5,000) to be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the able Senator whether the resolution affecting the Committee on Rules is not different from those affecting other standing committees.

Mr. LUCAS. It is the same.

Mr. McNARY. Has it been customary for the Committee on Rules to hold hearings?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; the Committee on Rules holds hearings from time to time on different matters.

Mr. McNARY. On changes in the rules, I assume?

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I have here a series of special Senate resolutions which heretofore have been submitted and passed upon by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, of which I am chairman, which I report favorably and desire to have considered. First, I report favorably with an amendment, Senate Resolution 6, submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] on January 7, 1943, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 6).

The amendment was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out the words "and succeeding Congresses" and to insert the word "Congress", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to March 1, 1941, Senate Resolution 146, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to August 11, 1941, and Senate Resolution 288, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to September 17, 1942 (relating to the investigation of the war program), is hereby continued during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF PRODUCTION, TRANSPORTATION, AND MARKETING OF WOOL

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with amendments, Senate Resolution 12, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, do I understand the resolution provides for the continuation of a committee?

Mr. LUCAS. The resolution provides for the continuation of the committee which was appointed heretofore by the Senate for the purpose of making investigation into the production, transportation and marketing of wool. Let me say to the able minority leader that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who is not now on the floor of the Senate, stated to our committee that there was at the present time a sufficient amount of money in the fund heretofore provided for his committee to make a complete and final report, which would be done previous to December 31st of this year.

Mr. McNARY. I thought the committee had completed its work last year. That is the only reason I made the inquiry.

Mr. LUCAS. I think the Senator is correct in saying that the committee has completed its work, but it is my understanding that no final report has been filed, and that the work extended over a long period of time, and there is quite a bit of work to be done in connection with making the final report. That was the statement made by the senior Senator from New Mexico to our committee.

Mr. McNARY. The resolution contemplates the filing of a final report?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; and the winding up of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 12), which had been submitted by Mr. HATCH on the 7th instant.

The amendments were, in line 5, after the word "effect", to strike out "during the Seventy-eighth Congress" and insert "until December 31, 1943"; and in line 7, after the words "prior to", to strike out "the expiration of the Seventy-eighth Congress" and insert "said date", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 160, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, agreed to July 10, 1935, authorizing a special committee to investigate the production, transportation, and marketing of wool, as extended, is hereby further extended and continued in full force and effect until December 31, 1943; and the said committee may report to the Senate at any time prior to said date.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CONTINUATION OF SURVEY OF CONDITIONS OF INDIANS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with an amendment, Senate Resolution 17, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I will say that the resolution was submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] on January 7. The original resolution has been pending for some time, and the Senator from Oklahoma came before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and stated that there was a small amount left in the fund, and he would like to have the committee continued in order to take care of individual and various problems which come up from time to time in connection with Indian affairs. The Senator from Oklahoma is present; and if any question is raised concerning the resolution, I should like to have him make a full explanation of it.

I should also like to say in connection with the resolution that it was reported to me that the fund remaining was being used primarily for the purpose of keeping a couple of persons on the pay roll The Senator from Oklahoma emphatically denied that allegation. The only purpose for which the money left in the fund is being used is by the Senators themselves in making investigations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 17), which had been submitted by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma on the 7th instant.

The amendment was, in line 6, after "Seventy-eighth", to strike out "and succeeding Congresses" and insert "Congress", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 79, agreed to February 2, 1928, and continued by subsequent resolutions, authorizing the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, to make a general survey of the condition of the Indians in the United States, hereby is continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION AND OPERATION OF WATER SYSTEM OF THE DISTRICT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 31, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 31), reported by Mr. MCCARRAN from the Committee on the District of Columbia on the 11th instant, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 169, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to March 2, 1942, and Senate Resolution 337, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to December 16, 1942 (relating to the administration and operation of the water system of the District of Columbia), is hereby continued until the end of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

CONTINUATION OF STUDY AND SURVEY OF THE PROBLEMS OF AMERICAN SMALL BUSINESS ENTERPRISES

Mr. LUCAS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with amendments, Senate resolution 66, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the question of further appropriation has been postponed, has it?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I will say in answer to the question asked by the Senator from Ohio that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate did postpone the question of the amount of the appropriation for this committee, and the resolution was referred back to the Special Committee to Study and Survey Problems of American Small Business Enterprises, with the request that the committee thoroughly investigate and determine the amount needed, and report on that point later. That action was taken primarily because request was made that five new members be added to the Small Businessmen's Committee, and our committee thought the entire membership of that committee should determine the question of the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. TAFT. I agree entirely with the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 66) which had been submitted by Mr. MURRAY (for himself, Mr. MALONEY, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. MEAD, Mr. STEWART, Mr. CAPPER, and Mr. TAFT), on the 18th instant.

The amendments were, in line 4, after the word "hereby", to strike out "extended" and insert "continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-eighth Congress," and to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the limit of expenditure under the said resolution is hereby increased by $50,000.

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 298, Seventy-sixth Congress, third session, as agreed to October 8, 1940 (providing for a study and survey of the problems of American small-business enterprises), is hereby continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-eighth Congress and its membership increased from 7 to 12, and the Vice President is authorized to appoint 5 more members to said committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CONDITIONS IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs unanimously reported Senate Resolution 26 last Thursday. May I inquire of the chairman of the committee when he expects to have another meeting of his committee, as our committee would like to have some action taken on the resolution, which was referred to the Audit and Control Committee.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the resolution which the Senator from New Mexico is now discussing was favorably reported by his committee last Thursday, as I recall, and a meeting of our committee was held on Friday morning. We did not have the resolution before us at that time to consider it. We considered only those resolutions which were then before us. Other resolutions have been submitted since that time, and I think perhaps at present there are four or five resolutions pending before our committee. I will say that some time this week the committee will hold another meeting and determine definitely what we will do with all the resolutions which are now pending before us.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The reason I made the inquiry is that the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs unanimously voted to try to continue the investigation of Puerto Rican affairs. The resolution in question is identical to one presented in the last Congress, with one exception. The resolution submitted in the last Congress provided for investigation of social and economic conditions in Puerto Rico due to the shortage of shipping and to the war in general. From the information obtained by the committee during the last session of Congress the committee came to the conclusion that while it was true that conditions have been temporarily ameliorated and to a certain extent have been improved, the over-all picture of conditions as they have existed for some 43 or 44 years is still the same, and it is our belief that a subcommittee of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs should go to Puerto Rico and make an investigation The committee is not in any way whatsoever interested in the political angle of the Puerto Rico situation, but is interested in social conditions in Puerto Rico, and I believe the committee can serve a very useful purpose. We wanted to do the work as soon as possible, because the Senate has now completed various organization steps, and the committee desires to do the work before other important questions are taken up by the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. The report made by the Senator from New Mexico was a very fair and complete report with respect to what had been done. I should say that some time during the week the resolution in which the Senator is interested will be considered by the full committee.

Mr President, while I am on my feet I should like to say another word with respect to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Senators all know that the membership of the committee was increased to eight. The Senator from Illinois thought it the better part of wisdom to hold meetings in connection with all these resolutions, and as soon as we have enough resolutions before us another meeting will be held, and the chairmen of the various committees who are interested in resolutions will be called before the committee, or anyone who is interested will be called before it for the purpose of giving brief testimony in connection with the various resolutions, insofar as the financial aspects are concerned.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS:

S. 553. A bill to amend the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

S. 554. A bill for the extension of admiralty jurisdiction; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 570. A bill granting a pension to Clarence Edward Shipman;

S. 571. A bill granting a pension to Lydia C. Wark;

S. 572. A bill granting a pension to Alice Wright; and

S. 573. A bill granting an increase of pension to Nancy Jane Spence; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANGER:

S. 574. A bill providing for cancelation of certain crop production and harvesting loans; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. MCKELLAR:

S. 575. A bill to provide that officers in the executive branch of the Government who receive compensation at a rate in excess of $4,600 a year shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in the manner provided by the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

S. 576. A bill to validate certain applications for national service life insurance where deductions of premiums from service pay were authorized but the applicant died prior to the effective date of such insurance and prior to February 11, 1942; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 577. A bill to amend an act entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (38 Stat. 730), as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUTLER:

S. 578. A bill granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to reopen and readjudicate the eminent domain case of John W. Parish, trustee (John H. Bexten, substituted), and revise its judgment heretofore entered therein; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. REVERCOMB:

S. J. Res. 26. Joint resolution authorizing the President to proclaim the Sunday before Memorial Day as a day for memorial services for deceased firemen; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INCREASE OF NATIONAL DEBT LIMIT

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to increase the debt limit of the United States, and for other purposes. The bill would increase the debt limit to $210,000,000,000, which is the Budget figure as estimated and contained in the Budget report on the national debt at the end of the fiscal year 1943–44, that is, on July 1, 1944.

The bill is in the form of similar bills, but there have been added two additional sections to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate and especially of the members of the Finance Committe. The first section would give to the Secretary of the Treasury the power and authority to permit payments in connection with the redemption of savings bonds to be made by incorporated banks and trust companies; and the second section would authorize and permit the Secretary of the Treasury to pay losses resulting from payments made in connection with redemption of savings bonds out of the fund established by the Government Losses in Shipment Act, as amended. It will be, I hope, agreeable to the committee, Mr. President to consider the bill on Thursday or Friday of this week; and public notice will be given to the members of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 566) to increase the debt limit of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES OF SENATORIAL CANDIDATES

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 86) was read as follows:

Resolved, That Resolution No. 235, agreed to April 16, 1942, authorizing a Special Committee to Investigate the Campaign Expenditures of Senatorial Candidates in 1942, hereby is continued in full force and effect until the committee shall submit its final report, which shall not be later than March 6, 1943.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I will state my reason for asking for the additional time. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] will recall that several days ago we discussed a resolution dealing with this matter, and the Senator from Oregon and I agreed to making the date the 10th of February. I wish to say that I have had to do a part of the work with my own office force. We are keeping down expenses to a minimum. We expect to turn back more than half the money allotted to us. We really need the additional time to compile figures necessary to be placed in the report.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, when the matter came before the Senate for consideration a week ago, I objected to the length of time requested by the able Senator from Arizona. We agreed on the 10th of February, as I recall. What is the date contained in the resolution the Senator has now submitted?

Mr. McFARLAND. The date is the 6th of March. That date was also contained in the original resolution. In discussing it we finally agreed on February 10.

Mr. MCNARY. Yes.

Mr. McFARLAND. The reason for requesting that the date be made the 6th of March is that one of those working for me had to leave for a short time. We have seen fit to do much of the work in our own office in order to hold down the expenses of the committee to a minimum. We expect to turn back more than half the money which was allotted to us.

Mr. MCNARY. That is an unusual statement.

Mr. President, in the interest of economy I join the Senator from Arizona in the request that the committee be given until March 6, 1943, to file its report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 86) was considered and agreed to.

R. BRINSKELLE AND CHARLIE MELCHER; WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS

On motion of Mr. HILL, it was,

Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 1352) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of R. Brinskelle and Charlie Melcher (77th Cong., 1st sess.) be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ELECTION OF SERGEANT AT ARMS—PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, yesterday Mr. Bert Andrews wrote an article, which was published in the Washington Post of January 24, which I read:

The poll tax issue. Chesley W. Jurney, Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, resigned and was replaced by former Senator Wall Doxey, of Mississippi. Mr. Jurney had incurred the wrath of Senator KENNETH MCKELLAR, Democrat, of Tennessee, and other southern Senators, when he hunted out absent Members and served warrants of arrest to force their attendance at debate on the anti-poll tax bill.

Mr. President, Mr. Andrews is wholly mistaken in what he says in this article concerning my part in the Jurney matter. The arrests in the poll tax matter did not have the slightest or the remotest thing in the world to do with my opposition to Mr. Jurney. In that matter Mr. Jurney did what the Senate ordered him to do. He cannot and could not be blamed for doing what the Senate ordered him to do.

It is very good of my critic, and I thank him for the compliment, to suggest that my wrath had such a powerful influence on the Senate majority, but I am sure it did not have the slightest thing in the world to do with the case. I think every member of the majority who was at the majority conference will agree with me that that was not remotely the reason why Mr. Jurney was defeated. Mr. Andrews might ask any member of the conference.

POST-WAR AIMS—STATEMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there is much discussion throughout the country regarding the post-war aims of the United States. It is a good thing for the people of the country to discuss the aims of our country after the war. I think that such discussions should not be for the purpose of controversy or of spreading disunity, but should be made in good humor and based on common sense.

The Vice President has made a valuable contribution to a consideration of America's part in the post-war era. A reading of the very frank statement which he made several days ago would be advantageous, I think, to the people of the country; and I desire to have it included in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Some men have said we cannot discuss post-war aims without rekindling peacetime controversies and emphasizing peacetime disunities. They talk "in dark whispers of the collectivization of American life, of the destruction of free enterprise." They would have us believe that our only alternatives are to choose between a return to the old system with its chronic depressions, unemployment, and want, or else to assure employment through a full state socialism with everyone working for the Government under tight central bureaucracy. They seek to frighten our great American middle class of independent self-supporting citizens by this bogey. They claim that to discuss now ways of maintaining full employment after the war would split our people wide open. They claim it would create a class warfare that would weaken and undermine our war effort.

Such claims are nonsense. "We can have full employment in this country without destroying private initiative, private capital, or private enterprise. We need the driving force of self-interest to get most of the work of the world done." Despite all the gains of modern machinery, it still takes a lot of hard work to make a house, an automobile, a grapefruit, a beefsteak, or even a movie. Every farmer knows how true it still is that "in the sweat of thy brow thou shalt eat bread. Men must work for what they have. By and large their material reward will continue to be based on how skilled they become." Social security and other measures, public and private, can provide protection against the contingencies the individual cannot avoid, such as disease, accident, involuntary unemployment, and old age. Provision of such security and of opportunity to all for health, education, and work, "are not inconsistent with the principle that hard work must be rewarded to encourage workers to do their best."

What I visualize for the America of the future is not a nation of propertyless workers, but rather an America where all can become members of the middle class, where all can share in the benefits which that class has enjoyed in the past. For this representative American of the future, these include a home of his own with all the conveniences modern science has made possible—electric lights, central heating, modern plumbing, electric washing machine, electric refrigeration, radio, comfortable furniture, and rugs. They include a car neither old nor ramshackle, decent clothes, and books. They include his share of recreation—movies or theater, trips, vacations, high school and college for his children, horse racing, football, baseball, golf, or tennis, as his taste is inclined. These, together with ample food, make up the American way of life which only a minor portion of our people has enjoyed in the past. They can be and will be enjoyed by the great mass of our people in the future, if only we can find the means to translate our present great productivity for war to an equally great productivity for peace.

We will produce this year, right here in the United States, at least one hundred and thirty to one hundred and forty billion dollars' worth of goods and services. That is equal to an average of $4,000 worth of products turned out for each family in the country. Of course, our families won't consume that much this year, for over half of what we produce will go to wage war. If we can work out the ways to keep production going on an equally high level after the fighting ends, every family can enjoy a comfortable income, even though there continue to be wide differences between what is earned by skilled professional men or inventors or daring businessmen, and what average workers earn.

But when we come to ask how we will keep business going on such a full level after the wartime demands stop, the prophets of doom say in effect it cannot be done except by abolishing private enterprise, by substituting complete Government ownership and Government control for the freedoms of the competitive system. I take a different view. I believe that the spirit of free competition will and must continue to be one of our main driving forces. We must continue incentives to individual effort and progress. The farmer who is the first to breed up his cows or improve his seed lines, the engineer who invents a labor-saving technique, the merchant who finds ways of meeting his customers' needs more economically and more fully, the businessman, or the inventor who risks his work or his capital in a new productive enterprise, the worker who studies and fits himself for a more productive job, each must be rewarded for his achievement, and encouraged by the reward to push on to still greater effort and production. There is need in American society for the flexibility, imagination, and growth which such individual opportunity and achievements produce. Horatio Alger is not dead in America and never need be.

This does not mean that the future will be the same as the past. Though we can retain many of the elements of business as we have known it in the past, we cannot go back to the past complete lack of economic responsibility and insure full employment at the same time. I hope that some kinds of easy money-making are gone for good—money made by the old-fashioned manipulation of security markets and of speculative commodity markets, or by the unrestricted use of business monopoly powers which strangle trade, kill competition, and cut down production or jobs. In the last few years we have done our best to see that exploitation of all kinds has become permanently unfashionable. Even tremendously large incomes will be less common in the future, not only because they are bad for those that receive them, or at least their children and grandchildren, but also because they build up hoards of idle money instead of putting people to work, and concentrate control of industry in single hands.

No; we are not going back to the past irresponsibilities, to the kind of business where money-making had no relation to service to the community or to the citizens. Instead we shall continue to develop the kind of mixed society where both business and Government have responsibilities. Private property and private enterprise will be used to the fullest extent they can to serve the general welfare. Individuals will be free and must be encouraged to start their own businesses, to increase their own production, to acquire and use capital. At the same time Government can and must restrain abuses of private initiative, which corporations and monopolies under the guise of freedom of enterprise have used to damage the welfare of society as a whole. More than that, government can and will accept the major responsibilities for filling in whatever gaps business leaves. Private enterprise will continue to be our first reliance in providing jobs and providing work. Businessmen will be encouraged to do what competition has always tended to make them do—to reduce prices as costs fall, to increase the levels of sales and employment, to use profits only as an incentive to increase production or lower costs. To the extent that there are areas of unemployment left despite these efforts by business, government must and will step in to see that all people have opportunities for work and to establish such minimum standards of living that no member of the community suffers even though business temporarily and in part fails to provide opportunities at good work for all people. The more private enterprise succeeds in maintaining full employment through the policies I have just indicated, the less Government spending will be required.

Meanwhile, people will continue to own and to acquire property, to start new businesses, to get ahead in the world, to fail or succeed under their own drive. Individual initiative and enterprise, and Government responsibility for the general welfare, will continue to pull in double harness, for a better life for our people.

DISFRANCHISEMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, on January 5, James R. Kirkland, chairman of the District of Columbia Bar Association, delivered an address to some 90 men and women upon their induction into a naturalization class. I ask unanimous consent to have the address printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

I wish particularly to call attention to the following statement by Mr. Kirkland:

Those of you who remain in the District of Columbia are aware that there is still a limitation upon your rights as an American. While your neighbor may cast his vote on election day, you still are denied the complete privilege of a citizen. You are aware that the residents of the District of Columbia are disfranchised and are not entitled to be represented in the Congress nor to have a voice in the local government. When you take your oath today, it should act as an immediate challenge to you to work for suffrage in the Nation's Capital.

Mr. President, it is high time that Congress take action to correct this situation, and restore to citizens of the United States living in the District of Columbia the rights their fellow citizens have in the States to elect a President and Vice President and Members of Congress. The District of Columbia should not be the "voteless ghetto" of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

May it please the court and you new American citizens, as chairman of the District of Columbia Bar Association Committee on Americanism, it affords me great pleasure in its behalf to welcome you into the circle of American citizenship. We of the District of Columbia Bar Association are endeavoring by these ceremonies to make more memorable and more impressive this ceremony of your naturalization. When you reflect that two-thirds of the signers of the Declaration of Independence and two-thirds of the signers of the Constitution of the United States were members of the American bar, it is fitting and proper that we should carry on those fine traditions of our profession by extending to you the hand of fellowship upon your entry into American citizenship.

The presence among your class of members of the armed service should serve to impress upon you not only that your newly acquired citizenship enables you to enjoy many privileges but also calls for many obligations on your part. Those uniformed members of your class are prepared to defend their new citizenship with their lives and to do their utmost to preserve the ideals of American democracy.

Against the many causes of the great World War No. 2 we cherish the hope that the genius of our Government, which permits all classes, creeds, and races to live together in peace and harmony to the complete economic and social freedom of the individual, may prove the model of government upon which all the nations of the world may in the future unite in a permanent and lasting peace.

Perhaps some of you may feel that while you have been honored by your American citizenship, apart from discharging your general obligations, there is little that you as a citizen can do to aid and improve your Government. To those of you who will go to live in other States, you will undoubtedly exercise the supreme privilege of an American by voting in your State, county, and municipal elections and in furthering the great principles of representative government. Those of you who remain in the District of Columbia are aware that there is still a limitation upon your rights as an American. While your neighbor may cast his vote on election day, you still are denied the complete privilege of a citizen. You are aware that the residents of the District of Columbia are disfranchised and are not entitled to be represented in the Congress nor to have a voice in their local government. When you take your oath today, it should act as an immediate challenge to you to work for suffrage in the Nation's Capital.

Again may I extend to you in behalf of the Bar Association our sincere congratulations, and we trust that in the years to come, you will look upon this occasion as one of the most inspiring moments of your life.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS BY GOVERNOR GRISWOLD, OF NEBRASKA

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, Nebraska has no State income tax, it has no State sales tax, and is entirely free of debt. When weather conditions are favorable we rank among the largest producers of food. We produced a tremendous crop the past season despite the shortage of labor and farm equipment. I hope we can continue our support of the Government, with food and men and money, until the war is won. We are fortunate in having no State tax program that might interfere with Federal taxation, which must necessarily be greatly increased.

I am certain the Members of this body will be interested in reading the message of the Governor of Nebraska when he addressed the opening session of the State senate on January 7, and I request that it be inserted in the body of the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, members of the senate, you gentlemen have been chosen by the people of Nebraska to assemble here and work in their behalf. I am here as Governor, chosen by the same people, elected for a second term.

Our task is different from that usually confronting a legislature and a Governor because our Nation is now engaged in a horrible war which, in one way or other, is thrusting its way into the life of every man, woman, and child. It completely dominates our thoughts.

These are days of danger, danger not only from the vicious struggle for survival but from the inevitable post-war period when proper readjustment will be threatened by swarms of crackpot schemes.

What can we, the governing authorities of this State, what can we do during a brief legislative session to repel these dangers?

There are signs to guide us.

Two years ago at my inauguration I stated that very few new laws were needed for Nebraska and that my duty was rather to furnish a better administration of the laws we already had. Since then we in the executive departments have worked on that premise. If there were doubts as to its soundness, I think those doubts were washed way by the voters on November 3.

Now again, I say, but even more emphatically, we can do the people of Nebraska a real service by just leaving them alone. Our people are busy with crops and livestock, they are busy in factory and business, they are busy with thoughts of fighting sons, husbands, and fathers. In the name of common sense, let us rise above this fad of regulation and leave our people free to work and fight for the victory which must be won.

That is my paramount recommendation.

Two years ago we could not know, of course, that within 11 months, war would come to us. Our planning necessarily was based upon what we thought might happen. It was your foresight in creating the defense organization and in establishing an emergency appropriation, which permitted the State to properly function without a special legislative session. I trust the same foresight will continue with the enactment of war emergency measures, effective only for the duration.

So that you would not be delayed in your consideration of this emergency program or in your consideration of such other routine and corrective legislation as I have to offer, these bills have been printed. They are now ready for introduction. My budget recommendations are also ready. This is in keeping with plans of your own legislative council which, I believe, has its own legislative program ready for submission. Consequently you can begin work at once. The avenue is open for a short, businesslike session, free from petty squabbles—a session worthy of Nebraska and one of which you as senators may well be proud.

As the session progresses, many other bills will be placed before you from other sources. In considering them I suggest you bear in mind that our State agencies must contemplate assisting in the war effort by the orderly release of all possible manpower. State and municipal construction work should stop. Travel must be held to a minimum. Like other Americans, we in the State's service, must be willing to work longer hours. We ask such performance and more of our fighting men; we cannot shirk it ourselves.

We will also aid in the war effort by keeping taxes at a minimum. People must have opportunity to pay the tremendously increased Federal taxes, meet higher living costs, and invest in war bonds. In my judgment, there are better ways of avoiding inflation than by levying taxes, merely to reduce consumer purchasing power.

As you work, remember Nebraska is a great State. We have no State debt of any kind, we impose neither a sales nor income tax, and we are the only State in the Union with such a record. In addition, we have about $2,000,000 in our general fund, $9,000,000 in other funds, and about $14,000,000 invested in bonds. As a State, we own 1,700,000 acres of land. We have the most beautiful Capitol in the Nation—all these paid for in full.

You as Senators, and I, as Governor, have a heritage to uphold; the reputation of a State to keep. But we have even more. I say to you that Nebraska is in a position to become a governmental model for the other States and for the Nation itself. To people beset with doubts and uncertainties, we can give sorely needed reassurance by proving that in Nebraska are legislators and executives who are statesmen, voting for what is right even though it be temporarily unpopular; statesmen who trust the people and who can be trusted by the people. In this we must not fail.

When the war is won—and won it shall be—our Nation will have a national debt of more than two hundred, perhaps three hundred billion dollars, blooming in the shadows of an overstuffed bureaucracy. We will have with us tens of thousands of governmental problem children, the offspring of this bureaucracy, all suckled on red tape and accustomed to giving orders to the people. We will all be tempted by recent habit to look to the Government for help with every difficulty that confronts us.

This is not a partisan problem; it is an American problem and it bids fair to become the great American tragedy. We of Nebraska, as Americans, must assist in solving it. The solution will not come easily and it will require foresight and faith, courage and conviction. And the task will be complex because as we cut away the tangled growth of demagoguery, we must be vigilant to preserve the good roots.

We recognize, certainly, that there is important governmental work to be done; that there can be proper planning by public agencies representing the whole people; that society has a responsibility to care for those in real need; that labor is entitled to fair treatment; that capital has a right to prosper; that work and industry deserve rewards, but, above all, that in times of peace the individual citizen shall be master of his own destiny.

Under a system of free enterprise, we built here an industrial order which trained the workmen and built the factories which are today saving us and saving the world. In this land of free decision, we have raised the young men who have gone out with courage and faith in their hearts, and with a smile on their lips, to fight the enemy on land and sea, and in the air.

"The American way of life" is more than a name, and it must be retained.

So again I ask, What can we here this winter do to make sure Nebraska shoulders her proper share of the current and coming problems?

We must prove that our State, a large unit of government, can be operated in a business-like, efficient manner; that useless positions need not be created; that appropriations can be wisely made; that Nebraska is fully capable of making progress without making debts. As we keep our standard of government high, we will be living up to our responsibility by setting an example others may wish to follow.

Our people have already shown they know how to do much with little. Our farms, with scars of drought fresh upon them, have in 1 year, through hard work and sacrifice, made an amazing production record. Volunteers have risen by the thousands to aid in necessary civilian defense work and scrap drives. Our industries, battling shortages, have plunged into 24-hour operations without a serious misstep. Surely, we need have no fear that our people lack spirit, intelligent enterprise, or competent self-control.

We can best recognize their accomplishments by leaving them unbothered and unhampered by trivial legislation and new schemes. We can take care of present-day emergencies, make necessary corrections, pass an appropriations bill, and permit people to go ahead with their work.

That is our immediate duty. Our swift and efficient execution of it can well serve as a bright beacon in a dark sky.

REPORT OF CHAIRMAN OF WAR PRODUCTION BOARD RELATING TO SMALL BUSINESS ENTERPRISES (S. DOC. NO. 3)

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the third report of the operations of the War Production Board, transmitted to the Senate pursuant to law on December 15, 1942, and now in the files of the Senate, be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AIR WAR ON JAPAN

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, without for one moment desiring to detract from the importance of the operations in North Africa, I believe it is fair to say that, so far as the press is concerned, it has to some extent been preoccupied with developments in that theater of the war. However, in the southwest Pacific operations of great importance have been under way, under the most difficult conditions, under which men have ever been called upon to fight, so far as topography, terrain, climate, transport, and supplies are concerned. These operations have been carried forward under the able leadership of General MacArthur.

In this morning's issue of the New York Times there appears a very unusual statement from the pen of General MacArthur. I desire to trespass on the time of the Senate long enough to read it:

MAC ARTHUR VISIONS AIR WAR ON JAPAN—REJECTING ISLAND-TO-ISLAND HOPPING, HE LOOKS TO GREAT BLOWS BY AIR-BORNE ARMY

AT UNITED NATIONS HEADQUARTERS, AUSTRALIA, January 24.—Gen. Douglas MacArthur said tonight that widespread use of air power both offensively and defensively was the "outstanding military lesson" learned in the victorious Allied campaign in Papua and that it pointed the way to the ultimate defeat of Japan.

Air power, effectively combined with ground forces and sea power, opens the way, he said in a written statement, to "swift massive strokes" rather than the dilatory island-to-island advance that some have deemed necessary to defeat Japan.

In one of his infrequent comments on military operations since he left the Philippines to become supreme Allied commander in the southwest Pacific last March, General MacArthur said that in the New Guinea offensive a "new form of campaign" in which planes played the major part was tested and found successful.

The statement contained General MacArthur's first evaluation of the just-completed Papuan campaign in which a Japanese army of 15,000 was annihilated by American and Australian troops. It came at a time when the success in New Guinea had created widely divergent interpretations, ranging from undue jubilation to equally undue pessimism about the smallness of Allied gains and the discouragingly long road ahead.

General MacArthur indicated, however, that the day would come when air and ground forces, with proper naval support, would point the way to victory through new and broadened strategic and tactical conceptions.

His complete statement follows:

"The destruction of the remnants of the enemy forces in the Sanananda area concludes the Papuan campaign. The (Lt. Gen. Tomatore) Horii army has been annihilated. The outstanding military lesson of this campaign was the continuous calculated application of air power, inherent in the potentialities of every component of the air forces, employed in the most intimate tactical and logistical union with ground troops. The effect of this modern instrumentality was sharply accentuated by the geographic limitations of this theater.

"For months on end air transport, with constant fighter coverage, moved complete infantry regiments and artillery battalions across the almost impenetrable mountains and jungles of Papua and the reaches of the sea; transported field hospitals and other base installations of the front; supplied the troops and evacuated casualties. For hundreds of miles bombers provided all-around reconnaissance, protected the coast from hostile naval intervention, and blasted the way for the infantry as it drove forward. A new form of campaign was tested which points the way to the ultimate defeat of the enemy in the Pacific.

"The offensive and defensive power of the air and the adaptability, range, and capacity of its transport in an effective combination with ground forces represent tactical and strategical elements of a broadened conception of warfare that will permit the application of offensive power in swift, massive strokes rather than the dilatory and costly island-to-island advance that some have assumed to be necessary in a theater where the enemy's far-flung strongholds are dispersed throughout a vast expanse of archipelagoes. Air forces and ground forces were welded together in Papua, and when in sufficient strength with proper naval support, their indissoluble union points the way to victory through new and broadened strategic and tactical conceptions."

Mr. President, I hope that every Senator will have an opportunity to read this statement carefully when it is printed in the RECORD. It is the fervent hope of the Senator now speaking that this important lesson, which appears to have been learned under most difficult and harrowing conditions in this campaign, will be utilized in the further conduct of our operations.

It is likewise the fervent hope of the Senator now speaking, who acknowledges himself to be utterly a layman in matters involving land and naval operations, that nothing will ever be permitted to prevent the delivery of the supplies, the instrumentalities, and the manpower necessary to maintain and continue the glorious achievements which have begun in the Southwest Pacific.

ORDER DISPENSING WITH CALL OF THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded. The calendar, under rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

UTILIZATION OF MANPOWER

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, last week I submitted a resolution (S. Res. 85) relating to the investigation of manpower, and some discussion arose at that time as to the appropriate committee to which the resolution should be referred. After consulting with other Senators, I have decided to withdraw the resolution which I submitted.

In this connection I wish to state that the Committee on Appropriations held a meeting this morning—a well-attended meeting—and, after full discussion of the subject, it adopted the following motion:

> The chairman of the committee is authorized to appoint a subcommittee to consider the subject of the best division and distribution of our Nation's manpower in order to secure the speediest and most successful conduct and conclusion of the war, as such subject is related to appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution (S. Res. 85) will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No, Mr. President; I desire to have the resolution withdrawn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, on the advice of the Parliamentarian, that the procedure of withdrawing measures is not followed by the Senate; but indefinite postponement has the same effect.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well; either way. Let that be done.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is the resolution to which the Senator refers the one to the consideration of which I objected a few days ago, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that it is the same resolution.

Mr. McNARY. And what has just occurred is the further disposition of it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. McNARY. I understand that the desire is to have the resolution indefinitely postponed; is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I merely want to call the attention of the Senate to the last phrase of the motion before the Appropriations Committee to which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] referred:

> As such subject is related to appropriations.

I want it distinctly understood that the Appropriations Committee is not invading the jurisdiction of any other committee at all and is not substituting itself for any other committee, but is investigating the matter solely as it relates to appropriations, and so that it can intelligently act on the appropriations.

REFERENCE OF MEASURES TO COMMITTEES

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is an appropriate time to call the attention of the Chair and of the Senate to the action unanimously taken a few days ago by the steering committee of the majority with reference to the introduction and reference to committees of bills and resolutions.

While the rules of the Senate are not so definite with regard to the appropriate reference of bills and resolutions as are the rules of the House of Representatives, there has grown up, through long practice, in addition to the rules and the precedents, a fairly clear line of demarcation as to the jurisdiction over proposed legislation.

A few years ago the then Vice President announced from the chair—although he did not make a final ruling on the question—that he would refer any bill or resolution introduced by any Senator to the committee designated on the bill by its author. I do not know whether that was a whimsical ruling or announcement, induced perhaps by a feeling of disgust at the indefiniteness of the Senate rules on many subjects. Nevertheless, that announcement was made from the chair. I protested at the time against even the announcement because I did not think it was in compliance with the rules of the Senate, and under such a ruling I could introduce a bill on the tariff and have it referred to the Committee on the Library, and any other Senator could introduce a bill on any subject, mark on the back of the bill the committee to which he wanted it referred, and, according to that announcement, the Vice President or the Presiding Officer, whoever he might be, would send it to the committee thus designated.

Such a procedure is not and never has been in accordance with the rules and practice of the Senate. Having that in mind, the steering committee of the majority a few days ago unanimously instructed me to call the Chair's attention to the rules of the Senate and the propriety of the reference of bills to committees having jurisdiction of the subject matter. I am doing that now, so that the Vice President may know how the steering committee feels, and, I think, how the Senate feels, as to the propriety of referring bills to committees that have jurisdiction over the subject matter, instead of simply having a Senator write on the bill the committee to which he desires it to go, regardless of the rules and practices of the Senate.

I make that announcement not only for the Vice President's benefit but also for the benefit of any Senator who may be called to the chair by the Vice President to preside at the time when bills are introduced. Any other practice makes for chaos and confusion.

From long experience over the years, the committees of the Senate have a fairly good idea as to what their jurisdiction is, and the rules require the Vice President, with the advice of the Parliamentarian, of course, to pass upon that subject. The matter seems to me to be of sufficient importance, and the steering committee felt it to be of sufficient importance to take action on it. The steering committee took action unanimously, and I am sure that all Senators will agree the practice recommended by the steering committee is the only practice that will preserve order in the consideration of bills, and not take away from committees that have long had jurisdiction over particular subject matter opportunity to consider them simply because a Senator would prefer that his bill go to some other committee.

I hope that the long-standing practice and rules of the Senate on that subject will hereafter be preserved.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have always insisted on a strict reference of bills. The question of jurisdiction is sometimes a difficult one, but its application should always be preserved.

The practice has grown up, as stated by the very distinguished leader of the majority of the Senate, of having the Senator who introduces a bill make his own reference of it. Of course, the rule is that the reference shall be made to the appropriate committee by the Vice President or the occupant of the chair, whoever he may be.

There is a remedy, Mr. President, in the hands of the various Senators. If a Senator in any way demurs to the reference by the Vice President or the occupant of the chair he may instantly appeal from his decision and have the matter come ultimately to the decision of the Senate. That preserves all his rights and also makes final the action of the Senate.

I hope that the rule will be followed in the future. Let me say, Mr. President, without criticism, that I think when a bill is introduced, the President of the Senate, or the Senator who occupies the chair in the absence of the President of the Senate should state at once the committee to which the bill is to be referred, so that opportunity may be given to the author of the bill to appeal at that time from the decision of the Chair, and let the question be decided by a vote of the Senate. That would be fair to the Senator who introduced the measure; it would be considerate of the occupant of the chair, and would work for fairness all down the line.

With that word, I want to say that I concur in the remarks of the able Senator from Kentucky.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is most happy to have the assistance of the majority and minority leaders in upsetting the temporary precedent to which reference has been made, but in view of the haste with which bills are introduced, the Chair would suggest that the Parliamentarian of the Senate be given opportunity to glance at bills in advance. In fact, he generally is given such opportunity but the Chair would ask that it be done uniformly.

Mr. BARKLEY. That matter is always in the control of the Chair. If the Chair has any doubt about the committee to which a bill should be referred, of course, he has the long experience of the Parliamentarian at his disposal, and if his advice does not satisfy the Chair, I am sure the minority leader and I will be glad to supplement it in any way we can.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Even the Parliamentarian may at times be unable to decide in a split second, when the matter in question is a debatable one.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Chair.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I am gratified at the action of the two leaders of this body in agreeing that hereafter no Senator will have the right to send a bill he introduces to any committee to which he sees fit to have it referred, but that power and discretion will be left to the Presiding Officer, who will make the decision.

In the 8 years I have been a Member of the Senate I have noticed that on many occasions bills have been sent to committees which from a parliamentary or governmental standpoint did not have jurisdiction of the subject matter of the bills, and I wish to ask that in the future the Presiding Officer, in making reference of measures, not be governed by what has been the custom. A thing which is inherently wrong in the beginning cannot be made right by its continuance. I know of some proposals which have been sent to the wrong committees for some time, which should be diverted to the proper committees, even though the custom has been different heretofore.

CONSOLIDATIONS AND MERGERS OF DOMESTIC TELEGRAPH CARRIERS

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 158.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 158) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire if the bill the consideration of which has been moved by the able Senator from Arizona was before the Senate during the last days of the last session of Congress?

Mr. McFARLAND. It was. The bill was passed by the Senate during the last session of Congress, but did not come to a vote in the other House.

Mr. McNARY. Has there been any change in the substance of the bill?

Mr. McFARLAND. There has been only one clarifying change.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I understand the motion is to take up the bill at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is. The motion is not debatable.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. McFARLAND].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 158) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, Senate bill 158 is the outgrowth of a study of the subject made by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate under Resolution 95 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, which resolution was continued in the Seventy-seventh Congress. The Committee on Interstate Commerce made its report on the 28th of October, 1941.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, after a most careful consideration of the subject, recommended a merger of domestic American telegraph carriers and of international American telegraph carriers. One of the reasons for the proposed merger, as stated in the report, is as follows:

> These recommendations were based upon the findings of the committee, one of the most urgent of which was the finding that the Postal Telegraph Co.—third largest carrier—was in imminent financial danger. It was found that by September 1, 1941, less than $750,000 remained of a $5,000,000 working-capital loan made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Since that time the Postal Telegraph Co. has borrowed an additional one and a half million from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which sum, we are informed, is largely used up at the present time. While the Western Union Telegraph Co., the largest land-line carrier, is presently operating at a profit, it has experienced great losses in recent years. Like the Postal, it has lost a large portion of its revenue to the Government-subsidized air mail, to the telegraph facilities of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and the radio point-to-point communication facilities. It also has a substantial debt structure, which may prove dangerous to it in the event another major business depression occurs.

I should like to state that since the time that report was submitted the debt to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by the Postal Telegraph Co. has increased to $9,000,000.

Mr. President, after the report of the Interstate Commerce Committee, on the 28th day of October 1942, I was asked to introduce a bill which would embody the recommendations made by the committee. I, in turn, asked the able Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] who is well informed on this subject to join with me in the introduction of the proposed legislation. The Senator from Maine and I called in representatives of the various interested parties, including the communication companies, and representatives of the various labor organizations, and asked their advice as to what they thought should be contained in the proposed legislation.

After we had heard all their recommendations, and after a careful study of the report, we jointly introduced Senate bill 2445. After the introduction of the bill, a subcommittee was appointed, of which I was made chairman. The other members of the subcommittee, appointed to consider the proposed legislation, were the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL], the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

Most careful consideration was given the proposed legislation, and at that time we heard witnesses from the various departments, Mr. Jones of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the War Department, the Navy Department, the Federal Communications Commission, and the representatives of the companies, as well as representatives of labor.

Because of the objection made by the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Knox, the international field was eliminated from the bill, and the committee recommended the enactment of Senate bill 2598. That bill was passed at the last session of the Congress. I understand that the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the House of Representatives favorably reported the bill for passage but amended it by including the international field. However, owing to the absence of a quorum, the proposal never came to a vote in the House of Representatives.

Immediately on the convening of the Seventy-eighth Congress the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] and I reintroduced the bill, which is now Senate bill 158, and which is the same as Senate bill 2598 of the last Congress, which passed the Senate except for one clarifying amendment, on page 6, paragraph 4, where the words "and will be in accordance with the existing contractual rights of the carriers" were added. That provision merely makes the section conform to the other sections of the bill.

I wish to state, Mr. President, that the passage of the proposed legislation has become even more important since the entry of the United States into the war. It is important that we maintain all the communications facilities available to us at this time.

I wish to read briefly the recommendation of General Stoner, representing the War Department. He appeared before the committee in its hearing on Senate bill 2445 and gave the following testimony:

> An illustration of the saving in important critical equipment and matériel may be had by referring to a recent report published by the Defense Communications Board prepared for publication by the Federal Communications Commission, in which it was stated that there are approximately 13,431 teletype printers in use in business offices. The Postal has approximately 6,550 of these printers. It is assumed that approximately 50 percent of those installations are caused by reason of competitive conditions. It is, therefore, safe to assume that approximately 5,000 of those printers might be diverted to national defense communication purposes in event of consolidation.
> The Postal also has 747 branch offices. Assuming that 500 of those branch offices could be abandoned, it would mean an additional 1,200 printers would be released for such other use as might be made of them.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator's presentation, but I should like to ask him a question, if I may.

Mr. McFARLAND. I gladly yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. Of course, I have had no time to read the bill, but I notice in subsection (a) of section 222 the following provision:

> It shall be lawful, upon application and approval by the Commission, as hereinafter provided, for domestic telegraph carriers to consolidate or merge their properties, or any part thereof.

I notice that further on the measure contains a definition of a domestic telegraph carrier. If a domestic telegraph carrier has, as part of its property, a telephone system or a radio system, or some additional system other than a telegraph system, is it not a fact that the bill would authorize the company to merge its properties, or any part of them, with another company, and would not that permit it to bring into the merger its entire communications system?

Mr. McFARLAND. I may say to the Senator from Iowa that it is the intention to allow domestic telegraph carriers, as defined, to merge and they may consolidate their properties, but before they can abandon any part of their system they must obtain permission from the Federal Communications System to do so.

Mr. GILLETTE. Then it is the intention to allow them, if they also control telephone systems and radio systems and other means of communication, to merge their entire communication systems?

Mr. McFARLAND. No; it is not intended to allow telegraph systems to merge with telephone systems.

Mr. GILLETTE. Even though a telegraph carrier has a telephone system as a part of its property, and that the measure provides that all the company's properties may be brought into the merger, yet the Senator thinks the company would not be permitted to bring its telephone ownership or radio ownership into the merger?

Mr. McFARLAND. The intention was to include point-to-point radio communications. That was thought to be necessary in order to put the domestic telegraph carriers upon a sound basis. The proposed legislation is only permissive in character. I will explain the bill a little more in detail later. It also makes it permissible for companies to merge the teletype part of the system.

Mr. GILLETTE. Undoubtedly the Senator will explain the measure more fully as he proceeds.

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes.

Mr. GILLETTE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I merely desire to ask a question for information. We are being told on all sides to go easy with our communications systems these days because they are being overworked. I notice the Senator from Arizona said that if the merger were completed it would enable the company in question to do away with a large amount of the equipment which it now has. I was wondering if doing away with the teletype machines would have any effect at all on the ability of the one remaining company to handle the entire amount of business, if it is true that the companies are already overworked.

Mr. McFARLAND. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that the companies would not be permitted to abandon any part of their equipment which the Federal Communications Commission deemed necessary to the war effort, and necessary efficiently to carry on the war and to maintain our communications system. I had not completed reading the testimony of General Stoner, which pointed out that there are duplications of lines, duplications of offices, and duplications of work, which could be eliminated, and would result in a saving.

Mr. AIKEN. Perhaps the Senator from Arizona will explain that matter as he goes along.

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator referred to the saving of material which would result by a combination. Of course, the most serious problem we have to face today is that of manpower. Does the bill propose to provide some solution of the manpower problem by cutting down the number of employees needed in the communications service?

Mr. McFARLAND. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that it was the hope that some of the persons employed in the communications service would go into other lines of work which might be attractive. In the bill protection is afforded labor, as I will explain later. However, there is a rapid turn-over of labor at present among the domestic communications services, and there is a provision for discharge for those employed after March 1, 1941, and those not needed would be made available for other private industries and for war industries.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Without knowing much about it, it seems to me rather extraordinary that at a time when we need more manpower, and when we are proposing to concentrate many other industries, such as sugar refineries, which it is proposed to concentrate into a few refineries, in order to provide manpower, we should in this proposed combination provide a soft job for persons who are not needed in the work at all. It seems to me the theory of the bill conflicts with everything the War Production Board is doing today, so far as labor is concerned, and everything that is being proposed for other industries. In other industries concentration which is not wanted is being forced for the purpose of releasing manpower and putting the manpower to work in war industries. How can the Senator reconcile the labor provision in this bill with the present program of the War Production Board in other fields?

Mr. McFARLAND. I may answer the Senator from Ohio by quoting from the testimony of Commissioner Durr before the committee. He said:

> Western Union and Postal adult turnover rates show that about 7,250 employees voluntarily quit their jobs and that another 570 were discharged for cause. It will also be observed that the number of military separations is extremely small, amounting only to 179 in the case of Postal and 544 in the case of Western Union land lines.

The total separations from the two companies for the year 1941 was 7,820. There are approximately 30,000 adult employees in the Western Union and some nine or ten thousand in Postal. In 1 year there was a turn-over of 7,820. Before the proposed legislation will become law or become effective, or at least before a merger can be effected, 2 years will elapse, which would make available over the same percentage, 15,640 employees. The committee felt, and I personally feel, that it is very important to protect in his job a man who has spent some 30 years in this particular line of work and who has been trained for that work alone. One man testified that he had been an employee of the Postal Telegraph Co. for 40 years. I consider the labor provisions of the bill very important to the men who are working in the telegraph industry.

Mr. President, I will admit that the labor provisions of the bill are more favorable than any contained in any past legislation, but they are made possible by the rapid turn-over during this war, and the enactment of the proposed legislation at this time will make it possible to protect men who have spent years in learning a profession. That is something which could not be done in ordinary times.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Is the Senator familiar with the fact that the War Production Board shut down gold mines and threw out of work employees who had been engaged in the gold-mining industry for years, in order to force them into some other industry, such as the copper-mining industry, which was essential for war production? Can the Senator reconcile the principle of the bill with the present policy of the administration with respect to the field of telephone and telegraph communications?

Mr. McFARLAND. I can reconcile it in this way, that the labor provisions are made possible by the very rapid turnover in the communications field. There is no protection for the new employees. There will be plenty of need in the merged company for the employment of the old employees.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. The able Senator from Arizona has referred to a turn-over of about 7,000 employees in 1 year. That number separated themselves from the company, but that did not represent a reduction in the number of employees because they were replaced by others.

Mr. McFARLAND. That is correct. There is no protection for the new employees. That is the reason why it is possible at this time to afford protection to the old employees who know nothing else but communications work.

I thank the Senator for his suggestion.

Mr. President, I desire to complete the reading of the statement of General Stoner in this connection:

> I might also refer to the item of secondary copper. The Postal and Western Union Telegraph Cos. at the present time have parallel circuits along railroad rights-of-way and along highways, running side by side, where the full capacity of both services is not needed and where recovery might be made by doing away with one of the companies' leads, and in so doing there also would be recovery of secondary copper, which is a critical material at the present time.
> We feel that the bill you have under consideration amply provides for the Secretary of War being a party in licensing proceedings in event of any consolidation, thereby affording him the fullest opportunity to protect the rights and interests of the War Department.

I will give a brief summary of the provisions contained in the bill. I read from the report of the committee:

> Section 1 of the bill provides for the amendment of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, by the addition of a new section, section 222. Subsection (a) thereof makes lawful, after application to and approval by the Federal Communications Commission, the consolidation or merger of domestic telegraph carriers.
>
> Subsection (b) requires the parties to a proposed merger or consolidation to submit application and the Commission to hold public hearings thereon, giving notice of hearing and opportunity to be heard to the Governors of each State in which property to be merged is situated, to the Attorney General, the Secretaries of War, Navy, and State Departments, and representatives of employees, and permits the Commission to enter an order approving merger if certain conditions are met.
>
> Subsection (c) permits the merged or consolidated telegraph carrier to take over the domestic telegraph facilities of any carrier. Paragraph (2) provides for the divestment by the merged or consolidated domestic telegraph carrier of any international telegraph business it may carry on.
>
> Subsection (d) prohibits approval of any consolidation or merger which would have more than one-fifth capital-stock ownership by aliens, or representatives of aliens, or by foreign governments, or representatives of such governments.
>
> Subsection (e) provides that the merged or consolidated telegraph carrier shall work out a formula for exchange of traffic with international telegraph carriers under certain equitable standards, and permits the Commission to prescribe such a formula only after the telegraph carriers fail to agree. Paragraph (2) provides an identical formula for the exchange of traffic with telegraph carriers in contiguous foreign countries (Canada, Newfoundland, and Mexico) whose telegraph traffic is regarded as domestic rather than international telegraph traffic. Paragraph (3) provides that for the purpose of this subsection, domestic telegraph operations of an international telegraph carrier shall be considered a domestic carrier, and similarly, international telegraph operations of a domestic carrier shall be considered an international telegraph carrier. Paragraph (4) permits the Commission, upon complaint or on its own motion, to prescribe a telegraphic traffic interchange formula if, at any time, it finds that the formula followed is not equitable or in the public interest.
> Subsection (f) provides that all employees of any carrier which becomes a party to consolidation or merger, who were employed on March 1, 1941, shall have full job protection at the compensation and rate of pay they received on the date of the approval of the consolidation or merger, with the added proviso that no employee may be assigned to work inconsistent with his training and experience. Paragraph (2) provides that if any employee who is not covered by paragraph (1) is discharged as a result of consolidation or merger, he shall receive severance pay equal to 4 weeks' pay multiplied by the number of years he was employed by any carrier which was a party to consolidation or merger; and no employee, regardless of the tenure of his employment, is to receive less than 4 weeks' pay as a severance allowance. Paragraph (3) requires that for 5 years following merger or consolidation, employees of any carrier which was a party to merger or consolidation shall have a preferential hiring status with the merged telegraph carrier for such positions as he is qualified to fill. Paragraph (4) provides for payment of traveling expenses, continuance of salary, and a bonus equal to 2 months' pay for any employee transferred from one community to another as a result of consolidation or merger. Paragraph (5) provides against impairment of any pension right or any other health, insurance, or death benefit as a result of merger or consolidation. Paragraph (6) protects the jobs of those employees who have entered or shall enter the military service since August 27, 1940. Paragraph (7) protects employees against discharge, or reduction in earnings, or furlough for 5 years after the consolidation or merger, or for 6 months before in anticipation of consolidation or merger. Paragraph (8) is the usual provision permitting discharge for incompetency or similar cause. Paragraph (9) protects employees' rights now guaranteed by any collective-bargaining agreements until such agreements are terminated, and extends to employees the remedies provided by the National Labor Relations Act. Paragraph (10) exempts employees who are paid more than $5,000 per annum from the provisions of the subsections.
> Subsection (g) defines the terms used in the bill.
> Section 2 provides for the amendment of section 214 (a) of the Communications Act, making certain technical clarifying changes in the present act to conform with the new bill. Section 3, section 4, and section 5 make similar technical changes in sections 214 (b), 214 (c), and 214 (d), respectively, of the present act.
> Section 6 provides for amendment of section 5266 of the Revised Statutes to give priority of transit for Government telegrams and permits the elimination of the present preferential rate granted for carriage of Government messages.
> Section 7 is the usual separability clause.
> The Committee on Interstate Commerce desire to call specific attention to the labor-protection provisions of the bill S. 2598. The committee believe that they have recommended in this legislation the greatest degree of labor-protection requirements yet proposed in any legislation. The committee believe that if this legislation is enacted promptly, and if the carriers do not delay taking action under its terms, these labor-protection requirements will work no hardship on the consolidated or merged carrier.

Mr. President, as I have stated, the immediate enactment of the pending legislation has become more important because of our participation in the present World War. I repeat that we have provided in the bill all possible protection to labor, made possible by the rapid turnover in the telegraph industry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and is open to amendment.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question. Why does he feel that it is important and necessary under the terms of the pending bill to grant to labor further extensions in respect to the guaranty of employment than have been provided under the terms of any other bill previously enacted? How can we or how can anyone in industry foresee what industry will be able to do 5 years from today? Let me say to the Senator from Arizona that I recognize the importance of the bill. I agree with him as to the importance of such an authorization as that which the bill provides. I realize that what the bill would accomplish is very important to the war effort; but I cannot see why at this time it is necessary to guarantee to anyone 5 years' employment at compensation not less than that which he received at the time of the merger, when no one can foresee what is in front of us for a 5-year period.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from New Jersey let me state my opinion that the 5-year period is necessary for the reason that in order to have a merger one of the companies must buy or take over the other, and in my judgment that necessarily means—I believe there can be no question about it—that the Western Union Co. will have to buy the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. It would be most natural unless protection were afforded by the bill for the Western Union to favor their own employees. At the end of 5 years a Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. employee would by that time have become a part of the merged companies, and would have the same standing as that had by any other employee of the company. For that reason I think the provision referred to is particularly necessary. Even though a man had been employed only 3 months by the Western Union Co., or whatever company might take over the merged companies, it would be the natural thing for the company to favor him. The company would be familiar with the particular employee's efforts; it would be familiar with his work; and it might prefer him rather than a man who had been in the employ of the Postal Telegraph Co. for 15 or 20 years. Under such circumstances, it might discharge a man who had spent years in learning the industry.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Would not that purpose be accomplished by providing a period of 2 years, instead of 5?

Mr. McFARLAND. The committee gave most careful consideration to the question of what the specified number of years should be. After careful consideration we thought that a 5-year period would be the fairest to place in the bill. Of course, the determination as to the particular period of years to be provided must necessarily be arbitrary. The Western Union Co. recommended this be reduced to 4 years; some of the labor organizations recommended 7 years, and some of them recommended 8 years. After careful consideration the committee felt that 5 years was a fair period of time to assure adequate protection.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator why the period during which employment is to be guaranteed should be different in this case than in the case of the Railway Merger Act? Why should the pending measure provide a further extension of protection as to compensation? Mind you—and I should like to have my position made of record—I am very definitely in favor of providing every protection we can give to labor.

I believe that private enterprise itself should recognize the long-time service about which the Senator has spoken. I believe it is coming more and more to a recognition of it. However, I do not believe—and I feel very strongly on this point—that the Government itself can foresee what is ahead of it for 5 years; and certainly the Government cannot see what is ahead of private industry for 5 years. The only difference between the position of the Senator from Arizona on the bill and my position is that I would limit the period of years to be provided in the pending bill to the same number provided in the Carrier Merger Act; and I should like to be so recorded.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, we have come a long way since the enactment of legislation on the merger of railroads. The protections proposed to be afforded labor under the terms of the pending bill are made possible by the rapid change in personnel, as I have already pointed out. I do not think that the company will have any difficulty at all in carrying out the labor provisions of the bill, in view of the fact that at the present time there is a turn-over of some 7,800 persons a year; and at that rate in 2 years there would be a turn-over of about 15,000 persons, out of a total of about 40,000, adult employees. I do not think there will be any difficulty at all in the matter. However, I feel strongly that a man who has spent years in learning a profession should be protected. I think that the conditions of the times are altogether different from those which existed when the railroad merger legislation was enacted, and I believe that from year to year it has become more difficult for a man to change from one profession to another.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona for further information. I desire to have the information in order to be able to make up my mind how to vote on the bill. Does the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. serve a considerable area that is not served by the Western Union Co.?

Mr. McFARLAND. It serves some territory that is not served by the Western Union Co. I should not be prepared to state offhand just how much. There is duplication of some 13,000 miles of line along the railroads alone; as to how much of other lines is a duplication is somewhat a technical question.

Can the Senator from Maine more fully answer that question?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I did not hear the question asked of the Senator from Arizona; but if the Senator from Arizona cannot answer it I doubt that I can.

Mr. McFARLAND. The Senator from Vermont asked me to what extent the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. served territory not served by the Western Union Co.

Mr. WHITE. Of course, there is a tremendous overlapping, and that is one of the difficulties of the situation; because in many communities scattered throughout the United States there is no real need for the maintenance of service by two telegraph companies.

Mr. McFARLAND. That was not the question asked by the Senator. He asked to what extent the Postal Telegraph Co. serves territory not served by the Western Unio Co.

Mr. WHITE. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. AIKEN. The area served by the Postal Telegraph Co., not served by the Western Union Co., would not be very large; would it?

Mr. McFARLAND. No; it would not be very large.

Mr. AIKEN. Can the Senator tell us the approximate value of the Postal Telegraph system?

Mr. McFARLAND. Let me say to the Senator from Vermont that his question is a very difficult one for me to answer. I would answer it by saying that Mr. Jones, of the R. F. C., stated that he had loaned to the Postal Telegraph system the limit that he thought he could loan it, namely $9,000,000. How much more it would be worth would be only an estimate; but the Postal Telegraph Co. is incurring deficits at the rate of approximately $300,000 a month; and it is very evident that, unless there is a merger, as a going concern it will not be worth anything at all. Of course, its properties are worth something.

Mr. AIKEN. How can the company be losing $300,000 a month, in view of the fact that we are given to understand that our communications systems are tremendously overworked—so much so that we are asked not to send messages over them except when absolutely necessary. There must be some reason why the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. is losing $300,000 a month. Was that reason developed before the committee?

Mr. McFARLAND. The majority of the telegraph business is carried on by the Western Union Co.; and the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. simply does not have enough business, even under present conditions, to make it financially sound. The Western Union Co. is getting along fairly well under present circumstances; but I should say to the Senator from Vermont that, because of the competition of the subsidized air-mail lines and the competition of the telephone companies, both the telegraph companies are finding it difficult to exist. I believe it is very important that the telegraph method of communication be saved. There still will be ample competition after a merger of the telegraph companies.

Mr. AIKEN. Of course, the Postal Telegraph Co. has a capital structure. Does the Senator from Arizona know what the amount of the capitalization of the company is?

Mr. McFARLAND. I do not know offhand, I will give it later.

Mr. AIKEN. That was not brought out before the committee? I think that would have some bearing on the matter. We should know how large a company we were merging.

Mr. McFARLAND. Regardless of what the capital structure is, I can say to the Senator definitely that the Postal Co. now owes to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation $9,000,000. It does not make any difference what they claim their properties are worth, unless they are a going concern, unless they can make money, they are not worth anything at all as a continuing business, but from a merging standpoint, they are worth some money.

Mr. AIKEN. Does the Senator know the amount of bonds of the Postal Telegraph Co. outstanding?

Mr. McFARLAND. Their indebtedness is not in the form of bonds, as I understand. It is in the form of a loan by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. AIKEN. Do they not owe any money besides what they owe to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which I understand is $9,000,000.

Mr. McFARLAND. I think that is about the extent of their indebtedness.

Mr. AIKEN. Can the Senator tell us how it is financed? Suppose the company fails; who will lose?

Mr. McFARLAND. The public will lose, and the employees will lose; everyone will lose, if the company fails.

Mr. AIKEN. What would the public lose? It would lose the duplication of services if the company failed, but as I understand, if the company failed, it would go out of business or be purchased in the usual course of events. I wondered what the public would gain by the proposed merger.

Mr. McFARLAND. The public would gain a continuance of the lines which were deemed necessary to handle the present communications business. It is very important that we continue that part of it, which is necessary to our communications system. Those of the public who have money invested in the Postal system would gain, but I do not know how much they would gain by a merger. They would primarily gain by not having a group of people put out of employment in the change over of some properties during the midst of a war. It is very necessary at this time that this be done in a different way, rather than for the Postal to fail. There are facilities which are not made available by the Western Union. There are lines which are necessary. Many of the lines should be continued. In my opinion the public has everything to gain by the proposed merger legislation.

Mr. AIKEN. The Government is very free in maintaining with its cash uneconomical investments, that is, normally uneconomic ones which are considered necessary during wartime. Does the Senator believe that the Federal Government would allow these lines to fall into disuse merely because the company was losing $300,000 a month? I still do not see how they could be losing such an amount, if what we are told about the communications system is true.

Mr. McFARLAND. The fact remains that they are losing the money, and I do not believe we can allow them to go out of existence. I do not believe the Senator from Maine would want to see our Government continue to subsidize any company, if the work could be carried on without subsidization. I admit that we are doing much financing of various companies and industries during the war, which is necessary; but personally I feel that we should do just as little of it as possible. I do not believe in any more subsidizing than we absolutely have to have to enable us to win the war. I personally do not feel that the fact that we are subsidizing other industries is any reason why we should continue to subsidize one which it is very evident will have to be subsidized forever, or go out of existence. We need to save all the money we can, and I do not think there is any question that there will be a merger under the proposed legislation and that the Government would be saved the amount of money I have stated.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish briefly to express my general views about the proposed communications legislation and to express the hope that it may have the approval of the Senate.

We have in our country today various media of communication. We have our air mail, we have our telephones, we have our telegraphs, we have radio, all in competition one with the other. In the face of this competition, over late years the Postal Co. has fallen upon unhappy days. It has undergone financial reorganization, but notwithstanding such financial readjustment of its affairs, the Postal has been compelled again and again, and in constantly increasing degree, to call upon the Federal Government for assistance, until today that company is indebted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in a total of approximately $9,000,000. The subcommittee which gave consideration to this problem were definitely warned that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had reached the end of its liberality to this corporation.

What were the alternatives, then, that we faced as a committee? It seemed to me perfectly clear that one of two things was bound to happen: Either the Postal Telegraph Co. must seek bankruptcy and go out of business, or the Federal Government would have to take the company over.

What would be the result of either of those courses? If the Postal Co. fades from the communications picture through bankruptcy, it leaves alone in the domestic telegraph field the Western Union Co., and through the failure of the Postal Co., through its disappearance as a competitor, there will have been made a direct contribution to monopoly in the telegraph business within this country.

Mr. TAFT. Is not that just the Senator's purpose in urging the pending bill, to create a monopoly?

Mr. WHITE. Yes——

Mr. TAFT. What is the difference?

Mr. WHITE. But by a different rule and under a different control, if it results in the way I have suggested.

The other possibility is that the Government itself will take over the Postal. It has $9,000,000 already invested in the company and its affairs. If it took over Postal, then we would see the Government of the United States in the telegraph business, probably operating through the Federal Communications Commission. Then we would find the Western Union faced by governmental competition in the domestic telegraph field. Then we would find our air mail in competition with the Government in the field of communications here in the United States. Then radio would face competition from a governmentally owned and operated agency of communication. Then it might well be that the telephone system of this country would find itself in competition with a governmental agency.

Mr. President, there are some provisions of the bill which I should like to change, but the alternative of merger under the terms of the pending bill is as nothing, so far as I am concerned, compared with what I think the evils would be which would follow if we did not take the proposed step.

I think that if the Government of the United States were to take over the Postal Telegraph Co. at this time, and if it were to operate that company at this time and in the future, the day would not be far distant when the Government of the United States would be embarked in the field of communications, and I think it would inevitably follow that it would in time operate not only in the telegraph field, but would reach out into the field of radio and would invade the field of the telephone, and that to me would be a greater evil than any evil which inheres by any possibility in the proposed legislation.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. The Postal Telegraph Co. now, as I understand, is showing a deficit and has been showing a deficit for the last 2 years.

Mr. WHITE. The Postal Telegraph Co. has been showing continuing deficits over a period of years.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. Failure to support the proposed legislation would force the Government, in order to protect its own loan, to go into the telegraph business, would it not? And should it not be said to those who violently disagree with the idea of the Government being in business that this is one opportunity to keep the Government from going into business?

Mr. WHITE. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky.

Some fear has been expressed with respect to the labor provisions contained in the bill. If I had been in complete control of the situation I think I would not have gone to the extent proposed by the pending bill.

The fact is that we have written into the bill the most liberal provision in behalf of labor found in any law on the statute books of the United States today. But we need not be too fearful about that, for I call to the Senate's mind that the bill proposes no mandatory legislation, but only permissive legislation, and if the Western Union, or a merged company, reached the conclusion that it could survive under the labor provisions contained in the bill, but that under the provisions of the bill it would be uneconomic and inefficient for it to merge, then there simply would not be any merger, and there would be no harm done. It seems to me we are worrying about something which is wholly within the control of the communications companies involved, and we can safely leave to them the determination of whether under the terms of the bill they can carry on their services with profit to themselves and with benefit to the public of the United States.

Mr. President, I do not undertake to go into the details of the bill. These are the over-all considerations which prompt me to favor the measure and to express the hope that it will have the support of the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Would the Senator object to an amendment reducing the period from 5 years to 2 years, and if so, why?

Mr. WHITE. I should vote against such an amendment. After all, as the Senator from Arizona [Mr. McFARLAND] has said, the question of the precise time of guaranty was a matter of much difference of opinion. Some would have been glad if there had been no guaranty at all. Some wanted to extend the period beyond the time named in the bill. I am in favor of the provision contained in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I am still desirous of obtaining information. Perhaps the Senator from Maine can tell us about the capital structure of the Postal Telegraph Co. How much money is involved? What is the capital structure of the company?

Mr. WHITE. I have a very definite recollection that that was covered in the evidence in the hearings before the full committee and before the two subcommittees which were appointed. Of course, the capital structure of the Postal Telegraph Co. has undergone reorganization and readjustment, and I have to admit that I do not have in my mind at this time what the figure is.

Mr. AIKEN. I think the Senate ought to know that.

Mr. WHITE. So far as I am concerned, the capital structure makes very little difference to me. We know what the operating results have been over the term of years, and we know that a continuation of them spells disaster and the disappearance of the Postal Telegraph Co.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to know to whom the company is indebted besides the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. WHITE. The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has just handed me some figures. This is a consolidated balance sheet of the Postal Telegraph Co. It shows assets as of December 31, 1941, in the grand total of $49,661,000. What there is outstanding in the way of securities I do not know. I have not had a chance to look at this sheet; but if I may, I will turn over the copy of the hearings handed me by the junior Senator from Ohio to the Senator from Vermont. I think the answer to what he has in mind will appear on the open page—page 10 of the committee hearings.

Mr. AIKEN. I thought the Senator from Maine would be more familiar with the figures, and that he could tell the Senate about them. There are other Senators besides myself, I am sure, who would like to know what the figures are. I should like to know if the Postal Telegraph Co. ever did pay dividends.

Mr. WHITE. I think the Postal Telegraph Co. for a while paid dividends on its preferred stock, but never having owned any, I do not know.

Mr. AIKEN. I am sorry if I appeared to be too inquisitive, I had hoped to find out something about the financial structure of the Postal Telegraph Co.

Mr. WHITE. I cannot help the Senator beyond what I have done.

Mr. AIKEN. If I cannot obtain this information I shall naturally vote against the bill. I received very disturbing reports earlier today to the effect that the company owed money in addition to what it owed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I am not criticizing the committee in any way. I simply wanted to have it clear in my own mind, and if it were made clear I presume I would vote for the bill.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, in answer to the question asked by the Senator from Vermont I should like to have incorporated in the RECORD exhibit No. 3, which appears on page 10 of the hearings, which sets out the financial structure of the Postal Telegraph Co. As I stated before, I do not think it makes any difference what their financial structure is, or what they claim the company is worth. The question is how much it is actually worth.

Mr. President, I ask that exhibit No. 3, to which I previously referred, be incorporated in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I wish the Senator to understand that I simply wanted to obtain information. I have listened to the argument with an entirely open mind, not knowing whether I should be in favor of the bill or against it. I thank Senators for what little information I have received.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Some very pertinent questions have been asked of the Senators in charge of the bill. I think we should have a full exploration of all matters involved in the final consideration of the measure. I rose only for the purpose of suggesting to the able Senator in charge of the bill that it go over until Thursday. Why could it not go over until Thursday? In the meantime Senators could acquaint themselves with the capital structure of the company, with its indebtedness, and with the duplication of service, if any there is, and whether there are any areas now being served by the Western Union which are also served by the Postal Telegraph. Also the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] regarding the shortening of the period of 5 years could be considered.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oregon will not ask that the proposed legislation go over. Next Thursday I could not give any better explanation of the financial structure of the company than is contained on page 10 of the hearings. A similar bill was passed at the last session of the Senate, after careful consideration had been given the matter. As I said before, I feel that so far as the financial structure is concerned it is really immaterial what the company sets up. I agree with the Senator from Maine that the question of the number of years of protection to be given employees received the most careful consideration by the committee. Recommendations were made to us by the companies. The Western Union itself recommended that the period should be reduced to 4 years. I do not think we have gone too far. I should very much like to have the bill disposed of. If the Western Union is to buy the other company, the longer it is delayed the more the debt will increase. So it will only become more difficult as time goes on to effect a merger under the proposed legislation.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. What is the attitude of the Postal Telegraph Co., as evidenced by its showing before the committee?

Mr. McFARLAND. The Postal Telegraph Co. is very anxious for a merger because it is going under; it is going out of existence.

Mr. McCARRAN. Has the company made that known, and does it appear in the printed hearings?

Mr. McFARLAND. Oh, yes; it appears in the hearings. There have been two different sets of hearings on this subject. One set of hearings was held on Senate Resolution 95. Everyone was given an opportunity to come before the committee.

In answer to the Senator from Oregon, let me state that the House has made a different report than the report to which I have referred. This matter will all have to go to conference anyway. I believe it is very important to dispose of the proposed legislation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my suggestion was made in a helpful attitude. The able Senator from Arizona, who is in charge of the bill, has control of it, and it is the unfinished business.

I am mindful, as the Senator must be, that there are 10 or 12 new Members of the Senate who were not present during the last session of the Congress. Those Members have not had an opportunity to examine the record made before the committee, and to become familiar with it, or with the record of the hearings held by the House committee. It is only because of a desire that the new Members may become familiar with the matter that I suggest that final action be deferred until Thursday. In the meantime, Members on both sides of the aisle will have an opportunity to read the record and satisfy themselves on the questions which were propounded earlier in the debate.

Mr. McFARLAND. Two of the new Members are members of our committee, and they were present when the matter was discussed by the committee. I had intended to move for consideration of the bill last Thursday, but at the request of a Senator who asked that consideration be postponed until a future date I agreed that it should go over until today. He told me this morning that it would be satisfactory to him to bring it up today.

I am personally very anxious to have the bill disposed of. I do not wish to deprive any Senator of an opportunity to study it; but, as I have said, it is not a new bill. It is the same as a bill which was passed by the Senate at the last session of Congress after most careful study. Time is a very important element if there is to be a merger. No company will care to take over another company which becomes too much involved. Many times I have seen consideration of legislation postponed, and then someone would bring in something else. Therefore I am inclined to insist that we go ahead and dispose of the bill today.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not attempting to interfere with prompt action and early consideration; but a delay of 3 days, after all the months which have elapsed since this bill or an identical bill has been on the calendar, would not disturb the economic composure of the Western Union or the Postal Telegraph Co. I believe that in the interest of new Members of the Senate, who have propounded questions, the bill should go over until Thursday. If that were done I would not be able to see any reason for any further delay. I have not been prompted by any suggestions on the part of any of the new Members. It is possible that they are all satisfied to go forward; but since questions have been propounded, I thought it would be courteous to the new Members to suspend consideration of the bill at this time and allow it to go over until next Thursday. However, the able Senator from Arizona is in charge of the bill.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I took the matter up with the able Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] and he was satisfied to have it go over until today. He was not satisfied with some of the labor provisions. Senators may well differ in regard to some of those questions. As I have said, all these matters will have to go to conference anyway. The bill originally reported to the House of Representatives contains labor provisions which are different from those in the bill under consideration, and the question will have to go to conference. Inasmuch as we have already passed a bill on this subject, I believe that it would be in the interest of the merger for us to proceed as rapidly as possible, and let the House take up the subject again.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, on page 7, line 6, after the words "not less than", I move to amend by striking out the word "five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "two."

I offer the same amendment on page 8, line 6, after the words "period of"; and also on page 10, line 12, after the words "during the."

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I hope the amendments will not be agreed to. They represent much less than the Western Union even asked for.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Western Union asks for anything at all. Because the committee insisted, it reluctantly agreed to 4 years, but, as I read the record and understand the situation, it did not ask for anything.

Mr. McFARLAND. The amendments are not in accordance with the recommendation made to the committee by the Western Union. I feel that a man who has worked for 15 or 20 years for a telegraph company and who has spent his life in preparation for an industry, is entitled to some consideration. I admit that these provisions are favorable to labor; but I consider it most important that the Senate protect labor to the fullest extent. I say that protection for 5 years is not too much for a man who has spent years preparing for service to an industry.

We have testimony showing that the turn-over in these two companies in 1 year was 7,800. There can be no hardship under those circumstances. Some of the witnesses asked for a longer protection and for full protection of the employees. Under these circumstances, I submit that there can be no injustice to the companies. I feel that there can and will be a merger under these conditions.

As was pointed out by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], it is not compulsory for these companies to merge. They do not have to merge if the provisions are too strict. If they feel that under the circumstances they cannot merge, they do not have to merge. However, I venture to say that there will be a merger under the bill, because they are desirous of making the new company a stronger company. They desire especially to merge the teletype operations, which are cutting in on their business.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Arizona a question. If there is to be a merger of these companies, which he and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] has told us is absolutely necessary, where are we to stop in the treatment we accord all the wonderful men throughout the United States who have given their lives to industry? What have we done for the boys who have been taken out of industry and put into the armed forces? We have not given them any guaranty.

Mr. McFARLAND. Oh, yes; we have given protection to those boys. They are protected under the bill; and when they come back they will be given the same protection and the same employment they would have been given had they continued in the service of the company during the war.

Mr. HAWKES. I am not referring to the boys who have been taken out of the service of the Postal and Western Union. I am referring to the hundreds of thousands of boys who have been taken out of industries throughout the United States. All we did in the Selective Service Act was to say that the employer should, so far as possible, put those boys back into his employment. I believe in doing that, and I believe that we should go as far as we can. However, the question I am asking is, Where are we to stop in this matter if we go further and further with guaranties here and no guaranties over there?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I feel that I have answered the Senator, in stating that because of the rapid turnover of telegraph company employment under the present set-up it is possible to have the desired protection; and I believe it is the duty of Congress to give to the employees this protection. I feel that it is the duty of Congress to give the employees as much protection as we can give them. I do not want to do anything that would make it impossible to have a merger; but most certainly I am in favor of providing protection for employees who have served for a number of years. Labor has helped to make these companies, just as financial organizations have helped. Labor has made the Postal System; labor has made the Western Union System. Those companies have reached such a point that, because of the competition of the subsidized air-mail lines and the telephone companies, it has become difficult for them to operate. The telephone companies already have merged, under previous legislation. I think that under the terms of the pending bill we should provide labor with as much protection as possible—all the protection which can be given them. Practically all the testimony was to the effect that we can provide them the desired protection, and I feel that it is the duty of Congress to do so.

THE NORTH AFRICAN SITUATION

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not wish to divert the attention of the Senate from the telegraph company merger legislation, but I desire to avail myself of this opportunity to make a few comments with respect to the situation in North Africa as it reiates to the Secretary of State, the State Department, and the military authorities now representing this Government in North Africa.

There has been quite a substantial amount of comment and criticism in the public prints, from commentators and writers, as well as from commentators over the radio, attacking the action of Secretary of State Hull, and charging that he is at some fault with respect to the political and military arrangements in North Africa. I want to say that I regard the action of the Secretary of State and the State Department prior to the landing of our troops in North Africa and the handling of the Vichy authorities as having been guided by wisdom and skill. While foreign relations were maintained with Vichy, there was no recognition of the Vichy Government, or of the Vichy inclination to favor the Axis Powers. To have severed relations with Vichy would have rendered it impossible for the United States Government to secure much valuable information which our continued diplomatic contacts made possible.

I regard it as highly significant that when the United States military expedition successfully landed in North Africa, the State Department and the military authorities had so well concealed and kept out of the public notice the intentions with regard to landing the expeditionary force that the landing was entirely a success.

But, the critics say, once our troops landed in North Africa we should not have had any further contact with certain persons whom they charge with being in sympathy with Vichy. Mr. President, I have no doubt that due to the skill with which alinements were made at that time under the direction of General Eisenhower, our commander in chief in that area, and because of negotiations and contacts with the ruling authorities in Morocco, in Algiers, and in all that territory, the lives of thousands of American troops were saved.

The Senate will recall that our armed forces met some resistance, but that the losses were insignificant compared to the number of men involved and to the magnitude of the military operations. As we all know, Admiral Darlan has been assassinated. The Secretary of State was roundly denounced and criticized for having anything to do with Admiral Darlan. Mr. President, it would have been tragic for General Eisenhower, as commander in chief of our forces, to have done otherwise than treat the situation in a realistic manner, or for the State Department itself to have undertaken to influence General Eisenhower to do otherwise. In this war the military commanders in the field must recognize the realities of their situation. Admiral Darlan was in that area. He seems to have cooperated with the American forces and the British forces in bringing about the capitulation of the French; and, all in all, the result, so far as the United States and the United Nations standpoint were concerned, constituted a valuable contribution to our military efforts.

There is a controversy now as to who should be governing North Africa—whether this French group or the other French group—and the State Department is being roundly denounced and attacked because it does not assert itself and bring about a realinement of the French persons in authority. The United States Government is not concerned in internal French politics as such. It is interested, however, in maintaining control, through the proper French authorities, of the areas now occupied by American forces, and of areas which we hope will be occupied by American forces in the near future. Without detaining the Senate with a long dissertation on the details of the situation, I rise today merely to say that I regard the action of Secretary Hull throughout this whole chapter of our international contacts in North Africa, and preceding the landing of the troops in North Africa, as having been a wise one, one which prevented immense losses of American life and matériel, and one which now gives promise of realizing the actualities of the situation, and of being of great assistance to the American forces. I am willing to trust General Eisenhower, who is on the ground, who is in military command, who will be held responsible for everything that happens to our forces in North Africa. I am willing to have him treat the situation as he finds it, and I am willing for him to adopt such measures as seem to offer the best hope of his realizing all the advantages of the situation.

Mr PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. In view of the very able and clear statement the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee is now making, I wonder if for the record, at least the able Senator from Texas will state—although it would not be news to the Senate—whether Admiral Darlan was invited to Algeria, or whether he was there on a private mission, to visit his son who was a paralytic, and whose health was almost dispaired of, and that Admiral Darlan happened to arrive there the night the American forces entered Algeria, and was not brought there by any machinations on the part of our military or State Department officials?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. I am not prepared to state all the details of how he came to be there at that particular moment; but the important thing was that he was there and, being there, and having influence with the French authorities, and having power with them General Eisenhower had the good sense to use him in the saving of American lives and in advancing the military objectives of the expedition.

What else could he do? Some of the French armed forces are now fighting on the side of the United Nations. They are maintaining a part of the front in North Africa. Do we want to worry about what those particular Frenchmen would do if they were back in France, as to what their particular preference for some particular leader might be? The important thing is that they are out there baring their breasts to the enemy. They are fighting side by side with American troops, and I for one applaud the Secretary of State, and I applaud General Eisenhower for the course they have pursued

If I am in a fight, in a struggle for my life, when death faces me, when I go out upon an adventure that may end either in safety or the sacrifice of my life, and I have standing by me someone who is willing to share my dangers, who is willing to take the hazards of battle, I am not going to stop and say, "By the way, wait a minute. Listen. Instead of fighting, let's talk this thing over. What political party do you belong to?" I would not want to stop the contest and turn to him and argue with him, "What church do you belong to? Do you believe in immersion, or baptism by sprinkling?" [Laughter.]

No, Mr. President; the French authorities in North Africa, those who are there on the ground, are cooperating, so far as my information goes—and I think I have what information there is available—with the armed forces of the United States; and Mr. Hull, as Secretary of State, is doing all he possibly can to strengthen and uphold the hands of General Eisenhower. I think that General Eisenhower's record in North Africa has already demonstrated that he is pursuing that course which is best for the interests of the expedition, and which offers the greatest hope for the success of our armed forces in North Africa.

Mr. President, I trust that the attacks back home, behind the lines, on the Secretary of State, will not impress the public mind, and will not create more confusion. All of us say we want to win the war. "Yes; we want to do what we can to win the war, but—then, when we get to the "but," someone wants to make all sorts of attacks.

Mr. President, I have not always agreed with the President of the United States on some of his policies, and I have not hesitated to say so, and I have not hesitated to vote my convictions. But we cannot have two or three leaders in a war. When the Nation is engaged in war, we have to have one leader, and President Roosevelt is now our leader. He is our leader by the sanction of the Constitution. He is our leader by the votes of the people of the United States. While we do not like some of the things our people are complaining about, some of the irritating things, some of the irritating regulations, I might say that we did not like them in time of peace, and we did not like them because they interrupted our comfort and our convenience. But let me say to those of us who are here at home, that today other men are out yonder on the distant reaches of the sea dying. Other men are far out yonder in the jungles of the Dutch East Indies dying and suffering, and it behooves us not to engage in too much bickering and quarreling here at home about which particular group is recognized in North Africa, or this or that or the other. We should try to follow the leadership of our Commander in Chief. When I say Commander in Chief, I mean it in a military sense, of course, and in those other senses which contribute to the military effort. I do not mean that because the President is Commander in Chief he can do illegal things, that he can do things which are not warranted by the Constitution. But this war is a world war, it is a war which is going to require every ounce of energy and resource and strength this people are able to produce.

Let us not deceive ourselves; this a real war. We have two powerful, militant adversaries. They are good soldiers, they are good fighters, they are determined; they were trained and skilled by years of practice before we became engaged in the war.

Mr. President, the struggle before us may be long and it may be bitter, as it already is bitter, and I for one hope that we may discourage criticism of this, that, and the other, and unite on doing those things which are necessary to enable us so to marshal our strength and so to centralize our resources that we may be able to give to the men on the front line every instrumentality and every weapon and every kind of supply necessary to make it possible for them to achieve over our enemies a triumph in the shortest possible time, and to bring peace to the people of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to ask the Senator a question which is suggested by a cartoon which appeared in the Washington Star 2 or 3 days ago. Of course, we all realize that General Eisenhower had to deal with the situation in North Africa as he found it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. He did not create the condition; he had to deal with it as he found it, and it seems to me he dealt with it in the way that was the wisest possible under the circumstances, gaining the greatest amount of territory and time at the minimum loss of American lives.

What I rose to suggest to the Senator was the cartoon which appeared in the Washington Star a few days ago, which pictured a long-distance conversation between General Eisenhower and Secretary Hull. In that imaginary conversation General Eisenhower, in North Africa, was talking by long distance telephone to Secretary Hull in Washington, and saying, "If you can handle the situation there, I think I can handle it here in North Africa."

It seemed to me that was a very impressive way of saying what I have just suggested, and what the Senator from Texas has emhasized, that General Eisenhower had to deal with the situation in North Africa as he found it, and he has dealt with it in what seems to me to be a combination of statesmanlike qualities and military precision, in undertaking to handle the matter as he has handled it. The cartoon really expressed in a very potent way the situation as it existed between the Secretary of State and General Eisenhower, and as it still exists, and may continue to exist for some time.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. The cartoon described by the Senator certainly presented a graphic picture of the essentials of the situation. We send a commanding general into a territory of which we expect him to take control. Naturally, he has to recognize the realities of the situation, and in recognizing them he has the facts before him, and is on the ground, and it should not be expected that Secretary Hull would undertake to direct in every detail the measures which the general might adopt. The cartoon was very eloquent in suggesting that he would be able to look after North Africa if people would let Secretary Hull alone over here and let him take care of the domestic situation.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I rise to say that I think it is very timely that the Senator should today call this matter to the attention of the Senate and of the country. So far as I am concerned, I am in thorough accord with the views he has expressed with reference to letting General Eisenhower handle the situation. I think the general has done an excellent job, the very best job he could have done under the circumstances.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Montana. I feel that upon reflection, if Senators have not already done so, they will come to the same conclusion. It is well known that following the initial landing in North Africa, with a relatively small casualty list, we subsequently received the surrender of Dakar and West Africa, about which there had been much talk in the Senate in months past, which was sought to be accomplished at one time in an attack by the British and the Free French, with warships, and with military forces, and which culminated in very substantial losses to the attackers. Yet, by reason of the manner in which General Eisenhower handled affairs in North Africa, Dakar and West Africa surrendered without the loss of any lives and without the loss of any matériel. There came under our influence and under our prestige, and within the sphere of our armed forces, this great territory, which renders impossible its use by the Axis as a base from which to attack Brazil by aircraft, or any other operations in that area. It rendered it impossible for them to utilize Dakar as a submarine base from which to prey upon our merchant vessels, our convoys, and our naval vessels.

So, Mr. President, I think the country ought to know that Secretary Hull has rendered an outstanding service, a service that was actuated by his almost unbelievable sense of prophecy and foresight in taking the measures which meant most for the safety of our forces and most for the success of our enterprise.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, apropos of what the able Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee has just said, Senators will also recall that an article appeared in the Washington Evening Star some two or three days ago, in which was published information which Senators already had from a responsible source—the circumstances of Admiral Darlan's entry into this picture. As will be recalled, Admiral Darlan had a son, a victim of infantile paralysis, lying ill in Algiers. Prior to the arrival of American troops in Algeria he had paid one visit to his son's bedside. The son appeared to be better in health, and Admiral Darlan returned to Vichy, or back to France. Subsequently his son's condition became acute. Admiral Darlan went back to Algeria thinking his son was about to pass away, and was in the Governor's palace the night the American forces landed in Algiers.

The article in the Star also went on to point out that our consul, Mr. Murphy, went to Admiral Darlan's room to plead with him to use his influence against resistance to the American occupation forces, and, if there were any, to the British occupation forces. Subsequently, while he was in custody—actually at first in the custody of the troops raised by another French leader, and later in the custody of the American forces—Admiral Darlan made the decision which led to the course he subsequently followed.

It will be apparent, therefore, and I think no one can dispute the facts, that Admiral Darlan coming into this picture was not a part of some scheme or sinister arrangement made by our State Department in any clandestine way, but was the result of a straightforward appeal made to him by an American consular representative to spare bloodshed, and certainly intended to arouse the patriotism he might still have had in him for France and for the cause for which the American troops were going to Africa. So I think it is a fair inference that Secretary Hull had not become an appeaser.

Insofar as I am personally worthy of mention in that connection, I am sure I have not been and am not now an appeaser myself, and I do not favor the adoption of appeasement at any time or at any place by anybody. But that does not mean that military officers and those working in concert with them cannot go to anyone who has the power to resist, and make an appeal to him not to resist, and try to arouse his support for the same cause for which we are fighting.

Mr. President, Secretary Hull has had a long record in public life. The Tennessee mountains do not very often produce appeasers. Secretary Hull is a glorious product of the ruggedness of the Tennessee mountains, and as fine an expression of American character as is to be found anywhere.

INVESTIGATION OF MANPOWER RESOURCES

Mr. President, turning briefly to another subject, there have been some comments made on the floor during the last few days about an additional manpower investigation. I have neither the right nor the disposition to retard any study of the subject of the best use of the Nation's manpower resources. I think the Senate is entitled to know, as a matter of fact, that the Military Affairs Committee has for some months had before it measures pertaining to the effective use of the Nation's manpower, and it has in the past conducted certain investigations. The able Truman committee has also held numerous hearings upon the subject, and appointed a subcommittee, I believe, headed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE]. They have made a rather considerable study of this subject. A subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, of which I have had the honor to be chairman, has for at least 3 months been investigating the same subject. The jurisdiction of that committee rested upon the fact that legislation was proposed which related to the civilian labor supply of this country. It was the view of that subcommittee, at least of its chairman, and of many others, that legislation pertaining to the civilians of this country and the obligations which might be imposed upon them to work properly came within the scope of those whose jurisdiction related to the subject of labor. Our study did not contemplate coercion upon American labor, certainly not unless every alternative should fail.

A resolution providing for the continuation of the life of that subcommittee is pending now before the whole Committee on Education and Labor, having been submitted by the junior Senator from Florida. If that resolution is approved the Senate Committee on Education and Labor expects to continue its investigation. Of course, if any other committee cares to conduct an investigation, and believes it should do so, that is the thing for it to do. I did, however, want to make it clear that that subject had already received considerable consideration in the Senate, and that the Committee on Education and Labor, which deals with the subject of vocational training, and education, and legislation pertaining to labor, would not naturally expect to desist from its study unless required by the Senate to do so.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Can the Senator tell when a report will be made by the committee?

Mr. PEPPER. The subcommittee has already submitted two preliminary reports to the full committee. Legislation has not yet been recommended because the study has not been completed by the subcommittee, and I would not presume to speak for a subcommittee which has not yet been given legal validity. However, if I were again the chairman of a similar subcommittee, I believe some recommendation in the form of legislation, if it were thought legislation were necessary, could be expected within a resonably short time.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Florida realizes what is taking place in the Northwest? Our boys are being taken away from the farms. Our dairy cattle are being sold by the thousands. Auction sales are being held, even in the winter time.

A few days ago former Senator Lynn J. Frazier was in Washington. He served in this body for 18 years. He has lived in North Dakota for nearly 50 years. He told me that he never saw such a situation as that which confronts the farmers of North Dakota at the present time. Thousands of acres of land will not be put into crops next year. Unless something is done in the near future, not even the machinery which the farmers use will be repaired. Mr. Frazier came to see me to ascertain whether something could not be done to get these committees to act promptly.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the Senator from North Dakota for making the observation which he has made, for he has stated a situation which has been neglected by the administrative agencies of the Government. I do not know what has happened to the power of the War Manpower Commission. I do not know why it apparently has not taken hold of the farm labor problem with some grasp, some policy, and some effectiveness.

This morning's newspapers indicated that the whole question will be turned over by the War Manpower Commission to the Department of Agriculture. If the Department of Agriculture does not perform any better than it has relating to the question of food production, it will not do the job very well. Until the Department of Agriculture tells the farmers of the country that they may be assured of a dependable source of labor to enable them to cultivate and harvest their crops, we have no right to ask them to plant their crops.

Mr. President, how can a farmer be asked to spend his money for the purchase of seed and fertilizer, and the acquisition of equipment necessary to plant and harvest his crop, when the Government of the United States does not give him any assurance that he will have the labor with which to cultivate or harvest the crop? The United States Government should be willing, at least, to indemnify him for the amount of money the crop has cost him if he cannot get the necessary labor to harvest it, or it should assure him that the labor will be available for the purpose of cultivating and harvesting the crop.

The Food Administrator's Office should take hold of the problem and deal with it. If it should become necessary to use the armed forces, to call for volunteers and recruit an itinerant labor army, or hire farm labor upon a monthly, bimonthly, or periodic basis, then let it be done, and let the United States Government make such labor available to the farmer at a fair compensation. Whatever method is determined upon, the United States Government can furnish labor to the farmers if whoever has charge of the problem takes hold of it and actually does something toward its solution.

I am one of those who, with regret and almost despair, have seen this problem rock along week after week and month after month, with no clear-cut governmental policy on the subject.

In nearly every mail—and I am sure other Senators have had the same experience—I receive letters from farmers. I received one this morning which says:

> I am ill. I have a farm (of a certain size). I have certain livestock. I expect to plant certain crops. I cannot do it unless my son is given some sort of deferment. The local draft board says that it does not feel that it can defer my son. What shall I do?

I do not know what to tell him. I do not know whether to tell him that he should refer the matter to the selective-service board and ask them to put his son in a deferred category or refer the matter to the Manpower Commission and ask for consideration. I have not heard of the Commission intervening in such cases. Or should we advise the farmer to appeal to the Department of Agriculture and have the Department write back and say that the solution of the problem is someone else's responsibility?

Mr. President, what we need is a clear-cut manpower policy. I prefer to see it administratively conceived and promulgated, because in that way it would have greater flexibility and could be better adapted to the changing circumstances found in various sections of the country. However, I think we owe it to our Government to give notice that if the administrative agencies do not prepare, promulgate, and put into effect a sensible manpower policy, there will be no alternative but for the Congress to enact such legislation as will be necessary in arriving at a solution of the problem.

THE MANPOWER SITUATION

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in connection with the discussion of the manpower situation, I believe it is appropriate at this time for me to make a few remarks which I had intended to submit later.

In the first place, I should like to concur in what has been said by other Senators in connection with the situation relating to agricultural labor. I also entirely agree that the sooner some plan is devised and put into effect the better it will be for everyone concerned.

Mr. President, I invite attention to a news release from the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C., issued on January 20, 1943. This release shows that the active spindle-hours in the State of South Carolina are higher than in any other State in the Union, numbering 2,725,956,051. In fact, the spindle-hours in South Carolina alone exceed the active spindle-hours in all the States outside the Cotton Belt.

Workers in South Carolina have been most patriotic. There have been no strikes or slow-downs, and I desire to take this opportunity, as one of their representatives, to commend them.

I also wish to call attention to the fact that although South Carolina has an abundance of electricity and other resources, including some of the most highly skilled workers in America, since the beginning of the conflict no attempt has been made to utilize these resources by any war production activities or by the establishment of any war plants of any consequence within the State. In fact, Mr. President, last month the War Manpower Commission showed a surplus of labor available in South Carolina despite the fact that more than 100,000 of our boys have volunteered, or have been called to the colors.

If the United States Government wants skilled workers far removed from the coast line, there is no better place to be found in America than in the foothills of the mountains of South Carolina. South Carolina is leading the Nation in the production of textiles which are extremely important in the war effort. However, it also has available labor which could be utilized in many small or large industries.

Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD at this point a statement from the Bureau of the Census showing the activity in the cotton-spinning industry for December 1942.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Bureau of the Census announces that according to preliminary figures, 23,845,746 cotton-spinning spindles were in place in the United States on December 31, 1942, of which 22,887,072 were operated at some time during the month, compared with 22,948,248 for November, 23,012,046 for October, 22,956,224 for September, 22,973,572 for August, 23,109,576 for July, and 23,062,264 for December 1941.

The aggregate number of active spindle-hours reported for the month was 10,733,658,128. Based on an activity of 80 hours per week, the cotton spindles in the United States were operated during December 1942 at 127.9 percent capacity. This percentage compares, on the same basis, with 133.4 for November, 136.9 for October, 134.9 for September, 136.4 for August, 130.2 for July, and 125.4 for December 1941. The average number of active spindle-hours per spindle in place for the month was 450.

The total number of cotton-spinning spindles in place, the number active, the number of active spindle-hours, and the average hours per spindle in place by States are shown in the following statement:

| State | Spinning spindles | | Active spindle-hours for December | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | In place Dec. 31 | Active during December | Total | Average per spindle in place |
| United States | 23,845,746 | 22,887,072 | 10,733,658,128 | 450 |
| Cotton-growing States | 17,890,520 | 17,401,962 | 8,737,442,708 | 488 |

| South Carolina | 5,421,332 | 5,276,208 | 2,725,956,051 | 503 |
| Tennessee | 543,904 | 532,982 | 316,283,838 | 582 |
| Texas | 237,420 | 235,112 | 104,251,512 | 439 |
| Virginia | 645,124 | 606,170 | 272,827,288 | 423 |
| All other States | 581,154 | 527,062 | 194,416,175 | 335 |

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I have made reference to my State because I know the conditions there. I know that similar conditions exist in other States. In one section of the country there is a surplus of manpower. In another section additional workers are needed. Along the coast, where shipyards are constructing vessels, there is a shortage of manpower. In other regions there is a great surplus. However, nearly all the farmers throughout America are in the same position with regard to a shortage of help. I hope some solution of the manpower problem will soon be found.

CONSOLIDATIONS AND MERGERS OF DOMESTIC TELEGRAPH CARRIERS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 158) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has offered an amendment reducing to a 2-year period the 5-year period, wherever it may be provided in the bill, dealing with an employee of any company consolidated or merged under the bill who was in the employment of the company prior to March 1, 1941. I might say, Mr. President, that in undertaking to frame the legislation the Committee on Interstate Commerce had in mind particularly the situation existing among the stockholders of the Postal Telegraph and Western Union Cos., one of which is, and has been for some time, losing money, and both of which could not merge so as to form a single company under the law without enactment of the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. President, it was not an easy matter to frame the legislation in a way which seemed to deal justly with all the interests concerned. Among the interests concerned, and among those which the committee has sought to deal with in a just manner, were the employees of the telegraph companies involved in the contemplated merger. So we had to consider not only the question of how the stockholders of the merged companies should be treated, but also to consider what would be fair treatment for the employees of the merged companies, many of whom have been in the employ of one or the other of the companies longer than many of the stockholders have held stock in either of the companies.

Many of the employees have never since their maturity engaged in any occupation except that of telegrapher or other employee of one of the two telegraph companies. The situation with employees of a telegraph company is the same as it is with employees of a railroad company. Men who spend their lives in the railroad business—as conductors, engineers, flagmen, or otherwise—find it difficult to integrate themselves with other industries and in other activities after they have been employed by a railroad company practically all their lives, and lose their positions or are discharged for one reason or another.

So in dealing with the companies that are to be merged we felt that it was also fair to deal with the employees.

In subsection 2, on page 7, the bill provides that all persons who became employees after the 1st of March 1941 may be discharged.

We have undertaken to provide in a simple way for those who became employed later, who have not spent their entire lives in the telegraph business, by providing that—

(2) If any employee of any carrier which is a party to any such consolidation or merger, who was employed by such carrier immediately preceding the approval of such consolidation or merger, and whose period of employment began after March 1, 1941, is discharged at any time as a consequence of such consolidation or merger by the carrier resulting therefrom, such carrier shall pay such employee at the time he is discharged severance pay in cash equal to the amount of salary or compensation he would have received during the full 4-week period immediately preceding such discharge at the rate of compensation or salary payable to him during such period, multiplied by the number of years he has been continuously employed immediately preceding such discharge by one or another of such carriers who were parties to such consolidation or merger, but in no case shall any such employee receive less severance pay than the amount of salary or compensation he would have received at such rate if he were employed during such full 4-week period.

In other words, he cannot be discharged if he became an employee after the 1st of March 1941 without being paid at least 4 weeks' compensation at the rate he would have drawn.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I desire information. The Senator referred to men who have spent all their lives in that business. As a matter of fact, the protection would be extended to a man who was employed on February 1, 1941, would it not, even though that was the first time he ever had seen a telegraph line?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; subsection 2 on page 7 refers to that.

Mr. TAFT. But would it not protect any person who was an employee on March 1, 1941, regardless of how long he had been employed as of March 1, 1941, by a telegraph company?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have read that paragraph because it is taken out of subsection 7, which the Senator seeks to amend. I have said all I care to say about that. I explained the matter so that the Senator would understand that paragraph 7, on page 10, which he seeks to amend, lifts out of this provision those who come under paragraph 2, to whom I have just referred.

Subsection 7 reads as follows:

No employee of any carrier which is a party to any such consolidation or merger shall, without his consent, have his rate of compensation reduced, or (except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection)—

Which is the one I have just read—

be discharged or furloughed, as a direct result of such consolidation or merger, during the 5-year period after the date of the approval of such consolidation or merger, and no such employee shall, without his consent, have his compensation reduced, or be discharged or furloughed, in contemplation of such consolidation and merger, during the 6-month period immediately preceding such approval.

What the Senator from Ohio seeks to do is to reduce the 5-year period to a 2-year period. We might as well be frank about this proposed merger legislation. It is based upon the theory that two competing telegraph companies in this country cannot succeed, and we all know that one of them is now losing money and has been losing money. The stockholders of that company have received no dividends on their stock, and in order to bail them out, as it were, we are providing for this merger of the two companies. While no company is mentioned, we all know we have in mind the Western Union and the Postal Telegraph Cos. By the proposed legislation we would make it possible for them to merge and consolidate, which might result in what is commonly known as the bailing out of the stockholders of one of the companies by reason of the merger. They would be put upon a more solid foundation with respect to their stock. The merger would have to be approved.

Mr. TAFT. Is there any evidence to support what the Senator has stated? The Postal Telegraph Co. is certainly not by any chance worth the amount of money it owes. The chance of a stockholder of the Postal getting any money is simply completely negligible, as I understand the situation. I do not think the stockholders of the Postal Telegraph Co. will ever get a cent as a result of what is proposed. I know the Postal owes the Government $9,000,000. How much more it owes I do not know, but it certainly is not worth anything like that amount to anyone.

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be——

Mr. TAFT. As stated by the Senator from Maine, the real purpose is not what the Senator from Kentucky has stated. The reason of the Senator from Maine for supporting the proposed legislation is that the Government should not take over the Postal Telegraph Co. and put the Government into the telegraph business, which he thinks is the alternative to the proposed consolidation.

Mr. BARKLEY. At any rate, those who are interested in the Postal Telegraph Co., whether they are stockholders or the Government of the United States, stand a chance to be better off as a result of the consolidation than they would be if the Postal had to go out of business completely, or go into bankruptcy.

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator will change his statement from "stockholders" to "creditors or bondholders," I will withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. BARKLEY. At any rate, those who are interested in the Postal Telegraph Co., whether stockholders or bondholders, or Uncle Sam, would presumably be better off after the merger than they are now.

The point is whether we are to make an effort, by the proposed merger, to improve the financial situation with respect to the stockholders or the bondholders or the Government, and at the same time not take employees who have spent their lives with the company and throw them out the window to the dogs. I am not willing to do that, and I think the 5-year period is a fair one. It was arrived at in the committee after long deliberation, and I think unanimously. I am not certain, but I do not believe there was any serious opposition to the 5-year period.

It seems to me that while we are undertaking to provide for all the exigencies which may arise as the result of the merger and consolidation, we should not overlook the welfare of the employees, many of whom know nothing else but telegraphy, many of whom have been with one or the other of the companies all their adult lives.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. I think it was understood in the committee, of which I am a member, that we all favor an effort to merge the two companies into one, but it has seemed since that there are conditions imposed which will preclude a merger.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not catch what the Senator said.

Mr. MOORE. Since a study has been made, it seems that conditions are imposed which would preclude the desirability of a merger, if we have to impose upon the merged company a labor provision which would be uneconomical and unbearable, and preclude any profit being made out of the merger. Both companies are weak. Certainly the Postal Telegraph Co. is now insolvent, and what objection would there be to making the labor provision effective over a 2-year period rather than imposing a 5-year period?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have just stated my objection to it. The 5-year provision is not new. It was considered in the committee in the last Congress, during almost the entire existence of the last Congress, for 2 years. The 5-year period was agreed to in the last Congress, and the bill as passed by the Senate contained that provision. The only reason why we have this bill before us now is that the legislative situation made it impossible for the House of Representatives to act upon the bill, so that the 5-year period is not new. It was considered and agreed to by the committee and by the Senate without serious opposition.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am yielding to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. MOORE. I should like to see a merger brought about; I think it would probably be a wise step from the standpoint of economy. I should like to see it for the reason that the Postal Co. would probably fail anyway, and then its employees would be out of work, unless the company were taken over by the creditors or the Government. In the latter case the employees of the Postal would be working for the Government.

The hope which some of us have is that private enterprise will be encouraged, and situations brought about which will result in men being employed in private enterprise, rather than have the Postal Co. continue in competition with Western Union, so that they will both lose.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know of anyone, in the Senate or elsewhere, who seriously desires to have the Government of the United States take over either the Postal Co. or the Western Union, and it seems that inasmuch as the Government has a considerable amount of money invested in the Postal, if it had to take either one of them, in the absence of a merger, it would be the Postal. Whether the Government had better lose the $9,000,000 it has loaned, or whatever the amount is, instead of having to take the Postal Co. over and operate it in competition, is a matter about which any man may have his own opinion. Of course, the companies might never merge. They would not be required to merge. They would merely be permitted to merge.

If they never merged, of course the 5-year period or 2-year period would not have anything to do with the enactment of the law or its operation. But if they are to be merged on the theory that it would be to the interest of the public service, to the telegraph business generally, and if it were to the interest of all concerned in both companies that they should merge, the committee felt, and now feels, and I myself feel strongly, that 5 years is not too long to allow the merged companies to adjust their relationship to the old employees who have spent their lives in the telegraph business and who may find it difficult to integrate themselves into other vocations, so as to enable them to survive and support themselves and their families.

Mr. MOORE. It is not a question whether it is just or not to the employees. It is a question whether the measure would impose a burden so heavy as to make it prohibitive for the Western Union to assume the burden. The proposed legislation is permissive in nature, as I understand, but if it were to result in placing a prohibitive burden on one company, then the point I make is that it would be a futile thing.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Western Union was given every opportunity to present its contentions to the committee, as was the Postal Telegraph Co. Everyone connected with the whole situation was given opportunity to appear before the committee. The committee fixed the 5-year period as being fair and just to the employees.

Mr. President, I think the period is a reasonable one. I have nothing further to offer, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Kentucky may have the information I desire. One of the main purposes of the bill is to take care of the employees of the company which is to be absorbed. Does that include all the employees, or only a certain number of the employees?

Mr. BARKLEY. The two sections of the bill which I discussed draw a distinction between the employees who have been on the company's pay roll since the 1st of March 1941 and those who have been employed for a longer period of time. Those who come in the former category of more recent employees may be discharged, but they must receive what would be equal to 4 weeks' full pay at the time they are discharged.

Mr. BUTLER. The point on which I should like to have some light is this: No doubt there are certain employees who are organized, and undoubtedly a company which has been so long in existence, and which has had so much experience as the Postal has had, has a good many employees who are unorganized I should like to know if the application of the bill is to be the same in either case.

Mr. BARKLEY. Absolutely. I see no distinction between those who are unorganized and those who are organized. Subsection (7) on page 10 provides that no employee who has been employed or was employed at a period prior to the 1st of March 1941 shall be discharged without his consent, or have his compensation reduced without his consent during the 5-year period. It makes no reference whatever to whether such employee belongs to an organization or not.

Mr. BUTLER. If I may ask a further question, are the provisions of the bill applicable to the president, the vice president, the general manager, the chief counsel, and all other employees of the company? There appears to be no exception.

Mr. BARKLEY. While in a sense the president of a corporation is employed by it, he is not referred to among the employees. I have not read whether there is a definition of the word "employees" in the bill itself.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I might say that anyone who receives a salary of more than $5,000 is specifically excepted. It applies only to those who receive under $5,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I find on page 11 of the bill the provision that those who draw more than $5,000 are excepted from the provision of the bill.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say on the subject.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, it is true that a bill similar to this passed in the last session of the Senate, with the 5-year provision in it. Since that time, however, the whole situation regarding manpower has substantially changed, and this bill is absolutely contrary to and at variance with the present policy of the Government regarding manpower. Whereas in every other field we are trying to force people into essential employment, here we are, by definition, providing excessive employees in the telegraph industry, and encouraging them to remain in that industry, although they do not have anything to do, or will not have enough work to do for a period of 5 years, during and perhaps long after the war.

The manpower situation has become sufficiently serious to call for a reconsideration of what the Senate did when it previously passed a similar bill. We do not treat any other industry in this way. Mr. Donald Nelson appeared before a Senate committee the other day and discussed with us the question of so-called concentration of industry. He said that he had had a committee working for months considering the question and that the weight of opinion was that we must in the case of many industries say to an industry, "You must shut down half your plants and throw out of work the people in those plants, and concentrate all the work in the other plants, in order to save material and in order to relieve manpower."

Mr. President, we saw the actual operation of the War Production Board in the case of gold mines. The Board shut down every gold mine in the country, largely because, as it said, "We do not have enough men in the country, so we are going to shut down the gold mines, thus forcing those men into unemployment in the mines, and using them in other fields where labor is needed."

Mr. President, it is very well to say that the men involved in the proposed merger are a special group, but the manpower pool is a single pool. Older men often can go into some other work and relieve younger men, until we finally reach the point where we have men available for the most violent and pressing kind of physical labor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Ohio said we have treated no other industry like this. Some years ago we passed legislation authorizing the merger of railroad companies, and we made provision for at least attempting to take care of employees who would be affected by mergers. We did not provide exactly as we do here, but we did undertake to protect employees who had spent their lives in the railroad business and who were thrown out by reason of mergers. We sought to protect them so that they could be gradually integrated into the merged companies, so they would not be left on the streets wanting any protection. The method by which we did it was a little different from this, but the principle is the same.

Mr. TAFT. That was in times past, when no manpower problem existed. The point I make is that the situation has changed since the passage of the original bill. Anyone who will read the report of the Truman committee made to the Senate last week will see that in the farm machinery industry a concentration was carried out; that plant after plant manufacturing farm machinery was cut down. Nothing was done for the employees of the farm-machinery plants which were closed. They were told to enlist in the Army or to find some other position in which their work could be more useful to the war effort.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, those were inevitable results of the war. This is not a war measure. A similar measure has been under consideration for a long time. It was considered by Congress long before we got into the war, so it does not present a situation parallel to that which the Senator is discussing.

Mr. TAFT. I think the situation is parallel today. Why should we deliberately force thousands of other persons out of work in order to get enough men, and then provide a feather bed in the telegraph industry for twice as many men as are actually needed to carry on that business in time of war?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that from December 31, 1940, to December 31, 1941, there was a total turnover of employees of the Western Union and the Postal Telegraph of 7,820. It will be at least 2 years after March 1, 1941, before the merger can occur, which will make a total turn-over of 15,000 men who could be let out.

Mr. TAFT. I am interested in knowing why the Senator says it will take 2 years. My understanding is that the bill must be passed now because the merger has to be carried out immediately.

Mr. McFARLAND. I might say to the Senator that the employee must have been in the service of the company on March 1, 1941. The bill must be passed in the House. Notice must be given to the Federal Communications Commission of the proposed merger, all of which will take time. By that time 15,000 persons will be out as a result of the turn-over of employees. There is a total of adult employees in both systems at this time of approximately 40,000. In the Western Union approximately 30,000 are employed. Fifteen thousand subtracted from 40,000 leaves about 25,000 employees. Twenty-five thousand is less than will be needed.

Mr. TAFT. Then apparently the labor provisions are wholly unnecessary, and could be entirely omitted from the bill.

Mr. McFARLAND. That would be unnecessary if we had any assurance that the Western Union would keep the Postal employees who have devoted a lifetime to this industry, and whose whole livelihood is at stake. If we had some assurance that they would be kept, such a provision would be unnecessary. Some one will have to take their places.

Mr. TAFT. Today either the Western Union or the Postal may dismiss its employees. If the shortage is as described by the Senator, the Western Union will not be able to get any but Postal employees to carry on the telegraph business, if there is no excess; but there is an excess, and there will be a substantial excess.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield for a question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Subparagraph 7 on page 10 of the bill limits the effect to one cause only, namely, "as a direct result of such consolidation or merger." The bill merely provides that the rate of compensation of employees of the merged companies shall not be reduced without their consent, and that they shall not be deprived of their employment without their consent, for one cause, namely, "as a direct result of such consolidation or merger."

I merely suggest that the Senator from Ohio consider those words as bearing upon the point he has made, namely, that this provision would be in conflict with the proposed National Service Act. My own opinion is that it does not conflict with any other law. If the Congress should enact a National Service Act, and thus give authority to the Government to control and dispose of labor, which authority the Government does not now have—and I am sure the Senator from Ohio will agree with that statement—then the provision to which I have referred would not affect the operation of the National Service Act at all.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Vermont to this extent: I do not think the proposed act—although it is not entirely clear—would interfere in any way with the Draft Act. I thing that act supersedes any provision in the pending bill. If an employee is drafted under the Draft Act he is entitled to go back after the war to his former place of employment and finish out the remainder of his 5 years. Whether the 5 years would run from that time, or from the present, I do not know. I have not been able to ascertain. However, I assume that if there were a National Service Act—there is not, and may never be—it would probably supersede any provisions in the pending bill, although I suppose it would still contain the 5-year provision.

I believe there is only one good argument for inserting the labor provisions in the bill. In the case of a merger of two companies, if there is an excess of employees, and there is need for only the employees of one company, the company which takes over the other is likely to allow the employees of the other company to go. It therefore seems reasonable to provide for a short period—2 years, perhaps—so that the new company may have an incentive to take those employees in, try them out, and let them compete with its own employees for the jobs.

I believe there is something to be said in favor of forcing the Western Union into that positior. However, that object could be accomplished by a 2-year provision just as easily as by a 5-year provision. A 2-year period would be sufficiently short so that the men who were likely to lose out would begin to look around for work immediately. Many of them would go into war work. That is what it is desired to induce them to do if it can be done. That is the object of the present voluntary method of obtaining manpower. If the men are protected for a period of 5 years they will have no incentive at all. They will look forward to a period after the war when there may be a great deal of unemployment, and will say to themselves, "We had better take this rather than go out and look for other work," because the moment they go out and find war work to do, as we want them to do, they immediately lose the benefits of this provision unless they are actually drafted under the selective service law.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not familiar with the proposed legislation. I am wondering whether or not there is anything in the bill which would compel the Western Union to keep its employees also for a period of time.

Mr. TAFT. Yes. The bill would require it to keep both sets of employees for 5 years. Naturally the result would be too many employees.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The pending bill comes from a committee of which I am not a member. I understood the Senator from Arizona to say to the Senator from Ohio that the design of the provision under consideration is to protect men who have given a lifetime of service to one or the other of the merging companies. However, as I read the bill, it apparently applies only to those whose period of employment began on or before March 1, 1941. If that is correct, it then follows that a person who has been in the employ of one of the companies for a period of somewhat less than 2 years would come within the provision to which reference has been made, and, therefore, no lifetime of service is necessarily involved. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. TAFT. My understanding is that if anyone—a messenger boy or girl, or anyone else—who was employed before March 1, 1941, is discharged as a result of the proposed merger, he or she may immediately claim pay or employment for 5 years. I cannot find anything in the bill to the contrary.

Incidentally, the legislation applying to railroads provides that no man can have a period of protected employment longer than the period he has already served.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio further yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I appreciate the view and the courtesy of the Senator from Ohio; but I wonder if he will be kind enough to ask whether or not the interpretation which he has just given is concurred in by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. TAFT. I will ask the Senator from Arizona to answer the question.

Mr. McFARLAND. I will state very frankly that the provision referred to is intended to give protection to all who were employed on March 1, 1941, and continued in employment from that date.

In Senate bill 2445 we divided it up, and said that those who had been in the employment of the company for more than 5 years should be protected in their jobs, and so forth. In making the change we protected them as to salary, but eliminated the provision that they be employed in the same class of employment, and provided they must be assigned to work which is consistent with his past training and experience.

The matter was gone into very carefully and considered by the committee. It was decided that this protection could be given the employees without any injury to the company. Of course, it would protect some employees who have not been in the service of the company for such a long period of time; but, as I have pointed out, the turn-over is very rapid. I have reference to adult employees. I am not speaking of messengers, because the turn-over of messengers is 320 percent a year. There is no question about the situation pertaining to messengers. Everyone concedes that that is not a problem. Our problem deals only with the adult employee.

Mr. TAFT. I thank the Senator from Arizona for answering the question of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. President, I wish to say only one thing more. I believe that so far as the men and women in these companies are concerned, they would be better off with the 2-year provision, because they will never find another time when they can get another job as easily as they can get one today. I believe they ought to go out and look for other jobs. I think they should look for war jobs. They ought to be persuaded not to stay for a period of 5 years where they are not needed.

There has never been a time when there was so great a call for men with telegraphic or electrical knowledge as there is now. I do not believe we can give to the employees any benefit by insisting that they have 5 years of employment in an industry which, by definition or hypothesis, does not actually need that many employees.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Aiken | Chandler | Holman |
| Andrews | Chavez | Johnson, Colo. |
| Austin | Clark, Mo. | La Follette |
| Bankhead | Danaher | Langer |
| Barbour | Davis | Lodge |

| Radcliffe | Tunnell | White |
| Revercomb | Tydings | Wiley |
| Reynolds | Vandenberg | Willis |
| Robertson | Van Nuys | Wilson |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the ditsinguished Senator from Arizona whether one Joseph P. Selly, president of the American Communications Association, testified before the committee.

Mr. McFARLAND. He did testify.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am not a member of the committe. I also should like to address a question to the distinguished Senator from Arizona. I might say first that I listened to the statement by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE], in which he said in substance that the question was one of getting the two organizations together. Does the Senator recall the testimony of Mr. Williams, the president of the Western Union Co., in which he said:

> This brings me down to the labor provisions. My view is that, as written, it is very doubtful that any merger and consolidation would result, certainly not the acquisition of Postal by Western Union. I believe that the consolidated telegraph company should do everything within reason to find employment for the largest possible number of Postal employees, at their present rates of pay, but this can be done only if the consolidated company is given wide latitude as to where and how they can be employed.

My question is this: How did the Senator arrive at the 5-year period, if the president of the only company which could effectuate the consolidation said that it could not be consolidated on that basis.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I shall answer the Senator; but first, in answer to the question of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] in regard to Mr. Selly's appearance and testimony, let me say that he appeared and testified in the hearing on Senate bill 2445, which was virtually identical to the pending bill. The pending bill was only recently introduced. We did not have open hearings on it, because in the last session we had complete hearings on the corresponding measure, and we felt that the record was sufficient.

In answer to the question by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], let me state that in the testimony to which the Senator has referred, Mr. Williams was not referring at all to the 5-year period. What Mr. Williams was referring to was a provision providing each employee shall continue in the same class of work. Mr. Williams wanted more latitude in respect to changing them around.

We gave Mr. Williams the latitude for which he asked. We made the change in the bill which was reported to the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am sorry to say that I think the Senator is mistaken. If I may follow up the observation of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], I should like to read from the bottom of the page from which he read and continuing on the next page. At that point Mr. Williams said:

> I believe also that the consolidated company might be expected to provide employment for certain Postal employees not actually needed in any capacity, particularly those of long service, but generally it should not be required to employ thousands of people for 5 years for whom it has no work or for whom it would be required to create unnecessary work.

So his observation would seem to apply to the pending question.

Mr. McFARLAND. Of course, Mr. Williams wanted a 4-year period to be provided. Without referring to the testimony, which I remember very well, let me say that the quotation read by the Senator from Wisconsin referred to the other provision. Mr. Williams said, in effect:

> You cannot have two men doing identical work in the same town. You cannot require the employment of two managers for the same office. You must let us have some leeway, and let us move one of those men to some other job.

We gave him the leeway for which he asked. We did not give Mr. Williams everything for which he asked—no—but we gave him everything to which we thought he was entitled; and we did think he was entitled to have a little leeway in the matter of moving his employees around.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask a further question of the Senator from Arizona. I understood from what the Senator said a short time ago that the Postal Telegraph Co. is insolvent. However, I notice that its financial statement as of December 31, 1941, which I have before me, says it has a capital surplus of over $33,000,000. Not being a member of the committee, I should like to have the Senator explain that if he will.

Mr. McFARLAND. My statement was made in response to the question asked by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], who asked for the financial statement. The figure which the Senator from North Dakota has stated is contained in the financial statement; but, as was explained by Chairman Fly, the financial assets of a company are measured by its earning power. The company is earning less than nothing; it is losing $300,000 a month. So we cannot take its financial statement as to its assets and say that it is worth that much, because it is going in the hole all the time.

As was pointed out in the recommendations of Mr. Jones, head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, that company is now at the end of its rope. The R. F. C. did not feel that it could lend it any more money.

In other words, that is the situation which is confronting us, and something must be done.

Mr. LANGER. Does not the Senator think it is strange that this company is broke, but that its stock has been going up until it has doubled in the last year?

Mr. McFARLAND. Regardless of what the stock is worth on the market at present, we must take into consideration the earning power of the company; and the Postal company is going under. When a company cannot hold its own under circumstances such as those found in the middle of a war, what will it do in peacetime? That is the whole consideration. We have an opportunity here to save the employees and to save the communications system, and I say that it is important to save a telegraph communication system for the people of the United States.

Mr. LANGER. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Postal Telegraph Co. stock was quoted at 6⅛ just a short time ago. At the end of the year it had risen to 10, and now it is in the neighborhood of 12.

Mr. McFARLAND. Let me ask the Senator if that is not the preferred stock.

Mr. LANGER. The preferred stock, yes.

Mr. McFARLAND. Of course, they are anticipating the enactment of the pending bill. Perhaps they will get something out of it. I hope they will, but I do not want them to get it at the expense of the man who is employed, the laborer.

Mr. LANGER. At the same time, is it not true that Western Union stock has gone up from 20 to 30? Therefore it looks to me as though these companies were not in very bad shape.

Mr. McFARLAND. There is no question as to the financial condition of the Postal Telegraph Co. They are going in the hole at the rate of $300,000 a month. The Western Union are now in a little better condition. They do have some bonded indebtedness. We do not know what the condition of that company will be after the war. Everything has gone up a little. We have had a little inflation. Some may say we have had a good deal of inflation, but at least we have had enough to make the price of nearly everything rise somewhat.

Mr. LANGER. To go back to the Postal Telegraph Co., looking again at the financial statement, we find that as of December 31 last all they owed was about $14,000,000, and that included what they owed the Federal Government, and everyone else, and they have assets of $49,000,000. Is not that a fact?

Mr. McFARLAND. What company?

Mr. LANGER. The Postal Telegraph Co.

Mr. McFARLAND. They owe $9,000,000 to the R. F. C. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. LANGER. This is the financial statement of the company, placed before the committee.

Mr. McFARLAND. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. LANGER. From page 10 of the hearings on consolidations and mergers of telegraph operations.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is not a part of the hearing; that is a statement someone issued, is it not?

Mr. LANGER. It is the very statement the Senator from Arizona himself inserted today.

Mr. McFARLAND. What is that?

Mr. LANGER. It is found on page 10.

Mr. McFARLAND. I have it here before me. It was generally conceded that the Postal company is worth nothing now. No one appeared before our committee, no representative of any labor organization or anyone else, who did not admit that something had to be done with regard to the Postal Telegraph Co. Some would like to have us continue to subsidize them. But I hope we may avoid that by this legislation.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona admits that the Postal Telegraph Co. is bankrupt?

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. That it is losing money at the rate of $300,000 a month?

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes; approximately that.

Mr. MOORE. And that it owes the Government a sum of money which it will be unable to pay?

Mr. McFARLAND. That is correct.

Mr. MOORE. Then it would be desirable for the Western Union to take the Postal over and consolidate it into its facilities, and extend the employment of the men employed both in the Western Union and in the Postal, if it could do so. The Senator admits that?

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. That is what the Senator wants?

Mr. McFARLAND. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. The legislation proposed would be permissive, and if the Postal is going to fail anyway, what would be the difference if the Senator yielded on the 2-year provision, in place of imposing a 5-year period, which would probably be prohibitive on the Western Union?

Mr. McFARLAND. I could not agree that it would be prohibitive at all. I do not think it would be. As I pointed out several times, the protection would not all be in favor of the employers. The employees would be getting some protection. I would point to the figures just given by the Senator from North Dakota. The proposal before us is a 5-year proposal. A 5-year provision was adopted by the Senate at the last session, and in view of the adoption of that provision, and with the prospect of it becoming law and the prospects of the merger, the preferred stock went up.

Mr. LUCAS. What would these employees do if the Postal became bankrupt, and there were no merger?

Mr. McFARLAND. If it became bankrupt, they would be out, of course, and to prevent that condition arising is one of the objects of this legislation. We should not give all the protection to the company. Let us give part of it to the employees. Let us be fair to the employees.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona a question. I should like to know if the bill contains a definition of the word "carrier," such as found in the Communications Act of 1934. The reason I ask the question is that in my section of the country there are many small mutual telephone companies which carry Postal telegrams continually by phone. Is the definition of those carriers, as contained in the Communications Act of 1934, contained in the pending bill, if the Senator knows, and if he knows, I should like to inquire whether there is any possibility of such mutual telephone companies being included in the provisions of the measure, because the bill provides that any domestic telegraph carriers might merge their properties.

Mr. McFARLAND. I will answer the question by reading from subsection (2), page 12, as follows:

> (2) The term "domestic telegraph carrier" means any common carrier by wire or radio, the major portion of whose traffic and revenues from record communications is derived from the acceptance, transmission, reception, and delivery of such communications both originating and terminating within the continental United States, including a corporation owning or controlling any such common carrier.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments on page 7, line 6, page 8, line 6, and page 10, line 12, offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. Without objection, the three amendments will be voted upon en bloc. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. I do not know how he would vote if present. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is detained in his State on matters pertaining to agricultural problems.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are unavoidably detained.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is necessarily absent on official business. His general pair has been announced.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is necessarily absent on official business.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] are unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 49, as follows:

YEAS—29

So Mr. TAFT's amendments were rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. LANGER and Mr. AIKEN asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and will vote. I vote "yea."

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is my purpose, as soon as the business of the Senate for the day is concluded, to move to adjourn until Thursday. In order that Senators may know what the program will be, let me state that the Committee on Foreign Relations will meet on Wednesday to take action on the nomination of Mr. Edward J. Flynn to be Minister to Australia, and on Thursday will report to the Senate the result of its action in that matter. It is contemplated that the Flynn nomination will be taken up next Monday for consideration by the Senate.

I understand that the hearings are being printed. If they are not already available, they will be available before the Senate meets on Thursday, so that all Senators may have an opportunity to read them.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am advised that the printed hearings will be available tomorrow morning.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have made this statement in order that Senators may govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, January 28, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 25, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We praise Thee, our Father, that the truth of Thy Word includes the security of the present "Emmanuel, God with us." We rejoice that Thy Son is full of righteousness and grace and all the hopes of the human race are met in Him: Mountains rise and oceans roll, to sever us is vain. We pray that we may be shown how to walk the broad, spacious ways of life which lead from the heart of our Saviour into the soul of humanity. Oh, chart our course these days, leading us through the ever-widening spaces of cooperation until the gods of evil shall shiver and topple from their stained pedestals.

We pray that the riches of Thy spirit may keep us in the natural mood of our Lord, that all differences which spring from separations and self-aggrandizement may be done away. Grant that our people may be delivered from these perils, with clear judgment gathering strength and fighting doubts, appraising men as to whether they are right or wrong. Oh, let us all recognize clearly the claims of character, noble duty, and the service we owe to our generation. Through our only Mediator and Redeemer, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 22, 1943, was read and approved.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

JANUARY 22, 1943.

HON. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Accounts.

Very sincerely yours,
JAMES WOLFENDEN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. COMPTON I. WHITE, a Representative-elect from the State of Idaho, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

ELECTION OF COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution (H. Res. 73), which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The resolution was agreed to.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 23, 1943.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
United States Congress,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I herewith tender my resignation as a member of each of the following five committees:

Coinage, Weights, and Measures; Invalid Pensions; Public Lands; War Claims, Mines and Mining.

I want to make it plain that in taking this action I am not attempting to shirk my share of work. It is a fact, however, that the work of these committees is of no interest to people in my part of the country. Nor does the work of these committees have to do with the war, or national policy. Hence, if I tied myself down to committees of this type I would be serving interests which are of no concern to my people.

My district is predominantly agricultural. My whole personal background is agricultural. I have been intimately associated with farmers and farm organizations. I know little, if anything, of (1) mines and mining, (2) coinage, weights, and measures, (3) pensions, (4) war claims, and (5) there are no public lands worth mentioning in all my territory.

I requested an assignment to the Committee on Appropriations, where I hoped that I might serve in connection with agricultural appropriations, or to the Committee on Agriculture. I know that they are important committees, and that it is not ordinarily considered that a new Congressman has a right to demand them. I did not ask for them because of any personal interest or virtue of my own. I asked them in the name of my people, who form one of the largest and most important agricultural communities in the country. I felt that if I did not get some such assignment, then I could be more useful by leaving myself free to devote whatever talents and energy I possess to the war, to national affairs, and to things in which my people are directly concerned. I certainly should feel that I was not representing my people if I permitted myself to be tied down with the details of five such committees as these.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in taking this action I hold no resentment against anybody. I have been told that it is an unusual action for a new Congressman to take. If so, my answer is (1) that these are unusual times; and (2) that it ought not to be unusual for any Congressman to insist on devoting his time and energy to the purposes for which he is elected.

I assure you that in all matters which appear to me to be in the interest of the war effort, the welfare of my people, and the national good, you shall have my support.

Yours very truly,

JAMES H. MORRISON,
Member of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

MEMBERS OF BOARD OF VISITORS, UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of title 34, section 1081, United States Code, the Chair appoints as members of the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy the following Members of the House:

Mr. DELANEY, of New York; Mr. LYNDON B. JOHNSON, of Texas; Mr. SASSCER, of Maryland; Mr. LECOMPTE, of Iowa; Mr. CANFIELD, of New Jersey.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on January 26, on the completion of all legislative matters and any other special orders, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RULES AND REGULATIONS IMPOSED BY GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I wish at this time to commend my distinguished friend and colleague the gentleman from Virginia, Judge SMITH, for the proposed resolution which I am informed he will bring before the Rules Committee within the next few days authorizing a special committee to investigate the action of various departments and bureaus of the Government in issuing countless rules and regulations carrying with them severe penalties in many instances, which rules and regulations are without congressional authorization and tend to harass the people of this country.

At the opening of Congress our distinguished Speaker made very timely remarks along this line. And it is of urgent necessity that Congress act now to stop this usurpation of power on the part of these various department heads and bureaucrats—power which they have been gradually delegating unto themselves through recent years.

The President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy should, during this war period, exercise every power necessary to the early and successful termination of the war. I am convinced, however, that in various bureaus and offices and agencies there are those with many foolish and crackpot ideas which they are attempting to force upon the American people. Many of these fellows are taking advantage of the war and of the patriotism of our people in attempting to fasten upon this country a system of bureaucracy and paternalism which is destructive of our free institutions, and which is most repulsive to our people.

Now is the time for Congress to do something about this. We should not lose 1 minute in taking drastic action and I hope the resolution setting up this investigation will be speedily adopted by the Rules Committee and by this House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE JAY PIERREPONT MOFFAT

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, the Nation has suffered a grievous loss by the untimely death, at his post of duty, of Jay Pierrepont Moffat, of New Hampshire, its Minister Plenipotentiary to the Dominion of Canada. Of distinguished lineage—an ancestor was John Jay, our first Secretory of State—he had felt this as a call, not to privilege, but to service; and his life was one of untiring energy in his chosen career of diplomacy. Although his great abilities early brought him the confidence of those in high places, he never lost touch with the fountains of our national life; and he always won the enthusiastic regard of the American colonies in the foreign capitals where he was stationed, for his ardent Americanism and his constant attention to their interests.

Only recently there has appeared again in the press the perennial complaint that we have a Department of War, but no department of peace. Certainly Pierrepont Moffat considered that beyond the routine duties of the office, he had, as a Foreign Service officer, a real vocation as an agent of international understanding and good will. Had he lived, he would undoubtedly have played an important part in the difficult task of negotiating a peace that shall be lasting. It is in the nature of things that a career like his should not be much in the public eye; and the people at large may not recognize the reality of their loss. For himself, his life was singularly complete, each day's duty met as it came due; and had he lived out his span of life to the full, he could not have merited more completely than he does today the reward that is accorded to faithful service.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Yes.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I join in the tribute paid to Mr. Moffat by the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire. It was my privilege to know Mr. Moffat personally. I know the high esteem in which he was held by the State Department and all who knew him. The country has lost the services of a great and useful man in his passing and our Government can ill afford to lose one of his type at this time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by Adam Lapin, appearing in the Daily Worker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONTINUATION OF DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I am inserting the article to which I just referred from the Daily Worker in my remarks upon the theory that forewarned means forearmed.

The article states that a battle is on once more against the continuation of the Dies committee; that the battle is to be led by Philip Murray of the C. I. O.; and that the strategy is to be furnished by some so-called liberals in the House.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I had a special order for today following the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]. I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks at that point in the RECORD following the gentleman from California, and I yield back the time allotted to me.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE JAY PIERREPONT MOFFAT

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I also would like to pay my tribute to the late Jay Pierrepont Moffat, who died yesterday at his important foreign post of duty as Minister to Canada; for his wonderful life of service to our country. He was a descendant of the famous John Jay, Secretary of State during the Continental Congress and negotiator of the Jay Treaty with England in 1794. As a young lad he had a dream of following his ancestor in serving his country in our foreign service and in the State Department. He entered young and went, step by step, up the ladder in the foreign service, serving both as a consular officer and diplomatic officer. He demonstrated his love for America and his loyalty to the welfare and protection of America during his very fine service in the different nations of the world. It was always what is best for the United States. He was a true American.

Mr. Speaker, he was, although young, one of our ablest career officers and one of our greatest diplomats. His service proved the importance of appointing foreign service career officers instead of political appointees to represent the United States at foreign posts. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may insert as a part of my remarks a tribute paid Mr. Moffat by Secretary of State Hull.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The tribute paid by Secretary Hull follows:

Mr. Moffat's untimely death is a tragic loss to our country. He was the highest type of officer developed in a trained foreign service, and he died at the peak of his usefulness. He entered the foreign service in 1919 and served at many posts throughout the world. At every post he served with distinction. Everything he did, he did well. He was promoted through the various grades of the service as his experience broadened and his usefulness to his country increased.

Mr. Moffat served two tours of duty in the Department of State as an associate of mine and worked in daily contact with me for several years. He was one of my ablest advisers and closest personal friends. In May 1940 he was appointed Minister to Canada, one of our most important posts, where he had, since that time, represented our country with conspicuous ability and success.

Mr. Moffat's career will be an inspiration to the youth of the country. In his death our country has lost one of its ablest public servants from whom the highest accomplishments had come to be expected as a matter of course.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The Nation has lost in his untimely passing a great patriot, a great statesman, and a great diplomat. I, with countless others, mourn his passing as a warm personal friend.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an article from a newspaper.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and to include the text of a radio program in which I participated.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix on two subjects and to include therein certain statements and excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein a recent radio address.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE RUML PAY-AS-YOU-GO TAX PLAN

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, during the past few weeks there has been much criticism of the proposed Ruml pay-as-you-go tax plan on the theory that the Federal Treasury would lose substantial revenue if our Nation's tax clock were moved ahead 1 year. I am today placing in the RECORD a letter written by Mr. Beardsley Ruml, of New York, which goes into this matter thoroughly. He makes the direct statement that—

The gross loss will be more than offset by better tax collections and collection methods without increased burden on this account to any taxpayer.

In other words, the Federal Treasury would lose no revenue and the taxpayers of our Nation would be on a current basis, which would eliminate income-tax debt and do it without loss of revenue and with no additional burden on any taxpayer.

Mr. Ruml presented this letter and statement to a group of members of the American Institute of Accountants for their opinion as to whether or not his statement was correct. A large number of accountants have analyzed and studied the proposal and submitted letters stating his analysis is correct. The signatures of these accountants and the firms they represent are made a part of the letter I have submitted for the RECORD. I want to urge the membership of this House to study the letter closely.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and include a letter from Mr. Ruml of New York, which is also signed by a large number of other members of the American Institute of Accountants.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the special order granted to me to address the House today be transferred to tomorrow, to follow any other special orders that may have been previously granted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a resolution of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

COMMITTEE ON RULES—AUTHORIZATION TO EMPLOY CLERK-STENOGRAPHER

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I send a privileged resolution (H. Res. 50, Rept.

No. 15) to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise authorized by law compensation at the rate of $1,800 per annum for the employment of a clerk-stenographer to the Committee on Rules, effective from January 3, 1943.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON THE CIVIL SERVICE—FUNDS TO CONDUCT STUDY AND INVESTIGATION

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I send a privileged resolution (H. Res. 74, Rept. No. 16) to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, effective from January 3, 1943 the expenses of conducting the studies and investigation authorized by House Resolution 550 of the Seventy-seventh Congress and House Resolution 16 of the Seventy-eighth Congress, incurred by the Committee on the Civil Service, not to exceed $31,500 in addition to the unexpended balances of sums made available during the Seventy-seventh Congress for conducting the studies and investigation authorized by said House Resolution 550 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia unless otherwise officially engaged.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO STUDY AND INVESTIGATE RELATIONSHIP OF NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM TO SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution (H. Res. 75, Rept. No. 17), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the study and investigation authorized by House Resolution 294 of the Seventy-seventh Congress and continued by House Resolution 18 of the Seventy-eighth Congress incurred by the select committee appointed to study and investigate the national-defense program in its relation to small business in the United States, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $22,500, effective from January 3, 1943, in addition to the unexpended balances of sums made available during the Seventy-seventh Congress for conducting the study and investigations authorized by said House Resolution 294 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, including expenditures for the employment of experts, investigators, attorneys, clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or any subcommittee thereof conducting such investigation, signed by the chairman of the committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia unless otherwise officially engaged.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS—FUNDS TO CONDUCT STUDIES AND INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I send a privileged resolution (H. Res. 76, Rept. No. 18) to the desk, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That effective from January 3, 1943, the expenses of conducting the studies and investigations authorized by House Resolution 30 of the present Congress, incurred by the Committee on Naval Affairs, not to exceed $50,000, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee conducting such studies and investigations or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, unless otherwise officially engaged.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS—FUNDS TO CONDUCT STUDIES AND INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution (H. Res. 77, Rept. No. 19), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, effective from January 3, 1943, the expenses of conducting the studies and investigations authorized by House Resolution 30 of the present Congress, incurred by the Committee on Military Affairs not to exceed $50,000, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee conducting such studies and investigations or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, unless otherwise officially engaged.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on today after the disposition of other special orders, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the other special orders, I may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FLOODS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, information comes to me that there has been another disastrous flood in southern California. On last week, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, a terrific rainfall and windstorm hit the coast. In my home town of Pasadena, Calif., some 12 inches of rain fell; immediately behind it, on Mount Wilson, nearly 30 inches of rain fell.

It is unfortunate that the flood-control program of our Government which is being conducted there had to be curtailed because of the war, but certainly it is a most worthy project and I hope that it and other flood-control measures throughout the country will be resumed again immediately after the conclusion of the war.

[Here the gavel fell.]

REVISION OF PRICE-CONTROL ACT

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to announce that I have today introduced a bill which amends, or repeals, the Price Control Act in four particulars: First, is the clarification of the authority which the President arrogated to himself to limit wages and salaries; the second has to do with the regulation of O. P. A. in respect to compelling one-third of the purchase price of real property to be paid in cash; the third has to do with what we know as the snooping provision of the act, and it denies to O. P. A. the authority it now has to send out questionnaires by the thousands to merchants; the fourth provision of the bill has to do with the practice of accepting voluntary contributions to the Treasury in settlement for violations which it is alleged in some instances amount almost to a compounding of felonies.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, upon the conclusion of the legislative business and other special orders today, I may be permitted to proceed for 5 minutes and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

THE OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the Office of Price Administration is putting on a tremendous number of employees in the States, increasing the operation of the "Gestapo." The Hitler way of enforcement of that act has brought universal condemnation. The longer it is continued, the worse the spirit of the people is going to be. I hope that the new Administrator will find that he is going to be blamed for that kind of performance and will put his foot down on it before the Congress is required to operate on it.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The people will not blame him. They will blame the Congress, like they did in the last election.

Mr. TABER. It is about time that the Congress began to act, so far as the Office of Price Administration is concerned, and to do away with some of its nonsense.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that there is likely to be great suffering if people are refused oil because they have not converted to coal? In many instances they cannot get the coal and they cannot convert.

Mr. TABER. I expect that that condition does exist.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WEISS]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes on Tuesday next at the conclusion of other special orders heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an address by the Honorable ROBERT HALE, my colleague from Maine, on the occasion of the dedication of a marble bust of Thomas Brackett Reed, former Speaker of the House of Representatives, in the House Gallery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Maine [Mrs. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

(Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.)

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Memorial Resolution No. 1 and House Memorial Resolution No. 1 of the State of Montana may be included in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, it is my purpose today to discuss the national debt of the United States. Mr. Speaker, in the year 1800 the national debt of the United States amounted to $82,000,000. By 1835 that debt had been completely wiped out in the administration of President Andrew Jackson. At that time the United States was entirely free from debt.

AMERICA ONCE WAS FREE OF DEBT

First, may I say that that was due primarily to the conditions of that time and basically to the fact that the Federal Government had huge resources in the form of western lands which it was selling and which gave it a source of revenue never before known in the history of humanity and which probably never can be matched again.

By 1865, the close of the War between the States, the national debt was $2,677,000,000, but it would have been almost a half billion dollars more than that had President Lincoln not secured the issue of some $450,000,000 of so-called greenbacks as a partial means of paying for the war. By 1915 the debt had been gradually reduced until it stood at $1,191,000,000. At the close of World War No. 1, the national debt stood at $25,482,000,000, so that the increase during the World War No. 1 amounted to about $24,000,000,000 in round figures.

TOTAL WORLD WAR INCREASE LESS THAN AMOUNT OF SEVERAL SINGLE APPROPRIATION BILLS FOR THIS WAR

The point here is that the total increase in the public debt during World War No. 1 was considerably less than the amount of a number of single appropriation bills which this Congress has enacted for the purpose of fighting the present total war. In case anybody needs to have it said, which I hope they do not, may I say that this is only illustrative of the fact that the problem which America faces today in this total war is a problem of such tremendously greater magnitude than what it faced between the years 1914 and 1919 as to challenge our imagination in every respect.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman has just said that the Government was free from debt in 1835 which was due to the fact that we had at that time a great natural resource which the gentleman says we may never have again. "Never" is a long, long time. Cannot the gentleman think of any great natural resources which the Government has or may have comparable in potential value to the great amount of public land which we at that time had?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes, I can. I can think of resources in the field of power, resources in the field of other natural resources, which may be used for the benefit of all the people if some of us here are devoted to that cause. But I am not sure that any of them are quite comparable to the great area of unused public land which belonged to the Federal Government in the early nineteenth century, the sale of which brought great revenue to the Treasury. That never again can happen.

INCREASE IN DEBT UNDER HOOVER

In 1930 the public debt of America was $16,185,000,000. Remember, Mr. Hoover was President at that time. By the close of Mr. Hoover's Administration the national debt had gone to $22,538,000,000, an increase of $6,350,000,000 in those 3 years.

And the point here is that in spite of the fact that we had an administration in power at that time which was committed to a policy of "Government hands-off" in every respect, which attempted to reduce governmental expenditures as much as it could, nevertheless, in spite of or possibly because of those very policies the revenues of the Government went down so much faster than receipts that although there was no philosophy in the administration at that time of trying to support purchasing power in the Nation, nevertheless the public debt increased by over $6,000,000,000 in the 3 years, at the end of the Hoover administration. What were the forces that caused this? Basically, a need of the whole Nation for an additional supply of a medium of exchange and the fact that under our present practices the only way it could get that was by an increase in the debt burden.

NEW DEAL INCREASES

Between 1933 and 1940, which was what may be generally termed the period of the New Deal before we got into a pre-war economy, the public debt was increased from $22,538,000,000 to $42,445,000,000, a rough increase of $20,000,000,000.

Why did that take place? The philosophy that lay behind it was very briefly this: We had a great volume of unemployment. Business was at a low level. Obviously, we had a great power to produce that was not being used. If a draft of consumer demand could be brought to bear upon that unused productive capacity, it should bring about a recovery of employment. The facts of the matter are that it did, to a certain extent, accomplish that purpose, but that if this method and this method alone is used, even those colossal sums of money were insufficient.

The further fact is—and this is one of the main points of my speech—that that $20,000,000,000 increase in public debt should never have been interest-bearing public debt at all. For if a nation faces a situation where an increase in consumer demand is required in order to induce increased production and employment, there is no sense in a sovereign government's going into debt to private institutions to get them to create a medium of exchange in order to improve the economic circumstances of the entire nation. That is a job for the Government itself to do. And primarily, it is a responsibility of the Congress.

WORLD WAR NO. 2

Between 1940 and 1942 the public debt increased by $30,000,000,000 under the impact of the war preparation program. In the last fiscal year, between June 1942 and June 1943, it will probably happen that the debt will increase by $63,000,000,000, so that by June 30, 1943, it will amount to $135,000,000,000 in all. By the time the war has finally been won no one knows what the size of the debt will be, but at a conservative estimate we may assume, that it will be $200,000,000,000—and it may be $50,000,000,000 or $100,000,000,000 more than that.

INTEREST CHARGES

In the Budget presented to Congress by the President on January 8 he called for a $3,000,000,000 item for interest on that public debt. If the public debt does go to $200,000,000,000 before the end of the war, then interest on that sum at 2½ percent will amount to $4,500,000,000 per year. Taking, however, the interest burden even at present on that public debt, we find that it is in excess of 50 percent of the largest amount the Federal Government ever raised in revenue in any year prior to 1941, which was $5,600,000,000 in round figures in 1920. Even in 1941, when we had a national income vastly increased by the war preparations program, we raised something over $7,000,000,000 in total tax revenues.

NO DEFLATION MUST BE PERMITTED AFTER THIS WAR

The next major point I want to make is that if after this war shall have been won those responsible for public policy permit a deflation to take place such as took place in 1920, the net result of that deflation will be principally twofold; first, an immediate collapse of farm prices such as happened between 1920 and 1921, from which collapse farm prices have never recovered relative to industrial prices to this good day; and, second, it will multiply the real burden of that public debt by twice or 50 percent or 75 percent or whatever the amount of that deflation is. For with less money in circulation each dollar will be more valuable and hence each dollar of the debt will require that much more labor or goods to discharge it.

In other words, if we permit deflationary policies to be followed after the war, whatever the history during the war period, we will heap one injustice upon another.

Therefore, I believe it incumbent upon every Member of Congress to vow in his heart that after this war shall have been won we will not permit deflation of currency or credit. For if we do we will thereby increase the economic power of everybody who possesses money or the power to create it, but we will correspondingly injure every producer in the land. We must therefore bend every possible effort toward stabilizing the value of our dollar at whatever point it may have reached at that time.

SIGNIFICANCE OF INCREASES IN DEBT LIMIT

Now I want to contrast two debates which took place in the House and which most Members will remember. The first one had to do with a bill brought before the House by the Committee on Ways and Means for an increase of the statutory limit on the public debt from, as I recall, $50,000,000,000 to $65,000,000,000. When that bill came before the House there were still many who hoped that America might escape this war. The bill was debated at great length. Members got up and predicted bankruptcy for the Nation. There were many speeches. Finally the bill, after sharp debate, was passed, though there was a substantial vote against it.

A little bit later, when matters had proceeded further and it became more and more evident that America would be committed to the war completely, we passed another bill by a unanimous vote which raised the debt limit to $125,000,000,000. Every man who voted for that bill knew when he voted for it that he probably would be voting again to increase the debt limit even further before he was through.

PART OF THE JOB OF WINNING THE WAR IS TO MATCH TOTALITARIAN PRODUCTION

Why was there this difference? I think I can explain it. We knew that we were confronted with a great international danger and we knew that that international danger came from a very definite source.

It centered in two nations, Germany and Japan, and I shall refer now only to Germany. What was it that Germany had done? A lot of people have mistakenly said that Hitler had found out how to get along without gold. But Hitler seized every dollar of gold that he could get his hands on in every capital that he captured. Other people have said that Hitler had reformed the monetary system of Germany and had freed Germany from debt. I find no substantial evidence of that whatever—quite the contrary. Indeed, all I can find he has done is that by means of imposing dictatorial power on the financial system of Germany, he compelled a debt-money system to bring about full production for war. The German banking system profited but it became the slave of the state.

The point that I make is that the Nazis did accomplish one thing. They accomplished by means of their dictatorial power this one result, namely, that they were able to use the entire productive capacity of Germany to the full, for the purpose of preparing for and prosecuting their war. So we were up against a nation where there was no financial limit to the amount it would produce, no financial limit to the commitment of every bit of energy and industry in that country to the war. We knew that we had to compete against that sort of thing, and so we said whatever the cost may be, however high our debt must go, we would be committed to an economy in the United States which will take account not of financial limitations but only of physical limitations upon production for this war, and the needs of the people. To use the words of a prominent newspaper columnist, Germany had adopted an economy of things, and men, instead of an economy of money and finance. We knew we had to do the same thing, if we were to meet that challenge. So we did.

THE 1944 BUDGET

Now we find ourselves confronted with a national budget for the next year which calls for $4,124,000,000 for nonwar expenditures; for $3,000,000,000 for interest on the public debt, and for $97,000,000,000 for the cost of the war. I only hope that Members will cease attempting to get the American people to believe that the colossal burden of this public debt can be taken from their shoulders by economies in nonwar expenditures. When I say that I do not mean to say that I do not think Congress should scrutinize every dime of expenditure with the greatest care. But obviously, when the relation is 97 to 4, you cannot relieve the burden of the people very much—certainly you cannot remove the problem of this debt—by reduction of nonwar expenditures alone.

THE PROBLEM OF THE DEBT, LIKE ALL OTHER HUMAN PROBLEMS, CAN BE SOLVED

More important than anything else which I want to say is this. This situation is not hopeless because it cannot be hopeless. Never in all of the history of humanity has God confronted mankind with a problem that he could not solve and solve reasonably and well if he has the courage and the vision to attack it. This problem is not an insoluble problem, and it cannot be, and it is not beyond the capacity of this Congress to deal with it.

There has to be a means whereby the American people can see how they can earn their way out from under this debt. I think that is all we need—an assurance that that can be done. I want to tell you how it can be done. I will say some things that somebody may not agree with but I challenge them to think of this as I give the rest of my speech. I challenge them to ask themselves this question:

> Gentlemen, do you believe that a national debt of of two hundred, two hundred and fifty, or three hundred billion dollars, with interest charges per year on those three amounts of between four and a half and seven billion dollars can be either carried or liquidated out of taxation if we employ only the traditional nineteenth century financial methods as we are now doing?

If you believe that can be done, then there is no use listening to me. If you do not believe so, then I want to offer you a means which, in my judgment, is economically as sound as can be whereby you can guarantee your country against those two evils which may raise their heads—first, the evil of a deliberate inflation such as European nations suffered after the last war for the purpose of reducing the real burden of the debt; second, the danger of proposals for various types of repudiation of the debt. Those two devices, as far as I am aware, have rarely been used by nations without serious consequences to their political stability.

There is another way, as I said in a speech which I delivered a few days ago, which ought to guide the economic policy of this Congress, and that is this: That whenever the supply of needed goods exceeds the demand, always increase the demand of the people, and never reduce the over-all supply. I am not speaking of individual commodities. I am talking about over-all production. If we are to follow that rule, and if we see that the potential supply of commodities throughout the Nation is in excess of the effective demand of the people to support a full market for them, what should you do? We have but one answer at present, and that is to print Government bonds and sell those bonds to commercial banks for new deposits, which they write upon their books without cost to them, with which they buy the bonds. Thus the public debt is increased for one purpose. That purpose is not to borrow money from somebody who has that money in order that they may give up that money temporarily and let the Government use it. No. The purpose is to increase the total over-all amount of the medium of exchange in circulation, to stimulate the business activity of the entire Nation.

THE CENTRAL QUESTION OF THE FUTURE AND THE KEY TO THE DEBT PROBLEM

The great question is whenever we are confronted with the necessity of bringing the total over-all demand to an equality with supply, Is it necessary for a sovereign nation to contract interest-bearing debt? My answer to that is "no." I say that a nation must be free to draw upon its own credit in such a case. It must exercise its constitutional right to credit itself upon the books of its own treasury with an amount of new income to that treasury which corresponds to the percentage increase in its production or in its capacity to produce, and to do this, of course, without incurring additional debt.

For example, the average growth of the United States, the growth of its business, the growth of its commerce, the growth of its production has been 4 percent a year as an average throughout our history. If that 4-percent increase in production takes place, it is my contention that the Nation as a whole has a right to a 4-percent expansion of money in circulation, without the incurring of additional debt. That 4-percent increase should be accounted for as net income to our Treasury for the benefit of the American people, without tax burden, in order to maintain a balance between the volume of the circulating medium on the one hand and the volume of real goods and services upon the other. Thus were we to apply this one rule over a period of time the American people could earn their way out of debt simply by increasing their production of real wealth. And that, after all, is a sound way to do it, is it not?

To bring the matter into more familiar fields, perhaps, the Federal Reserve Board is now charged with the responsibility to accommodate business and industry, and at times when it is believed that additional money is needed in circulation, the Federal Reserve Board conducts open-market operations, and purchases bonds from the banks, transferring those bonds from the portfolios of the commercial banks to the portfolios of the 12 central banks, and putting more ready cash into the hands of the commercial banks in place of the interest-bearing securities.

That is supposedly a means of increasing money in circulation, giving the banks a greater incentive to lend money. Sometimes it works and sometimes it does not, but since the 12 Federal Reserve banks are private institutions, when that transfer of the bonds purchased with the credit of the American Nation by the Federal Reserve banks takes place, the size of the public debt is just as great as it was before. Nothing has happened except that we owe the money to the private 12 central banks instead of to the private commercial banks.

But when our national business has expanded so that we need any greater money circulation, our public debt ought to be reduced and those bonds should be canceled and retired out of the net result of the energy, the inventive genius and the labor of the American businessmen, industrialists, and farmers, and all the rest of us. If the 12 central Federal Reserve banks belonged to the whole American people as they should this very result would be achieved. That is the main reason I have advocated that step.

DEBT THAT OUGHT NOT TO BE DEBT

One-third of the public debt of the United States as of August 1941, which was substantially before the great war boom came upon us, or $22,000,000,000, was debt which had been contracted not by the sale of Government securities to people who gave up money to buy them, but which had been contracted by the process of selling bonds to banks which created deposits with which to buy them. In other words, bonds sold by a sovereign government to private financial institutions for new money which they created.

In 1942 alone approximately $9,750,000,000 was added to this total. Roughly one-third of the public debt then is of this character, which, as I said, in my humble opinion, never should have been interest-bearing public debt at all.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The effectiveness of the gentleman's argument, if it is effective, is found in the increase in the circulating media, incident to the pyramiding of profits by the Federal Reserve banks in consequence of the practice to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No, I do not care about the profits of the banks. I am concerned solely with their power to control the economic life of the Nation by controlling the volume of our money based on our debt to them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If it is not profitable to the Federal Reserve banks to do it, then there is no incentive. I am not criticizing the gentleman's position; I am commenting upon it.

What has been the increase in the circulating media of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve banks since the abnormal increase in the national debt started 10 years ago? Can we get figures as to that?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am not sure I can answer the gentleman off-hand. He has asked me, of course, a very difficult question, one that would have to be looked up and I want to be sure that I understand it. Does the gentleman want to know what the increase in money in circulation in the last 10 years has been?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think we can sum it up this way: Can the gentleman tell the House in substance on his contention that banks pyramid their cash for the purpose of purchasing Government bonds, how much cash has been put in circulation in addition to our normal needs for the purpose of pyramiding Government bond holdings by the banks?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I do not think that up until the time of the war enough additional money had been put in circulation to overcome the depression.

Let me say in the first place that I am not attacking banks and bankers. They are operating under a system that was set up by act of Congress, and they are doing a perfectly normal thing; in the last few years they have been given the choice either of making venture loans or engaging in the very safe business of creating money and buying Government bonds. Which would you choose? I think I know which I would choose if I were a conservative-minded banker.

When the gentleman refers to pyramiding I take it he refers to the fractional reserve system, which means that if required reserves are 20 percent and a bank has reserves of shall we say $1,000,000, it may then have deposits on its books of $5,000,000. Therefore, if at any given date it has deposits amounting to only $3,000,000, it would be in a position to purchase $2,000,000 additional of Government bonds on the basis of its reserves and thus to create new bank deposit money which could be put into circulation by the Government and used in the transaction of business. But this would not necessarily bring about any increase of cash in circulation. Other factors govern that. The gentleman would, of course, agree to that.

The thing I am contending for is not to make banking unprofitable, not to take away from banks an opportunity to make money, but on the contrary, to see that we pay banks for the services they render instead of enabling them to make money out of creating money which the Government itself ought to create. I think we should pay banks for the services they render. We pay the dentist when he pulls our teeth, although sometimes we may not like to very much. We pay the grocer for the groceries he delivers to us; we pay the teacher for teaching our children; but when it comes to a bank, many of us expect to get the services of banking without paying any charge for its clerical services. We should pay for those services and we should relieve the American people of the necessity of contracting a huge interest-bearing debt to private banks when they need as a whole nation an additional volume of money in circulation.

During a war our whole policy must of course be completely reversed. I am talking here today about a long-range policy of meeting this national debt. During war we need precisely the opposite policy, for during war we have a surplus of purchasing power coupled with an artificial and drastic reduction of the volume of consumer goods available. What is needed in wartime is heavy taxation, a compulsory savings program, and things like that in order to do precisely the same fundamental thing; namely, to maintain the value of the medium of exchange, a stable relationship between the volume of money on the one hand and the flow of real goods, wealth, and labor upon the other. I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the gentleman and I are in accord that as the Federal debt increases there is a tendency on the part of the circulating media, cash, we will say, to depreciate in value.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That all depends.

Mr. WOLCOTT. All right; as a general rule.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It depends on the increase of the production of goods.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It depends upon how close a valuation there is between cash, credit, and the national debt.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No; I would not agree to that. I think it depends upon the relationship between the increased money on the one hand and real goods on the other.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; all right. Now, in order that the national debt may not be used to freeze up the investment capital and the purchasing power which should be available to purchase those goods according to this suggestion of the gentleman, which is very worthy, that we increase production to narrow the differential between goods and prices, does not the gentleman believe that we could do that first by displacing the public debt from the circulating media and provide for the security of the Federal Reserve by the issuance of Federal bonds?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman wants to know if we could not divorce the public debt from the circulating medium.

OUR NATIONAL MEDIUM OF EXCHANGE MUST NOT BE TIED TO DEBT

My contention is that we ought not only to divorce the circulating medium, whether cash or credit, completely from the national debt but we ought also to divorce it from the lending of money. The matter of lending money, the volume of loans of banks to private individuals or to the Federal Government ought to bear no intimate relationship or cause-and-effect relationship to the volume of money that we have in circulation; and yet today the volume of money in circulation depends directly on the volume of debt of the American people, either as a government or as individuals, and the extent of the increase of the Government debt is usually a reflection of the fact that private debt has not increased as fast as it needs to to keep up with the increase in our potential production.

The problem of even this huge national debt can be solved, but only if we apply a constitutional mandate to our action. That mandate is this:

> The Congress shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the words of the Constitution of the United States. They are really the text of my speech.

[Here the gavel fell.]

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE COMPLAINT AGAINST ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I invite the attention of the House to a resolution I offer today for the preservation of a free press in America, as it was guaranteed in the first amendment to the Constitution. Specifically, I ask your support of my proposal to create a select committee of the House to investigate the circumstances which led the Department of Justice to bring a complaint against the Associated Press for alleged violation of the antitrust laws.

Let me say at the outset that a resolution likewise authorizing an investigation of this matter was offered to the House on Thursday last, January 21, by my esteemed colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, Hon. PAUL W. SHAFER. I want to say that my colleague's resolution and my own are in no wise conflicting. In fact, his purpose and mine are identical. Whereas the original resolution would direct that the investigation be undertaken by the Judiciary Committee, my proposal would create a special committee to conduct the investigation.

While the matter in question may be considered to be properly within the province of the Judiciary Committee, there appear to be factors indicating that this is more than a routine court procedure, or than an ordinary civil action brought by the Department of Justice in the regular administration of Federal law. I believe that this action directly and vitally touches basic private rights specifically guaranteed in the Bill of Rights in a way which should make it of paramount interest to the whole House.

I foresee a further reason why this subject may more fittingly be placed in the hands of a select committee than with the Committee on the Judiciary. This important standing committee deals regularly and continuously with matters pertaining to our Federal court system in such a close relationship that its members might feel constrained to avoid such action as is proposed while the matter is pending before the courts, lest there be undue influence upon the courts implicit in their action. That implication can be entirely avoided if an inquiry is conducted by a select committee.

The House is undoubtedly familiar with the much-publicized suit against the Associated Press filed in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, on August 28, last. Burden of the complaint is that the Associated Press illegally restricts the use of its news-gathering and news-dispatching facilities; that Associated Press has no legal right to choose and restrict its membership, or to require its participating member newspapers to furnish locally gathered news to the membership of the association.

The House is also undoubtedly familiar with the counter charges and complaints which have arisen against the Department of Justice as a result of this action against the Associated Press, for publishers without regard to their immediate relation to the case, have boldly and vigorously denounced the action as a direct attack upon the American free press, or as an effort to control and direct wire services for the special benefit of publishers who are administration supporters. The unadorned facts in the case convince me that either or both counter charges may be justified.

In the first place, the type of service which an association of newspapers accomplishes in an organization such as the Associated Press is by no means new in principle, or so exclusive in operation as to destroy competitor publishers. In all the years that news has been transmitted in associations or syndicates, only a few publishers have sought to test the validity of such services as the Associated Press. In the few instances where disappointed publishers have sought relief through antitrust action, the Department of Justice has refused to find the association method of collecting and distributing news a violation of the Antitrust Act. Why, then, should the Department of Justice now press this action, unless it is motivated by a hidden desire to bring the American press under the control and direction of the central government or to favor, for political reasons, certain newspapers?

In the second place, the character of this news service, while distinctly unlike other business enterprises in some respects, no more violates the spirit of our antitrust laws than many other common and accepted American business practices. The Associated Press is by no means the only source of telegraphic news service. There are two other similar services regularly collecting and distributing news in a very similar way, and in addition, there are numerous syndicated feature services available to any publisher who desires them. Finally, no publisher is denied the right to maintain his own special correspondents and news bureaus. How, then, can the Department of Justice support the charge that the Associated Press rules impose unreasonable restraints upon any publisher who is denied its services? I contend that it is just as logical to say that a motorcar company, or any other manufacturer or service organization distributing its goods or services on an exclusive basis, is fully as guilty of antitrust violation as the Associated Press. Would it, in your opinion, make sense for the Department of Justice to attack General Motors because that organization refuses to give a person half of a sales territory developed by an already established dealer? Of course not. Even the men who designed this action against Associated Press would laugh such a person out of their offices and tell him that if he could not sell Chevrolets to try Fords or Plymouths, or even another line of business.

If there is actually nothing in the activities of the Associated Press which denies to nonmembers the right to gather, distribute, and publish news; if there is nothing in its operating policies actually inconsistent with long-established American principles of business, just what is it that the Department of Justice attempts to prove or to accomplish in this action? Has it really found a point at issue here which has long been overlooked or rejected in other administrations? Has it a just complaint, or is there, on the other hand, real basis for the fears that this is a designed and deliberate attack upon the guaranties of the first amendment to the Constitution? Or, finally, is there any merit in the charges commonly heard that this action is founded on the desire of this administration to promote the selfish interests of certain publishers who promise to be blind followers and supporters of a political administration in payment of special privileges secured?

However you look at this picture, you must be impressed with the thought that there are factors here which do not meet the eye. This is not an ordinary suit, based upon the accepted meaning of the antitrust laws. Neither is there anything new or different in the practices of the defendants which would seem to warrant this attempt to impose an entirely new interpretation of our antitrust laws. Under the circumstances, there appears to be sufficient basis for the charges arising against the Department of Justice to warrant a full and careful review of all the factors involved in this action. Under any circumstances, we must jealously guard the freedoms guaranteed in the first amendment to the Constitution and restated by the President in his words of promise to the entire world. But now, more than ever, as we work under the blackout of censorship which necessarily limits the right of free speech and free press, we certainly must be zealous to allow no unwarranted infringement of these rights.

The American press has demonstrated over and over again its thorough loyalty. Both before and since the outbreak of war, it has cooperated magnificently in its meticulously careful handling of strategic news, and in its furtherance of our defense and war efforts. It has in every way fully justified the confidence and trust placed in it. It certainly deserves better from the American people than this reward which the administration has prepared for it unless there are circumstances supporting this complaint which have entirely escaped us. I hope the House will see fit, therefore, to undertake a searching review of the whole matter.

ITALY'S SAD PLIGHT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes, if there is no objection from any of those who have special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the capture of Tripoli is a bad blow to the Axis, and is a stunning blow to the Italians. It is apparent from news items that the Italian people did not know of the danger of its capture. Its capture means the fall of the last bastion of the Italian Empire in Africa.

But more, the defeat of Rommel's army and its hasty retreat ought to convey to the people of Italy a greater story—that the Nazis, in a pinch, think only of themselves. Rommel's only interest was to save as many Germans as he could. He left his Italian allies to their fate. His disregard of the welfare of the Italian soldiers engaged in the battle of Africa ought to open the eyes of the people of Italy to the fact that the Nazis have a cold, inhuman regard, not only of those they conquer, but, also, in a pinch, of their own allies.

A Fascist spokesman in Rome Saturday said over the radio:

> The eyes of all Italians are turned on Libya as each one asks himself anxiously, "What is happening there?" Well, there is only one answer. We are fighting, fighting harder than ever, and desperately, against overwhelming strong enemy forces. More than this we cannot, at this moment, say.

Yes; something more could be said. The people of Italy could be told, and we should tell them from outside of Italy that the Nazi forces in Africa deserted the Italian soldiers. Rommel thought only of the Germans, and to save as many as he could.

Yes; on the Russian front, the same thing is happening to the Hungarians, the Rumanians, and other non-Germans, most of whom are fighting for Nazi Germany against their will.

The people of Italy and these other countries should awaken to what has happened and is happening to their own people. In Italy, the Fascist regime is dominated by Nazi Germany. For all practical purposes Italy is another conquered country. It has been bled and it will continue to be bled, as long as the people of Italy remain passive to Nazi control, and as long as Nazi Germany can use Italy and its people.

If the people of Italy did not know it before they must know it now—that Nazi Germany thinks only of itself.

Mussolini's boastful dreams are over. Hundreds of thousands of Italians have been killed, wounded, and captured. Italy has been bled in every other respect. Its soldiers have been left to their fate—deserted by the Germans whenever the going is bad. Italy and its people face a dreadful future.

When the going is rough, the Nazis will desert the Italians in Italy proper just as quickly as they deserted the Italian soldiers in Africa.

The question that interests many persons is, "How long will the people of Italy stand this situation? How long will they continue to permit themselves to be deserted?"

One thing is certain: If Italy capitulated to the United Nations the fate and future of Italy and its people would be much better than continuing under the domination of the Nazi war machine.

The desertion in Africa of the Italian soldiers by Rommel should be stressed in Italy by the propaganda agencies of the United Nations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] is recognized for 15 minutes.

PAY-AS-YOU-EARN PERSONAL INCOME TAX

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, the President has presented to the Congress a Budget exceeding $100,000,000,000. On January 19 the national debt was $109,509,275,786.72. The American people will be called upon to pay taxes to the full limit of their ability in order that as large a portion of this huge war bill as possible may be met from current income. It is important, therefore, to do everything within our power, Mr. Speaker, to perfect our tax structure so that this immense burden resting upon the taxpayers may be borne with a minimum of suffering and hardship.

To this end the Congress and the American people are deeply interested in the proposal to abandon our archaic method of collecting personal income taxes a year and a quarter after the taxes have been imposed upon the taxpayer, and substituting therefor a pay-as-you-go, or a pay-as-you-earn, program collecting the taxes currently; that is, the 1943 taxes, for instance, would be collected in 1943 and not in 1944. This plan is known as the Ruml plan, due to the fact that Mr. Beardsley Ruml, chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, advanced the proposal to the United States Treasury and to the Senate Finance Committee last year. Under it the 1942 taxes would be abated. This plan is applied to individuals only and not to corporations. As originally proposed it did not include the collection-at-source provision. Its objective is to put personal income taxes on a current basis without paying 2 years' taxes in one. Mr. Ruml himself said in discussing it on the C. B. S. network January 16 last:

> The answer is as simple as daylight saving. Let us turn our tax clocks ahead 1 year. The taxes we have paid last year out of our 1942 income are taxes on our incomes received in 1941. We can best solve the problem now by recognizing these 1942 payments to be taxes on 1941 as they really are; and by beginning 1943 by paying on 1943, thereby dropping out the year 1942 from the tax calendar forever.

This plan has been defined as follows:

> Individuals will pay income taxes during a given year on that year's income, determined tentatively by the preceding year's income and subject to year-end adjustment. Taxes for 1942 are waived.

It will be recalled that our first endeavor to levy an income tax ran afoul of the Federal Constitution and it became necessary to amend the Constitution in order to avail ourselves of the income-tax principle. Fundamentally it is based on the ability of the taxpayer to pay, and at the same time giving the taxpayer the opportunity to share in the responsibilities of government by helping to pay for its operation by contributing a fair share of his income with as little hardship as possible.

When the income tax law was passed in October 1913, unfortunately it was provided that the first tax should be collected in 1914 but should be considered as a 1913 tax and should be based on income for the previous year 1913. Since that time we have always been a year behind in paying income taxes. It was an erroneous plan to call this tax the 1913 tax rather than a tax for the year 1914, which in fact it was. It results in great hardship to taxpayers and heavy financial loss to the Government.

In theory a citizen pays taxes to his Government each year measured by his ability to do so for the purpose of securing the advantages of living under the protection of his Government. It is erroneous to assume that any individual citizen having paid income taxes during his entire lifetime while receiving taxable income has not discharged the full duty resting upon him as a citizen in helping to defray the expenses of his Government. Under our present law he not only pays during his entire lifetime on taxable income but his Government stands at his open grave seeking an additional year's taxes from his estate. This extra post-mortem income tax, it should be remembered, is in addition to an estate tax or inheritance tax levied against his estate upon his death.

The main objection which has been urged against the proposal for pay as you earn or current payment of personal income taxes is that the 1942 taxes must be waived or an onerous burden placed upon taxpayers of paying 2 years' taxes in 1. The United States Treasury has opposed the proposal for this reason, and it continues to oppose it. It does, however, recognize the value of changing over to the current-payment plan and has even suggested the postponement of the 1942 liability or the rebating of a portion thereof and the collection of the balance in installments spread over a period of years. It would seem, however, that the taxpayers as a group having to meet the large exactions for taxes under our present war conditions should not be called upon to pay an additional tax during the same period, or should not be required to meet such an obligation in the distant future.

A savings clause could be included in the proposed law providing that in any event the 1943 tax of any individual should not be less than it would have been under our present law. This proviso would take care of windfall cases where taxpayers made large incomes in 1942 and had no income during 1943, or smaller incomes than in 1942. In any event the law should be framed to give adequate protection to the men in our armed forces. This would meet the objection urged by the Treasury Department, as set forth by Mr. Randolph Paul, General Counsel, in his statement of December 8, which appeared in the Washington Post December 17 last, when he said:

> The Treasury has opposed the original Ruml plan for several reasons. This plan does not, in fact, put the taxpayer on a current basis; it merely changes labels on the income-tax payments he is now making. By canceling a year's tax liability it gives a windfall to persons whose incomes were abnormally high in that year.

Mr. Speaker, the consideration that should control us in adopting a tax program should be to provide the maximum of tax revenues with the least burden upon the taxpayers. The present plan of collecting a year or more after the tax is imposed is indefensible. As a class, income taxpayers pay their taxes from current income, and such taxes should be collected currently. There are some 35,000,000 taxpayers under the present personal-income-tax program; 9,000,000 new taxpayers. Even though there would be individual cases where windfalls would result to the taxpayer by shifting to the pay-as-you-earn method of collection, the great advantage accruing to the other taxpayers would completely offset such advantage in a few individual cases.

The waiver of the 1942 taxes by adopting this proposal coupled with a withholding at source provision, it is believed, will not result in any financial loss to the Federal Government. The Treasury program would not be disrupted, because Treasury financing is based on tax income received and not on tax debts. As pointed out under this proposal, taxes would be paid in 1943 and in larger amounts under the proposed plan than under the existing tax program, and the Government would continue to collect from every taxpayer as long as he lives and continues to receive a taxable income. The only apparent loss would be at his death or upon failure to receive taxable income. That loss, however, would be spread over a generation or more of taxpayers and would cover a period of 25 to 50 years. Furthermore, the additional taxes collected and savings made by the Treasury under the pay-as-you-earn provision would more than offset this apparent loss. Those taxpayers who hereafter die while this plan is in operation, leaving estates subject to an estate or inheritance tax, will still be contributing through their estates to the Federal Government on any enrichment such a taxpayer might have received by reason of the abating of the 1942 tax.

The present personal income-tax plan of always being a year or more behind in the payment of taxes is outmoded and indefensible. It keeps our taxpayers in hot water, always in debt, and subject to continuous worry as to how they will pay this year's taxes next year when the tax collector calls. They are always paying for a dead horse. A pay-as-you-earn plan with collection at source will relieve these millions of taxpayers of the unnecessary worry and hardship. It will bring to them peace of mind and remove the ever present specter of a tax debt staring them in the face. It will also be of equal advantage to the Government. It will provide a continuous stream of tax dollars coming into the Treasury currently as the taxes are imposed and as income is earned. Collecting at the source will relieve the Treasury of trouble and expense in following up and collecting delinquencies and prevent more taxpayers from escaping their tax liabilities. Uncle Sam, by necessity, is going to exact as heavy tax payments as the traffic will bear anyway to meet the war demands. Shifting 1942 taxes and adopting a current payment system will simplify the procedure and will aid materially in financing the war. It will not only be a welcome relief to overburdened taxpayers, but will help their morale in the big task of providing the sinews of war.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that this House will enact at an early date a law providing for the current payment of personal income taxes, with a withholding-at-the-source provision, and that it may be put into effect at the earliest practical time, not only to bring relief to the great body of overburdened taxpayers of our country, but also to help fill our Treasury with tax dollars for the successful prosecution of the war.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. I agree with the gentleman that we ought to transfer from the year behind to the current-year method of collecting income taxes, and I want to commend him for a strong statement to that effect. I cannot agree with the gentleman in regard to some other things. The gentleman implies that there is no other alternative in order to make this change but that we must collect 2 years in one, the 1942 and 1943 taxes this year. I think there is another alternative.

Mr. ANGELL. May I say to the gentleman that was not my complete statement. I said the Government could try to collect them all in 1 year, or else apportion the 1942 taxes over a number of years, or remit in part and apportion the rest.

Mr. MURDOCK. I am glad to get straight on that. I think that is another alternative which I would favor, if the gentleman will elaborate upon it.

I want to ask the gentleman, Do we not have, at least in some of the States, the sale of tax anticipation bonds? For instance, I know of a State which in time of depression sold a special bond issue known as tax-anticipation bonds and these were a lien upon the taxes of a given year. If those taxes had not been collected, there would have been nothing to pay the bonds for tax-anticipation bonds constitute no lien upon the State's other resources. If the taxes for that year had been abated or forgiven, the bondholders would have been out of luck. They would not have been paid. As I see it, all United States bonds are in a sense tax-anticipation bonds. I feel that if we forgive the taxes for any given year we are jeopardizing the credit of the Nation just to that extent.

Mr. ANGELL. I may say to the gentleman, unfortunately that is not the position of the Federal Government. It bases its operations upon tax receipts and not upon tax debts or taxes to be collected. There is only available to it the taxes that are received and for that reason the principle to which the gentleman refers would not apply, in my judgment. In view of the fact that from 70 to 75 percent or more of the people pay their taxes from current income, and that in this year and the next several years we are going to have to pay everything that we can stand to take care of current taxes, it is my view that it is an idle attempt to put an additional year on the already heavily burdened taxpayers of this year or to spread it over a period of years. That is the very thing we are trying to avoid. We are trying to relieve the people of this unnecessary worry. As long as we collect from an American citizen a personal income tax for every year of his life, why should we say to his relatives at his death, and to his heirs or to his estate, "Pay another year of taxes in addition to the heavy inheritance or Federal estate taxes"?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; this survival tax must be heavy but not too heavy. Without increasing any individual's yearly income-tax burden above what it would be with 1942 forgiven, I would not forgive 1942 but amortize that tax over a number of years so that a fractional part of this 1942 tax would be included in each yearly payment for a period.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I want to compliment the gentleman from Oregon on his fine statement. It shows that he has made a thorough study of this problem, and he has demonstrated by his statement that there are only two ways to get the taxes, either move the tax clock ahead or collect the taxes 2 years in 1, or spread it over a period of years.

Mr. ANGELL. The gentleman is absolutely correct in his concluding statement.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes, and at that time to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a report of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries concerning the South Portland Shipbuilding Corporation which will exceed the 2-page limitation, at a cost estimated by the Public Printer to be $247.50.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMAS of Texas). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from a newspaper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter received from a constituent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware?

There was no objection.

CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I am going to address the House on a very important subject matter, the establishment of a separate committee to deal with civil aeronautics. I am glad that the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], and the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], both members of the Committee on Rules, as well as the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS], one of the authors of this proposal and also a member of the Committee on Rules, are present to hear what observations I have to make on this subject.

Mr. Speaker, there have been introduced at this session thus far eight resolutions designed to create a permanent standing committee on civil aviation.

According to the phraseology of some of these resolutions, whether or not there would be encroachment upon the prerogatives of the Military and Naval Affairs Committees is open to question.

As to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, I should say that committee would be stripped of all of its civil aviation jurisdiction.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has general jurisdiction of bills affecting domestic and foreign commerce—except such as may affect the revenue—and the two standing defense committees—Military and Naval—have jurisdiction of all legislation relating to the military and naval establishments.

Very frankly, I am willing to admit that when we again shall be at peace, it may be that we shall need to sit down and canvass the whole aviation picture and redraft our mode of legislative approach, but today, in the midst of war, any disturbance of presently prescribed procedure would not prove to be a step forward, but rather a move that would tend to create confusion, occasion delay, and thereby interfere with the war's vigorous prosecution.

There is no civil aviation in the United States today. The military is in complete control, as it should be, and as it will be again, should we become involved in another war after this one.

Production is in control of the military and operations are in control of the military. Every airplane, despite its designed use, is a potential military asset or weapon. Our peacetime air liners have become troop, cargo, and essential defense and nondefense personnel conveyors.

Privately owned planes are employed upon auxiliary scouting and observation missions. Flight by any, except in certain exempt areas, is prohibited by the military or is controlled by the military. There practically exists today no civil aviation in a peacetime sense in this country.

The Congress has established in recent years a Civil Aeronautics Administration and a Civil Aeronautics Board.

That legislation originated in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—not a special committee on civil aviation, and for it the country should be profoundly grateful to that committee's great chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], and to his committee colleagues, for their wisdom and foresight. Its value in this war situation has proved to be immeasurable.

The civilian pilot training program, the development of landing areas, the installation of air navigation facilities and the development thereof, including communications and directional guidance, and the accomplishments of the Civil Aeronautics Board, have all been of the greatest value to the country in the prosecution of the war, and every phase of the work of these agencies today is performed under the closest kind of cooperation with our military and naval air arms. In time of war, in fact, they may be said to be adjuncts of our defense arms, like the Coast Guard, for example, is of the Navy. They are part and parcel of the defense establishments.

There must be this close relationship and military dominance in time of war, and, in time of peace, that which we do must have relation to possible war conditions and demands.

Our progress in aviation has been phenominal. It is not all due to legislation. Much of it has been due to the force, and drive, and vision of our enterprising industrialists.

Civil and military development is closely interwoven.

Development of all types of planes has a direct relationship, and particularly is this true when we get into the heavy types.

We have a National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, the Army and Navy each engages in research, and industry, I dare say, has done as much or more than these three both in fundamental and applied research and in development of the art generally.

What would be the jurisdictional subjects, then, of a standing committee on civil aviation? The commerce side of the picture is now in most capable hands. I see nothing, therefore, but the private flier, and he is out of the picture until the war is over.

Aviation, we all know, has advanced by leaps and bounds. It will continue to grow. After the war it may become the chief common carrier within and to points without our borders.

All signs point to its wide use by individuals, either for pleasure or transportation in place of or as an additional means over the automobile. It is conceivable that there may then arise a need for legislation which goes beyond the jurisdiction of existing committees. I maintain that that need is not now present.

In the midst of war, why should we be changing our rules to give jurisdiction to a committee "on aviation," over aviation subjects, "including all commercial and civil aviation and including their relationship with or between Army and naval air services"? That is the phraseology of the Fish resolution, the Hinshaw resolution, the Nichols resolution, the Randolph resolution, and that, substantially, is the tenor of the several other resolutions.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. That is not the phraseology of the resolution I asked the Committee on Rules to consider.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is the one the gentleman introduced on January 6.

Mr. NICHOLS. I introduced two resolutions.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. NICHOLS. One of them had nothing to do with the relationship of commercial and civil aviation to the Army and naval air services.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The resolution the gentleman introduced on January 6 is exactly as I have stated.

Mr. NICHOLS. But it is not the resolution I asked the Committee on Rules to consider.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In addition, the gentleman introduced a resolution for the establishment of a committee on civil aeronautics and did not define its jurisdiction.

What does civil aviation comprise? Does it embrace manufacture? Does it embrace commercial aviation in time of war, when it virtually is under control of the military? Does it embrace air navigation? Does it include the Federal Airways System, particularly to Alaska, Hawaii, and other Pacific islands, and the Caribbean area, solely of use and value to the military in time of war?

And what is embraced by "relationship with or between Army and naval air services" We are at war. Do we want to have another legislative agency established that will have a voice in legislating directly or indirectly for the defense establishments?

I do not want to see Congress do a foolish thing. The war is not over in any sense. God only knows when it will be over. Our chief concern just now should be in doing those things which will hasten its conclusion; not to delay it.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Just as a matter of information, may I ask the gentleman what committee of the House has jurisdiction over the matters to which the gentleman has just referred, civil airways, airports, and so forth?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. One of the most outstanding committees of the Congress, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, a group of as brilliant men as sit on the floor of this House. What they have accomplished has been of the greatest value in the prosecution of this war.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Does the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Military Affairs have anything to do now with the subjects to which the gentleman has referred, or are they entirely under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Civil aeronautics and military aeronautics are so interwoven that, particularly in wartime, a new committee should not be established to deal with that question.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Why?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. For the reasons I have just stated.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. The gentleman has not given a good reason.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It may not sound good to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut, but it sounds good to me.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I do not want to offend the gentleman. The gentleman cannot praise the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for their 1938 act in more vigorous language than I.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Then why does the gentleman propose to take it away and set up to deal with that subject matter a new group that has no knowledge of it?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I can answer that question in a simple sentence.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman has received permission to address the House later today. He can answer it then.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. The gentleman does not want an answer.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; we want this question debated fully and it will be debated fully.

Instead of a greater division of control in the Congress, we should be striving for greater unity of control. That is the way to hasten the day of victory. We are prone to criticize lack of unity downtown and on the battle fronts. We are continually hearing complaint of the superimposement of activities upon established executive agencies and of the decentralization of existing agencies. Let us begin at home and have more unity in the control of our legislation bearing upon the prosecution of the war.

I have pending before the Committee on Rules myself a resolution seeking to have greater unity of action and legislative direction of defense programs by our Military and Naval Affairs Committees. We need more teamwork, more pulling together, more seeing eye to eye here in this House, to bring this war to a speedy close. That should be our main concern, and I submit that these pending proposals to create another jurisdiction over aviation matters, inseparable in their civil and military phases in time of war, would be a delaying action which this House should not for a single moment countenance.

When the peace has come, and that will be time enough, the leadership on both sides can get together and determine whether or not there is ample warrant further to divide present jurisdiction or create new jurisdiction. It would not be in the interest of national defense to do so at this time.

For all those who will hear there is gaining throughout the land in rising volume a pulse beat and an undertone which unmistakably demand that we representatives of the people must stop government as usual and concentrate on streamlining our efforts toward winning the war.

This resolution to create an additional committee to regulate aviation should not be approved because it is inconsistent with that undertone and that pulse beat.

Here we are in the midst of a war to the death. Millions of our men are in it. Hundreds of thousands of them are on foreign soil. Thousands have already made the supreme sacrifice. In these circumstances business as usual has stopped. Now it is the deadly serious business of kill or be killed.

These men in the armed services, and the loved ones they left behind them, and all the other patriotic Americans helping in the defense program, have every reason to expect and every right to insist that government shall not continue as usual, that Congress shall stop creating new committees in the House, new units, new divisions, new bureaus, and agencies, with all the confusing regulations, questionnaires, and paraphernalia they entail, and shall instead concentrate a maximum effort on winning the war.

If we do not do this, I do not want to be here to face the disillusionment, dissatisfaction, and bitterness which will be in the hearts of those boys who are fortunate enough to come back from the hell of Guadalcanal and the other fronts where men are fighting and dying.

In Georgia, no less than in every other State in the Union, every passing day brings fresh signs of growing and vociferous dissatisfaction caused by the multiplication of Government agencies. It is high time that we stopped creating new supervisors to supervise the supervisors.

The House, instead of condoning the addition of new committees, giving birth to new bureaus, agencies, and divisions should be endeavoring to curtail all governmental activities not absolutely essential to winning this war.

The crying need of the hour is the consolidation and coordination of existing Government agencies and committees in Congress and not the creation of new ones.

The boy from your district now on the front lines and his parents back home would rather hear that Congress had abolished half of the Government agencies in existence and consolidated and coordinated House committees and streamlined the Government in the prosecution of the war than to hear that we had created new committees which will only bring on confusion worse confounded.

Most of our people now think that we have too many bureaus, too many agencies, and too many committees in Congress and they are looking to this new Congress to correct this situation and not to start off by creating new committees.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, there is a pending proposal to take from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce its jurisdiction over civil aviation and give that authority to a special committee. This is not a proposal simply to change the membership of the committee to deal with the question but an attempt to break down a policy of unification of transportation that has been carefully built up by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and approved by this House in the last 8 years.

It is, in my opinion, a move to do an injustice to the aviation industry.

The history of legislation in this country amply supports the proposition that a minor transportation agency that is unregulated or regulated by a separate agency is in effect a stepchild in the transportation system of this country. If we want to contribute to the future of aviation and its proper development, then we should let it keep its legitimate place in the transportation system of this county. Let it remain under the same legislative committee that has jurisdiction over the other great transportation agencies of the country. The proposal here is just as improvident as a proposal to create a separate committee on trucks or busses. It would be like a proposal to remove the dairy industry from the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Committee and to create a separate committee to deal with the dairy industry as distinguished from agriculture generally. It would be like creating a special committee for artillery and deprive the regular Military Affairs Committee of that jurisdiction; or like a special committee to take shore stations from the Naval Affairs Committee.

In recent years Congress has taken jurisdiction of pipe lines, highways, interstate water transportation, air, and freight forwarders, and placed them all in the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House. The last of these carriers to be placed under unified legislative control was the freight forwarders, last year. This completed the policy of embodying every type of public service interstate commerce transportation in the United States, within the jurisdiction of that committee. That means a unified, legislative control of the subject of transportation.

Prior to that time the transportation of this country suffered enough to amply justify this policy. In 1887, when the transportation act was passed, Judge Cooley, a great judge and a great statesman, became the first Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. He then proposed that all interstate transportation agencies be placed under unified regulation. Unfortunately that was not done. I believe a careful study of the decades that followed will prove that the greatest sufferer from that mistake was the Mississippi Valley. It made the Interstate Commerce Commission a rail commission instead of a transportation commission. It owed no duty to the water carriers. They had no standing to plead their rights. They were outside of regulatory protection. The result was that the Interstate Commerce Commission was in effect a rail commission instead of a transportation commission. In the last 10 years we have tried to build up the regulation of transportation to make it apply to all interstate transportation and not merely to one particular branch of transportation. Unified legislative control has been approved by this House.

I call attention to the fact that members of the minority party as recently as the enactment of the Civil Aeronautics Act gave their support to the unified legislative control of all transportation agencies. The first name on a minority report on that bill was that of Carl Mapes, of revered respect in this House. The list also included Mr. Wolverton, Mr. Wolfenden, Mr. Holmes, Mr. Reece, Mr. Wadsworth, Mr. Halleck and Mr. Withrow. After my close association with those men, they have my very high respect. In that report they urged that the Interstate Commerce Commission be given jurisdiction of civil aviation and in addition to that they make this declaration:

> There should be unified control of all phases of transportation.

That was just good sense, good statesmanship, and these men of the highest quality in the minority party gave it their approval.

Now we have, of course, civil and military control. Let us look at that feature for a moment. Transportation as an economic phase of our country is one of the greatest problems the Government of the United States must deal with. The people of this country pay over $20,000,000,000 a year in normal times for transportation. This is a land of great distances, widespread productive areas, and great consuming capacity. Transportation is the connecting link between the producers and consumers of the country. Everything that the American people buy has added to it the cost of transportation. No persons in this country can escape the fact that transportation concerns them. I am one of those who believe there are a good many inequalities in the rate structure of this country that should and can be corrected if the policy of this committee as pursued, be carried to its logical conclusion. We have looked forward, not from the standpoint of committee jurisdiction, but rather for the better regulation of transportation, to the benefit of the people of this country.

Of the $20,000,000,000 and more which the country pays for transportation, something like eight billions is paid for public service transportation, and the balance is for the construction of roads and harbors; and for private transportation, which is not subject to regulation. The amount paid to the air carriers last year amounted to about $105,000,000, which, of course, is a small proportion of the total the American people pay for transportation.

What is the object of regulatory civilian control of transportation? We have the implements of war. They are not subject to civilian regulation. We give them to the Army and the Navy, including airplanes, and we say to them, use these implements of destruction to defend America and win our wars. Their military use is not a matter for civilian regulation. We exercise general regulation over only that transportation that is engaged in serving the public for hire, the public service of the United States. That regulation is for the purpose of protecting the public in its dealing with these transportation agencies, and to protect the carriers in their relation to the public and their competitors. Those are among the purposes of regulation.

When the act of 1887 was passed it took in rails alone. There had been great abuse in the railroad industry to the injury and injustice of the people of the United States. Therefore, much of the movement that led to that legislation was punitive in purpose. In recent years that has been changed. The legitimate motive of regulation is instructive. It has in mind both the welfare of the public and the carriers. Aviation came to this Congress and asked to be regulated. We did not regulate it because of abuses in the industry. The motive was the constructive purpose of aiding aviation, of building it up and developing its use for the benefit of the Nation.

Aviation is transportation. Nobody can deny that. There is a common relation between the regulation of all of these transportation agencies. For instance, here are some of the common purposes of regulation. In the first place, we require inspection of the carrier. Whether it be a locomotive, a motor vehicle, a steamboat, or an airplane, its qualifications for the uses for which it is designed must be established before it can get a certificate to operate.

There are requirements as to the ability of the operators to perform their services. There is a certificate of convenience required by which the carrier establishes his right to perform the particular service and the routes that he is to serve. There are provisions against discriminations, rebates, as to the anti-trust laws, against interlocking directorates, liability to passengers and shippers, the duty to authorize service, and, finally, the regulation of rates.

The healthiness of any carrier depends upon the condition of its balance sheet. If it cannot make money it is on the way out finally, and if it does make money it should be able to give efficient service to the public. So that from an economic standpoint, looking to the welfare of the public carrier, the thing we must look to is his balance sheet. What is going to be the effect upon that balance sheet? Now, what is coming for aviation?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I will ask the gentleman to wait until I have finished.

Aviation is today in the heyday of its existence in this country. The war has taken it over; the question of cost is not a consideration, in order to get transportation for our military purposes. Nearly every civil air carrier in the world up to this date has operated under a direct subsidy or subsidized rates. Very few carriers are today on a self-supporting basis from an economic standpoint. Up to this time civil aviation has been possible on account of the subsidization of the industry. After the war is over we are going to have a great supply of engines and airplanes; we are going to have factories turned to production; and we are going to have uses to which the the airplane can be applied—things that may mean a great deal to the future of our country if we can successfully deal with this question.

But when the gray dawn appears after the war is over, a very practical problem is going to confront the industry. The industry is largely going to have its future determined by how it can meet competitive rates. It has limited cargo-carrying capacity and limited classes of service to which it can appeal for support. As it expands beyond its present limits it is going to meet the competitive transportation industries of this country.

If I were running an air line, having in mind what we are going to face after the war is over, I would not come here and say, "Release me from the general committee of Congress that deals with transportation." I would say, "Put me in that general scheme of regulation." I would say, "Take me under your protection as a full-fledged member of the transportation system of this country. Consider the value of the service I can give to this country and give me a just place within the scheme of transportation. Don't treat me as a stepchild or cripple."

If you go under a separate committee, that separate committee can legislate for you, but it cannot legislate to control your competitor or assure you legal protection against him.

A general transportation committee owes a protective care to all the agencies under its jurisdiction. It is the legislative authority and umpire to assure justice between competing carriers. It has both a protecting and restraining power as to each against the other. That is not true where separate committees are given jurisdiction of competing transportation agencies.

The destructively low rate has been the weapon used by the strong carriers against the weak. With $8,000,000,000 a year being paid to public-service carriers, and aviation receiving only $105,000,000 of that amount the safest place for aviation is within the protecting care of that general committee which has the power of restraint as well as protection against all of our public-service carriers.

Aviation has the distinct advantage of the time element in competitive transportation, but it has a comparatively limited class of traffic so far as cargo is concerned to which it can look for its best support. Its legitimate source of income should not be impaired by the destructively low rates its competitors might impose.

The shipping public has little objection to destructive rates if it can get the profit out of them temporarily.

If the limited types of carriage, on which aviation must mainly depend for its future, can be cut from under the aviation industry, it will be restricted in its progress. That is a possibility that should not be invited by the establishment of a limited legislative control for its protection.

Rather than discard the main transportation committee of the House so far as aviation is concerned, we should say to it, "We expect you to be the guardian and protector of this industry and do justice between all these agencies of transportation." If we do not have the wisdom and fairness to do that thing we are not fit to be the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I prefer to finish, if the gentleman will permit. I have a great deal more than my time will allow me to say.

Now, our committee is not a stranger to the question of aviation. I have probably given more time since I have been in Congress to aviation than any other single subject, notwithstanding the Transportation Act. I was on the war investigating committee. My section was aviation. That investigation lasted a year. We made exhaustive reports. I was on the select committee of 1924. I wrote the body of the report by that committee, by consent of both sides. I was on the subcommittee that wrote the Air Commerce Act of 1926, which looked primarily to safety. Then when the Civil Aeronautics Act came before the Congress I happened to be chairman of this committee, and we had a lot of work to get that bill through. One of the principal difficulties we had was to shake loose the departments of this Government from the control that they wanted to exercise. A short-sighted, destructive control prevailed. We had to fight a year with those departments to shake them loose. What do we have at the present time?

We have a unified legislative control of all the transportation agencies of this country. We have a separate regulatory body for aviation. Why did we do that? Because aviation was a new industry still in the course of rapid development. Administration involved details which required much attention. Aviation has a promotion factor in addition to all the ordinary elements of regulation. There are so many details of the administrative functions of the Civil Aeronautics Board and of the Administrator that we wanted a body that could give its complete time to those duties

Now in that body we have experts to advise us on every problem of aviation. We do not need those experts on the committee; we cannot make an airplane or take part in its construction; we cannot plan it, we cannot operate it, and we cannot administer it. Every man in this Congress knows the difference between the legislative function of the Congress and the administrative function of the executive departments. Congress cannot attempt successfully to perform the administrative function.

In 1937 and 1938 this committee took up the question of legislation for aviation. What was then the situation of aviation? One hundred and twenty million dollars had been invested in aviation for transportation. Of that capital $60,000,000 of the $120,000,000 had been washed out. We were urged to hasten legislation because there were at least two American lines that were facing bankruptcy. Their immediate hope of survival was in the passage of that act. So we have in mind the financial condition of the industry. Credit with the banks and with investors was about to disappear.

After this act was passed there was little difficulty about financing; the investors were ready with their money; the investors had confidence, and the investments had multiplied between three and four hundred percent before this war as a result of that legislation.

FOREIGN SERVICE

We hear a great deal about the foreign service in aviation. This foreign relationship of aviation was not discovered just yesterday, it is a long-standing situation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman suspend for just a moment?

ELECTION CONTEST—SULLIVAN AGAINST MILLER

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication which was read and together with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3 and ordered printed:

OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1943.

The Honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: This office has unofficial knowledge of the bringing of a contest growing out of the election held on November 3, 1942, for a seat in the Seventy-eighth Congress from the Eleventh Congressional District of the State of Missouri.

On December 9, 1942, John B. Sullivan served notice on LOUIS E. MILLER, returned Member from the Eleventh Congressional District of the State of Missouri, of his intention to contest the election of the said MILLER. Reply to this notice was made by LOUIS E. MILLER on December 28, 1942. From this latter date, the 90 days provided by law in which to take testimony in support of the allegations began to run. Now comes the parties to the contest in communication addressed to me dated January 20, 1943, making joint application for order or recount and setting forth the reasons therefor.

The joint letter signed by the parties to the contest together with the four enclosures noted therein are submitted herewith for the consideration of the appropriate committee.

Very truly yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from California may proceed for 10 additional minutes.

There was no objection.

CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. LEA. An American air carrier acquires its right to operate in foreign countries by two different methods: One is through rights acquired by treaty between this country and the foreign country; the other is by negotiating their own agreements with such country. We had this matter up with the State Department when this bill was written in 1938. At that time, Germany in particular, and Italy to a degree, were engaged in trying to control airlines in South America. They were engaged in a movement not only directed against the economic interests of the United States, but against the very safety of this country as a Nation. The State Department was fully aware of that. Mr. Moore, beloved in this House, then in the State Department, took an active interest in that problem. Without any fanfare or headline effort we tried to work out a plan to meet that situation.

There were two difficulties: In the first place if our Government negotiates a treaty with another country it usually results in granting reciprocal rights. In order to get a right by treaty with another country that country will commonly demand reciprocal rights. We might get the worst end of the bargain because we are the assertive Nation, we actively seek a privilege by going there and trying to acquire our rights. They may not be in aviation, but they will say, "We will give you those rights but in return we will require that our country be accorded similar rights in the United States." Those rights can be transferred to unfriendly nations; so we may sacrifice by making treaty agreements.

It was considered better on the whole to let these aviation companies so far as possible work out their own treaties with these different countries. This we did with the requirement that the agreement with a foreign country shall be subject to the approval of the Civilian Aeronautics Board. A license is granted subject to the approval or disapproval of the President. In this way we avoid making the sacrifice that the system of reciprocal agreements would involve.

A provision of the act requires that the Board in fixing air-mail compensation shall take into consideration whether or not the revenue of the carrier taken with the other revenue of the air carrier would enable the carrier under efficient management to maintain and continue the development of the air transportation to the extent and of the character and quality required for the commerce of the United States, the Postal Service, and the national defense. The Attorney General interpreted this language to mean that the Board had to take into consideration for instance cost and expense to our air lines in carrying out a contract for air lines in Latin America where those contracts are approved by the C. A. B. under section 412 of the act. That is the way we accomplished the purpose, and the German and Italian planes have been practically driven out of South America today because of that power given to the Civil Aeronautics Board. In other words we subsidized our foreign carriers sufficiently to enable them to cut out our destructive competitors in those countries. Today the American air lines are flying and giving service in over 50 nations of this earth. At the same time the good-neighbor policy and the activities of the State Department also greatly contributed in executing the general plans.

As to whether or not our committee has done a useful service in these matters I want to make three quotations. The first is by Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, president of the Air Transport Association of America, a society that included all the air lines of the United States. He has a comprehensive knowledge of all phases of aviation, probably not surpassed by any American. He made this statement in his personal capacity in 1939.

He said:

> With the air-transport industry forging ahead in its mission of public service, we are extremely fortunate in having as our Federal charter of regulation a new Civil Aeronautics Act, in the drafting of which the statesmanship of foresight was employed in liberal degree, and in the support of which the President and the Congress, after a patient, long-continued and conscientious study, made an immeasurable contribution to the needs and aspirations and the future welfare of our commerce, our Postal Service, and our national defense. Already America has recognized their action as just and wise. The brake has been taken from the wheel.

Then Eddie Rickenbacker, well known to our country, said recently after the Collier Trophy was given to the air lines and to the Army for the greatest accomplishment in aviation for last year:

> This award takes on special significance at this time because it brings to light the vision and foresight of the Congress of the United States and the Government in adopting, years ago, a long range program to foster, develop, and encourage civil aviation.
> Such a program, under which the air lines of the United States were developed to a degree of usefulness and efficiency unsurpassed anywhere else in the world, enabled them to be ready to help the Army solve one of the most difficult problems of the whole war.

The President, in 1939, said:

> Civil aviation is clearly recognized as the backlog of national defense in the Civil Aeronautics Act which set up the effective machinery for a comprehensive national policy with respect to the air.
> Underlying the statute is the principle that the country's welfare in time of peace, and its safety in time of war, rests upon the existence of a stabilized aircraft production—an economically and technically sound air transportation system, both domestic and overseas—an adequate supply of well-trained civilian pilots and ground personnel.

The Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 was written by this committee after the hearings were completed. We made an exhaustive study, and the committee took time to do this. We were not on a headline hunting expedition. We accepted the responsibility that rested upon us as a committee of this House. We accepted the job as a plodding, working job, which it was.

We followed that with the Civilian Pilot Training Act, under which more than 50,000 boys were trained in primary flying before the war started. Many of them are now in the service. That training plan was later expanded.

An airport program was put into effect under this act and over 500 airfields have been established in the United States. The matter of airport regulations is important to the future of this country, it should be continued and no doubt will be, if we have proper supervision.

Now, a word about the future of aviation. Aviation, as I told you, received last year $105,000,000 for its services. Aviation should within a few years have an income of three or four hundred million dollars. The more it advances, the more efficient it becomes, the greater it can reduce the cost and increase the mechanical skill of the plane, the more important it will be in the transportation system of this country and the world.

In some respects the airplane made easy progress. It has a good appeal for patronage where time is essential. It has a good appeal to the passenger traffic. It can appeal to high-class freight—expensive but not very heavy. It can do a good service in carrying more of the mail of this country, I have no doubt. But it has had some hard troubles, too. The necessity of greater mechanical improvement, the cheaper production of planes, more endurance, and reduced fuel cost are of tremendous importance. Then it must produce a balance sheet on which its very life depends.

I was much interested when my attention was called a few days ago to an address by President Patterson, of the United American Lines, in which he compared the cost of transportation by airplane with the cost by freight train. He based his calculation on the assumption that under present costs it would cost 35 times more to transport a trainload of freight from Chicago to San Francisco and back by air than it would if it were done by freight train. Then he made a computation of the relative cost of transporting by airplane and ship cargo from San Francisco to Australia and back. He estimated that the final comparison was that airplane transportation would cost 250 times that of the ship.

Mr. NICHOLS. What kind of stuff was that? What commodity was involved?

Mr. LEA. That was based on weight—general cargo.

Mr. NICHOLS. What type of cargo?

Mr. LEA. General cargo of a ship. Understand this is heavy cargo.

Mr. MOTT. Is this in peacetime or wartime?

Mr. LEA. I was going to say that is based upon the present estimate of cost. My judgment is that the airplane as we have it today and as we can reasonably expect to have it in the next 2 years can make a much better showing than was thus estimated. I mention this simply to show the other side of the picture. We have had too much reckless, unthinking appraisement of what is going to occur in the future.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BULWINKLE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Patterson estimates that to carry that shipload to Australia and back by air would take 18,000,000 gallons of gasoline. It would take three cargo ships of 15,000 tons each to haul the gasoline that would be necessary to supply the airplanes to carry out that transportation problem overseas. The ship would carry the same cargo from San Francisco to Australia and return on 500,000 gallons of oil, which, of course, makes a tremendous difference.

But when all is said and done we can say that so far as heavy freight is concerned, and low-grade freight, there is still a vast spread in the practical competition between the airplane and surface carriers.

The Civil Aeronautics Board is authorized to recommend legislation to the Congress. Our committee has a subcommittee on aviation. Some months ago we determined to hold hearings on these questions. I may say right here that my constant attitude with the Government officials and with the industry itself since the Civil Aeronautics Act has been passed has been that our committee passed that legislation. We want it to be successful and whenever we get any suggestion that shows substantial need of improvement, we will be glad to consider it and report legislation if we think it will be beneficial. We have a bill now pending, H. R. 1012, and we expect to begin hearings in February upon this bill. It deals with quite a number of problems, some of them not of great critical importance, yet all of them involving matters that appear to be worthy of consideration as a benefit to the industry and the country.

It is said that our committee is too burdened with work. We were not so burdened but what we wrote that act which everybody familiar with the industry admits was a great constructive piece of legislation. We are not so busy but that we are willing to give attention to aviation.

I recognize the promotional characteristics of aviation and its relation to national defense as well as transportation. Twenty years ago when I wrote a report that was concurred in by some of my colleagues I recommended that we encourage not only commercial aviation and military aviation and the necessary ground force to keep them in good repair but we also encourage the use of sporting planes and private planes so that we could make the American people more air-minded. In 1925 our committee recommended to the Congress that it be given complete jurisdiction over the air spaces of the Nation in aid of the solution of these problems.

I hope I am not boastful or not unwarranted in what I say, but our committee feel that we have done a useful service to aviation and to this country. We have been given a job and we have been faithful to it. We are ready to go ahead with that job. If I am right as to the attitude of our committee, is not our experience in these years with the transportation problem worth something to this country and to the Congress of the United States? Is it wisdom, is it common sense under these conditions to say to this committee, with all of its experience in transportation, with its success in this particular legislation, "We cannot count on you next time." We have never failed you and we are not going to fail you now.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman said a minute ago that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had sometime in the past recommended that commercial aviation be placed under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LEA. No. We had a controversy on that question and the prevailing vote of the committee was in favor of this present group, the Civil Aeronautics Board. However, I read from the minority report on that question.

Mr. NICHOLS. Is it now the gentleman's opinion that civil aviation should be placed under the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LEA. No; it is not. I advocated what was done, and I think it was the right way to handle it.

Mr. NICHOLS. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. BULWINKLE]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLS. If the gentleman will yield further, may I ask him whether or not his committee now has any authority to fix rates?

Mr. LEA. No committee of Congress has that authority.

Mr. NICHOLS. I thought I understood the gentleman to say a minute ago that another reason the legislation should be left with the gentleman's committee is that you would have control of the rate structure.

Mr. LEA. No. We were pointing out the similarities of regulation as applied to all of these agencies, and the control of rates in the legislation is one of them. If for each transportation agency we created a separate group in the legislative body, we would be destroying unity of legislative control.

Mr. NICHOLS. All I wanted to do was to clear it up. The committee has no rate-fixing power.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman, who is chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, has done an unusual service to aviation. I have followed the gentleman's reports on this subject for many years, and I wish to say that the gentleman is responsible for many of the aviation laws we have today. I am especially cheered by the gentleman's approval of the work of the Civilian Pilot Training Division. The gentleman mentioned a reservoir of 50,000 pilots who were available for the armed forces at a time of need. I think that figure should be raised to 70,000 pilots.

Mr. LEA. It should now.

Mr. STEFAN. I think the gentleman's wonderful speech on aviation would be incomplete unless he added to it something about an independent commission on aviation, the secretary of which, I believe, is Mr. John Victory, and the members of which are from the Army, the Navy, the C. A. A., and others, who made it possible for aviation to be advanced to the point it has reached today, and who are every day experimenting with their air tunnels and other equipment to make our aviation more effective in the war effort. Would the gentleman, when he revises his remarks, include in his statement something about that independent commission, with which I know the gentleman is very well acquainted?

Mr. LEA. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

The National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is indeed worthy of commendation in any discussion of the progress of aviation in this country. It has done a painstaking, a devoted, and a very productive work for development of American aviation. Through research and experiment it has done a full part toward the progress of aviation. Its laboratories are worthy of a visit from any person. Mr. John Victory has long been its able secretary, and Dr. Jerome C. Hunsaker is now its chairman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I think the gentleman from California misunderstood the question of the gentleman from Oklahoma. Congress has the power to fix rates but does not exercise that power. It delegates it to other bodies.

Mr. LEA. I thank the gentleman for that contribution. My statement was inaccurate in that respect. We have the legal authority to fix rates but we do not exercise that power in practice. Rate making is a power too complicated and involving too many details to be exercised by Congress. We give to the regulatory body the administrative duty of fixing rates.

Mr. NICHOLS. If the gentleman will yield, it just occurred to me that if the committee does have the authority to fix rates, why is it there is the great inequality in freight rates throughout the country that the gentleman mentioned a minute ago?

Mr. LEA. That is a problem in itself of long standing. It grew up, largely, not entirely, out of the inequalities of control and regulation. Then, unfortunately, too many artificial influences have been at work that took advantage of situations. The plan of unified control is, I believe, only a first step toward giving this country a more just rate structure.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Since the question under discussion here is the propriety or impropriety of establishing an additional legislative committee to have charge of commercial aviation alone, I wonder if the gentleman would express himself on the question of the experience of the members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce over a period of some 20 years in dealing with transportation and aerial questions, and as to whether or not it would be unwise to stack another committee on top of this committee, in view of the years of experience this committee has had.

Mr. LEA. I have tried to explain that in what I have said already. I think it would be very unfortunate. The chief sufferer would be civil aviation if jurisdiction over its affairs were given to a separate committee and it were made a stepchild in our transportation system.

If I owned an air line and one group had a right to legislate to control my activities but had no right to control my competitors I would think I was in a bad fix.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed now under the special order originally designated to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, inasmuch as I had that order he spoke on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order heretofore made, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington for 15 minutes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said here regarding the creation of a separate legislative committee on aviation. I want it definitely understood that I rise, not in opposition to the creation of a special legislative committee on aviation, but to point out and discuss the different elements with respect to it, and very briefly to inquire into the necessity for doing so at this time, and the advisability of it. I wonder whether it will not create even more confusion than the proponents of such a committee are trying to eliminate.

In the first place, the term "commercial aviation" today does not mean what it meant a year and a half ago. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] will concede that I have had some experience in this matter. Practically, there is very little commercial aviation in the United States today, due to war conditions. The Army and the Navy have taken over the bulk of the planes. The Army and the Navy practically run commercial air lines. They tell them what passengers they can put on, what mail they can take on, and what express they can haul. The tendency is to take even more under control. Commercial aviation's personnel, its experience, its planes, and many of its functions have been transferred to the far-flung areas of the world under the command of the Army transport group. There is very little left. As a matter of fact, no operator today of a commercial air line does anything without first having the approval of the Army or the Navy, in the way of expansion of schedules, expansion of lines, new planes, or what they carry; and I am just wondering, as I stand here, whether or not the creation of a special committee to handle the commercial air-line problems of today would not create more confusion in view of this situation.

If it can be proven that it will not, then possibly many of us would change our minds. Second, I do not know—and I have no doubt of the sincerity of the enthusiasm of this special committee—but by the same token, I have no doubt of the sincerity of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, and its distinguished chairman, regarding aviation. If there was a legislative bottleneck in that committee, insofar as commercial aviation is concerned, then I say by all means appoint a separate committee, but I do not know of any legislative bottleneck except one bill that the gentleman from Oklahoma and the gentleman from Texas have talked to me about. That bill provides for the creation of Federal control of air space.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. I may point out that the able chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee in a current issue of American Aviation lists 17 changes in aviation laws, and lists the bills which he proposes to introduce to bring about those changes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Is there any intimation that this committee is not studying that matter and will not report out those bills?

Mr. NICHOLS. I do not know. I am only pointing out that the chairman of that committee points out 17 changes which he thinks should be made in the aviation laws.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think the one important bill that this select committee has recommended to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is the so-called freedom of the air. I do not know that this committee will not report that out and do a good job with it, but let me point out to the gentlemen of this committee what the Civil Aeronautics Board has to say about this proposition. I have their annual report before me for 1942 and this is what bothers me. And I may say in prefacing this that the Civil Aeronautics Committee recommends legislation here, but there is no intimation that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee will not hear them on that subject, or that it does not have these matters under active consideration. Here is what the Board says:

> In view of the existing demands upon the efforts of all concerned arising from the national emergency, the Board does not urge in presenting these amendments that they be considered at the present time by Congress.

Mr. NICHOLS. Of course, the gentleman has no amendment to talk about.

Mr. MAGNUSON. They suggest basic amendments and they are in the report. I could read them but they are very lengthy. In other words, there exists in their minds the idea that bringing this matter out now would cause more confusion.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Does not the gentleman think that the very thing which the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] suggested a few moments ago, the article in American Aviation contributed by the chairman of the committee listing 17 proposed changes in the law, itself indicates that he, as the chairman of the committee, is alert to the necessity of making needed changes?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I would think so.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I think it should be stated that all responsibility should not be placed on the so-called Nichols committee; that this is not a new agitation, nor that is something that came out of the Nichols committee. These resolutions have been before the Congress for the last 6 years, 5 years before the creation of the Nichols committee.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Oh, I agree with the gentleman. There is no question about that. The gentleman from Oklahoma and myself have spent many hours talking about aviation. He knows the situation. Of course, it is not new with him. But the gentleman from Oklahoma is an aviation enthusiast, one of the most sincere in the House. There is not any question about it. So is the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]. There are many of us. That brings me to another practical point that I want answered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I appreciate the gentleman's statement about me, but I wanted to say that regardless of the disposition of this matter finally by the House of Representatives, I am sure it will be made with honesty and conviction, as the House should act upon important phases of our legislative program for the future. I simply wanted to observe at this moment that I believe it is wholesome and the country will react in that manner, in knowing that the Congress of the United States these days is discussing and thinking very carefully of the place that our country must take now and in the future in this great development in the air.

Mr. MAGNUSON. There is no question about that.

Now, here is another practical point that I cannot answer in my own mind. If this committee should be created, there are 10, 15, or 20 or more men in this House who not only as sincere advocates of aviation, as the men I have mentioned, but there are many of us on important places in other committees. I might say, in all humbleness, some of us believe that our places on those committees entail a great deal of war work. We do not think we should leave those committees to go to another committee that we feel we probably know as much or more about; at least our usefulness would be divided. It would disrupt the standing membership of 3 of the most important committees of this House, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. NICHOLS. Would the gentleman be interested in my attempting to answer briefly his inquiry?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. NICHOLS. I think the gentleman has a very fine thought there. My idea about that matter is this: The House majority and minority side can do anything it wants to. If a permanent committee were to be created on civil aviation in the House, I think the rules of the majority and the minority should be changed as to exclusive committee assignments, in order that the membership of the committee could be made up of representatives who have a special interest in aviation, from the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or any other committee in the House that could supply specialists to this committee. It is my opinion that the rules should and will be changed as to exclusive committee assignments, so that the membership of the committee can be representative of aviation throughout the House Military and Naval Affairs Committees.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, that would clear up the point. The suggestion has been made that this be a select committee, composed of members of these other committees.

Mr. NICHOLS. Of course, a select committee does not have legislative authority.

Mr. MAGNUSON. If the gentleman wants my honest opinion, I would rather see a continuation of his fine committee.

Mr. NICHOLS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is, to handle this problem, if there are problems that the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce cannot handle.

Now, let us go to another phase that has been mentioned, namely, our place in the post-war world. There is not a person in this House who will not agree that this is going to be the key to the whole post-war world communications system. There is not a person in this House who does not know that after this war this aviation picture is going to burst all over the map. You are going to have thousands of planes, thousands of pilots, and many new planes. I was down in California the other day, in the district represented by the gentleman from California, [Mr. HINSHAW], and I saw the mock-up of an airplane that is so big that the only way I can describe it is that it has an elevator. We in this House must be on the alert either through the committee of the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], or some other committee of the House. We ought to be up in arms and watching this proposition. Do you know that today we have built with our money, with our aviation experience, with our personnel and with the Army Transport Command the greatest world airways yet established? You can leave Washington today if you are on a military mission and I think on a regularly scheduled flight you can go any place in the world. Is that not true?

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman is correct. I am interested in the gentleman's remarks about the desirability of having the membership of this committee from other committees, because that was the same recommendation which I originally privately made in letter form to certain leading Members of the House, believing that not only Military and Naval Affairs Committee members are interested in such questions, but also such committees as the Post Office and Post Roads, Foreign Affairs, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and perhaps some other notable committees of the House.

The rules of the two sides of this House are such, of course, that unless you made it a select committee which has no legislative authority——

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, that can be changed.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That can be changed.

Mr. HINSHAW. Such a committee should be given legislative authority over certain matters connected with aviation, and it should have the best advice that the House has to offer on account of the importance of the subject.

Mr. NICHOLS. There is no question about that.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I have been very much interested in this discussion. I should like to know if two or three members are taken from this committee, that committee, and the other committee, where there are going to be these new places we have been hearing about.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is right; it is a practical matter.

Mr. BECKWORTH. If members are going to be taken from other committees I do not see where there will be any new places on the Aviation Committee.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. This is for information, if I may be so presumptuous; then I want to ask a question.

There are plenty of Members on this side serving on two committees and some on three; so you can get Members from some of those committees and divide things up a little. The question I wanted to ask is this:

Is there any substance to these newspaper stories and rumors we hear that other nations are now preparing to take over the aviation traffic after the war is over?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that of course there is no question about it; but the gentleman from Michigan wants to remember, as I said before, that the key to the whole post-war communications system is going to be the world-wide airways, the "toll houses" that are the fields of today, we are now building with our money, with our personnel, and our boys. They are being built, of course, on foreign soil and mostly British soil. So far as I know we have no agreement in writing as to the use of these airways after the war. We should be alert to this.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If memory serves correctly, the other day our Vice President made the assertion that while we were going to have airports, or air fields, whatever they are, all over the world, I gathered from reading the article attributed to him that these are to be under the control of other nations, and not under the control of the United States. Has the gentleman from Washington any information on that?

Mr. MAGNUSON. My information is that the Vice President is sincerely and honestly trying to effect in the post-war world a sane equitable basis which would include the freedom of the air; and this we are all working for.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But are we to pay for it and then not have the management of it?

Mr. MAGNUSON. As a matter of fact, we have paid for it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does not the gentleman believe we should have some control over it?

Mr. MAGNUSON. We have paid for it; all we want is value received for what we paid for.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I realize we paid, but does the gentleman not believe we should have control of it if we paid for it?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I believe the nations of the world can sit around the table and do this thing properly; I hope they can. If there is any intimation that we cannot have our rightful picture in this post-war world I will be the first one to rise in this House and denounce any part of the administration responsible.

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. We have heard a great deal of discussion about the creation of a new committee. So far I have heard only one point of view; that is, to create new committee positions. Is there any major legislation concerning aeronautics pending in this House now or that may be expected which has not had expedition and urgency? I want to know if this new committee will turn out legislation any faster than the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Is there any reason to believe that the new committee will turn it out any faster?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me? I think the gentleman is entitled to be properly advised.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. There is a bill pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MAGNUSON. If the gentleman will permit an interruption—except the one I have mentioned concerning the freeedom of the air.

Mr. NICHOLS. That, of course, is a basic bill, and until that bill is passed there are 12 or 15 other subjects that cannot be handled by legislation. That bill has not yet been considered.

Mr. MAGNUSON. But the gentleman from California states they are going to start hearings on that matter. Perhaps this agitation did a little good; maybe it will spur somebody to action.

Mr. NICHOLS. But the committee has not held any hearings yet.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think what the gentleman from Oklahoma is driving at, the thing that is uppermost in my mind, is the question of this post-war world aviation. If a new committee can work any faster or better than this committee, there would be some justification for it.

Mr. SADOWSKI. As a matter of fact, were there not four or five vacancies on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee? If the gentleman from Oklahoma, or any other gentleman, had been so interested in transportation and aviation, and they had some seniority here, could they not have applied and given up the committees they were on and asked for membership on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and served there?

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. As a new Member of the House, and I think the other Members of the House would like to know this, may I ask: Does this resolve itself down to the mere fact that you are trying to create some new positions or is it an attempt to get expedition? Has this particular bill that has been mentioned been in the mill, in process, for many months or is it a new matter? Can this new committee handle it any faster?

Mr. MAGNUSON. What motivates this is the very thing I am worried about. We have got to be on the alert in this House and in the Senate that when this thing is all over, so that the so-called British Imperial Airways will not control flights around the whole world and we become isolated within our own borders.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BROOKS. I want to ask the gentleman a question. I am sure he read the report rendered by the Military Affairs Committee in November on the general matter of aviation, especially Army aviation. If the gentleman has read that, and I am sure he has, he will have reached the conclusion that American aviation today stands without a peer in the whole wide world. If that is the case would the gentleman think there is anything fundamentally unsound about the legislative set-up here in the House of Representatives or that it had impeded the progress of American aviation?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I would not.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am not familiar with the proposition of securing the position of the United States insofar as aviation facilities in other nations are concerned. Is it contemplated that anything may be done here or that something can be done anywhere that will at all reduce the power of these several nations to control what happens on their own soil? I ask that for information. Is it contemplated that any sovereignty will be surrendered?

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. And in the so-called conquered nations.

Mr. NICHOLS. I would like to answer that question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 1 additional minute so that I may ask him a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAVIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. I conclude from the gentleman's remarks that the gentleman is of the opinion that commercial aviation at the present time is a thing of the past and that the military has taken over.

Mr. MAGNUSON. No. I did not say that.

Mr. GAVIN. The gentleman said that they had practically taken over.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I said that much of the control of commercial aviation today is in the hands of the military, and that is as it should be.

Mr. GAVIN. I want to ask the gentleman's opinion. Does he think that in the post-war period the military may take over all forms of aviation, commercial, and otherwise, eventually?

Mr. MAGNUSON. No.

Mr. GAVIN. Then possibly there is some ground for the creation of a committee here to give intensive study to this particular problem, so that they will not take over.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I am not opposing the selection of the committee as such, but I oppose any more confusion than is necessary in the smooth functioning of this House as it pertains to the winning of the war and the part aviation plays in it. That comes first.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if there are no other special orders, in order that we might develop the matter, I would like to ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 or 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are two other special orders, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to yield 5 minutes of my 10 to the gentleman from Texas, if he cares to pursue that question any further.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman may have my 5 minutes, if it will help him any.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, with the consent of the gentlemen who have special orders, that I may have 5 minutes at this time in order to develop one of these questions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I take this time for the purpose of affording opportunity for development of the question that I just propounded and of getting information. I read in the papers and in the magazines and all around where people are using up a lot of time deciding what is going to be done after the war is over. They call it post-war economy, post-war this, and post-war the other thing. It is all right to give this post-war business some consideration now, but perhaps the time could be better utilized in winning this war, then when it is won, and the condition then existing is known we will be able to see clearer and understand better what should be done and what can be done. I refer especially to these aviation fields which we are constructing abroad to facilitate our war activities and those of our allies. Is it contemplated that anything be done now which would establish our sovereignty over these fields and over air lanes, and so forth, that could bind any other government or control the policy of political parties as they come to responsibility in the various countries where we now have established these aviation fields? My purpose is to get some information in view of statements which have been made.

Mr. NICHOLS. I would like to attempt to answer that for the gentleman from Texas. I had with me a clipping under a London date line which appeared a few days ago, but at the moment it is in the hands of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG], who, in a couple of days, will read the whole text of the statement. The gist of it was about as follows, and this was a debate had on the floor of Parliament. The speaker was pointing out that in the post-war period Britain should attempt to do in the air what she has done at sea. That is, become mistress of the air.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We are not going to let them do that.

Mr. NICHOLS. I am going to try to give the gentleman an answer. We are not going to let them do it, but they will do it through us unless we become alert to this thing. Here is what the gentleman said on the floor of Parliament. He pointed out that the United States had built airports and aids to navigation across the continent of Africa. He also pointed out that an American-owned air line was now operating commercially across all those airports. He said that—

We, in England, have got to get commercial operations going in Africa because under international law—

And I do not know whether this is right or not—the right to the occupation of such things as airports is based upon usage.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. A temporary use in wartime cannot control the peacetime economy or Government policy except, of course, as priorities may be recognized among joint conquerors.

Mr. NICHOLS. I say to the gentleman, I do not know.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. But I know.

Mr. NICHOLS. I am trying to tell the gentleman what England is thinking about. Since that time the military has taken over our operation in Africa, and perfectly properly so. I am not complaining about that. However, if in the post-war period the basis of usage is going to determine who has the right to use the commercial facilities the United States has put in Africa, then we shall have to be alert to protect our own interests.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not want to take the time of the House further on that question now because other gentlemen have been good enough to yield to me, but I think we can proceed on the theory that these things are going to be settled after the war, controlled by the conditions which then obtain, and we cannot do it by legislation here enacted.

Mr. NICHOLS. No; except as the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has so ably pointed out, by the passage of some basic legislation now which will permit commercial aviation to expand and grow in the post-war period.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does not the gentleman believe that the gentleman from Oklahoma had better be careful about that kind of a statement, which indicates that he is thinking of his own country, or he will be classed as belonging to that America First organization which was mentioned in the indictment recently returned here in Washington? He had better be careful or Maloney will indict him.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 7 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, two or three questions came to my mind during the remarks of the chairmen of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I think when I spoke on this subject the other day I tried to make clear that I had a most wholesome respect and regard for the opinion, the ability, and the work done by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I had studied many of his reports long before I came to Congress.

I thought I understood the gentleman to say this afternoon that to set up this new committee to deal with civil aviation would do an injustice to the aviation industry. I wondered when he said that just whom that committee recognized as having the right to speak for the industry.

Further in his remarks he said that the aviation industry came to Congress and asked for regulation. This leads me to believe there is some organization the gentleman recognizes as speaking for the industry. May I ask the gentleman if the authority he recognized, the authority that asked to be regulated, will now come and ask for the setting up of this special committee and will testify before the Committee on Rules that it wants it, will the gentleman withdraw his opposition?

Mr. LEA. The observation I made referred to the situation of the industry in 1938, when the Civil Aeronautics Act was passed, and not at present.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Is not the same body still in existence? Was it the aeronautical chamber of commerce?

Mr. LEA. There is an aeronautical chamber of commerce, but I think it is not the duty of these industries to come here and determine how Congress should set up its affairs. That is a question for Congress.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. The gentleman stated that he regulated the industry at the request of this organization, which I suppose is the aeronautical chamber of commerce. Now I ask him if he will accept the same authority as to the desirability of this special committee.

Mr. LEA. No; I did not even have in mind the aeronautical chamber of commerce. I had in mind the people engaged in the industry, the air-line people.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. That is what I want to get at. Whom would the gentleman recognize as an authority that should come here and ask for this committee in order to express the opinion of the industry?

Mr. LEA. My position about that would be what I announced when I gave notice of the hearings on the bill we have before us. We will be glad to hear from anybody in the industry or who has a legitimate interest in the subject any recommendations they wish to make, but I do not believe the recommendations or the requests of the industry should be controlling on the committee or on Congress.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. No.

Mr. LEA. So I do not want to attach any undue importance to what they may have to say about this matter.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. The gentleman said the industry came here and asked to be regulated, which was apparently the reason for regulating it. I want to bring those same people here and get their opinion on this proposition. I am just trying to determine who they were.

Mr. LEA. The problem of how the House wants to take up these problems is for the House itself to determine.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Surely.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. I should like to straighten out the gentlemen on the matter of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce. The Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce is a trade organization which represents only the manufacturers.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Right.

Mr. NICHOLS. The trade organization which represents the air lines is called the Air Transport Association. One might believe the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce has something to do with transportation, but it does not.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. That brings to mind that I think the question of transportation and the fixing of rates is being much overemphasized in this whole discussion. I cannot help but think it simmers down to a question of whether this whole problem of what we are going to do with the future of the aviation industry is of sufficient magnitude to take up the time of 25 men in this House. I contend that it is.

At the end of the World War thousands of young men came home after serving in the Army and Navy Air Corps, with a desire to go into the aviation industry to help expand it. We got very little help from the Federal Government at that time.

Still today, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs comes in and says that we are at war, and that we have to win the war and therefore cannot do anything about this problem, but we were at peace for 25 years after this industry was born, and it could not get a standing committee in this House. This is not a new thing. It is something that has been desirable for 25 years.

Mr. NICHOLS. I thought the gentleman, in his question to the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was going to propound this inquiry. The chairman of that committee said that this standing committee on aviation should not be set up, because it would retard the industry. I thought the gentleman was going to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not he would be willing to let the aviation industry answer that question itself, and be bound by their answer.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. It would be a perfectly fair question and we know that the industry, manufacturers and air-line operators, want this new committee set up. I yield back the remainder of my time.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the regular business is disposed of and other special orders, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House heretofore made the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be lengthened by 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am certainly sorry that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has left the floor, because the chairmen of the three committees who have spoken to us today are familiar with the work which their committees have been doing and their advice is always well received. I agree as a general proposition with the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee in the thought that we should not create new committees and commissions, but I know of no reason why the bureaucrats should be given so much power and the people's representatives deprived of needed information. If I get the sentiment of the people, correctly, it is that it is up to Congress now to do something to correct some of these abuses which have been so prevalent during the last 8 years, and which today we can all see will ruin us if not corrected. I can understand why the chairmen of these committees oppose the creation of a new committee which might deprive their committees of jurisdiction over the air commerce. Inevitably there is that feeling, you may call it jealousy or something else but it is a natural desire to protect their own jurisdiction. A committee always wants to retain its jurisdiction and power, but if I get the situation correctly, and I think I do, the Committee on Naval Affairs has a big job on its hands. The submarine menace has not been met. The safe transportation of men and munitions demands the best from that committee. There are other matters all the time coming up, which require attention of every single member of that committee. Just this week we learned of the difficulty connected with the making of repairs on convoy ships. There is something for the committee to set its teeth into. I can go back for 3 years and call attention to where the Naval Affairs Committee was asked what it was that was holding up, not our preparation for war, but our preparation for national defense. There was no adequate answer then. There has been none since.

That committee, and I have no criticism to make of it, has done a faithful, wonderful job. Any criticism that may be charged against it for failure to accomplish things that should have been done is due to the fact that it has too big a job. It has too much to do. That committee has never in the last 3 years been able to get through the Congress legislation which would end interference with the national defense, and later with the preparations for the fighting of the war. Am I correct in that? Every Member of this House who knows the facts knows that that statement is true. I see before me the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], and the same thing applies to that committee. I am not finding fault with that committee. It has never shirked. It has always been diligent. I say the job is too big for the committee, the job it has on hand. It is too big for any one committee. That committee has not put through legislation to correct the evils that interfere with the carrying on of the war.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I take it that the gentleman refers to the obstruction by certain groups of laborers that interfere with the production of war equipment?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; not by groups of laborers, but by the labor politicians and labor racketeers, backed by the administration. I do not charge any of this to the workers themselves.

Mr. MAY. Then the gentleman remembers very well that last year the House Military Affairs Committee brought in an amendment to the Selective Training and Service Act, a provision which authorized the President of the United States to police the plants where strikes were threatened or under way for the purpose of continuing production and that we were defeated by 3 to 1 on the floor of the House.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is correct. And I supported the bill the gentleman's committee brought in. The administration opposed it.

Mr. MAY. So the committee is not to blame.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes, and the Committee on Naval Affairs did the same, several times, but did you get the legislation? You did not. Why did you not? You did not because the administration opposed you.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Would any special or extra committee get it any quicker than we would?

Mr. HOFFMAN. You gentlemen had and have your hands full. You understand that I am not criticizing your committee.

Mr. MAY. I understand that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You just have too big a job, and there should be a committee that could and would devote all of its time to questions like that. There should be committees that could and would keep everlastingly at it. I am on the Labor Committee. We should have legislation of that kind, but every time the legislation has been introduced it has been bypassed over the Labor Committee to the Committee on the Judiciary. Take the effort of the gentleman from Virginia, Judge SMITH. That is what happened to that bill, and perhaps it was well for it was put through the House. No matter how often the House acted, the sad fact remains that we did not get the needed legislation. The same may be said of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. That committee has too large a job. Under the recent decision of the Supreme Court it will be recalled that the growing and marketing of wheat is interstate and foreign commerce. It follows that there is not a thing that anyone can do any more in this country that does not affect interstate and foreign commerce. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction, as the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] has said; and I would like the attention of the gentleman from California. I have no fault to find with the gentleman's committee. The chairman of that committee is one of the hardest working Members in the House, but I say, sir, your committee has never been able to get out of the committee and put through Congress legislation which would permit the War Department or the Navy Department to take materials of war through the city of New York without paying tribute to the unions. Have you?

Mr. LEA. We have no jurisdiction over that question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, bless your heart——

Mr. LEA. We sometimes thought that if we had jurisdiction, we would take a try at it, but we do not have jurisdiction. I think certainly it is a condition which should be remedied.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not have any doubt about that. So here we are. The gentleman said from the Well of the House that his committee had jurisdiction over the trucking of the country, over transportation by trucks, and his committee certainly has jurisdiction over motor traffic.

Mr. LEA. But we do not have jurisdiction over the labor questions.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But over the transportation of goods by truck.

Mr. LEA. We do.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; surely you have. And how can you have motor transportation unless you load and unload them? The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction over the movement of freight by truck, and yet that committee and the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Military Affairs—all three of those committees have not had enough influence and enough power to get through this Congress and enacted into law a statute which will permit even the War Department itself, to say nothing about civilians who furnish war materials, to drive trucks through the city of New York until the drivers or owners pay that $8.41 for a small truck and $9.42 for a big one.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Now, have those three committees things to do? I will say they have. They are doing a good job but they cannot do the impossible and so part of the work should be given to another committee—that part which has to do with labor.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman of course is a member of the House Committee on Labor.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is right.

Mr. MAY. That committee has jurisdiction of labor questions, and as far as I know they have never been able to bring a bill out of the committee. Can the gentleman explain that?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, yes; I surely can explain it. The majority party has control of that committee, and it has the chairman, and it has the next ranking member, and it has the next ranking member, and it has a majority of the committee and it refuses to vote to bring out a bill, and we cannot even get a meeting of that committee. I go over there and I sit there, and "this is out of order"; "that is out of order." That is why I do not have any work to do as a member of the Labor Committee when it is in session. I do draft bills and introduce them but the committee does not even hold a hearing on them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five more minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have brought bills over here and every time I introduced one it was buried in committee. If we here in the House could ever get a shot at them we might do something, but the Speaker usually bypasses the Committee on Labor. I do not know whether you are ashamed of that committee or what is the trouble, but you send it to the Judiciary Committee, of which the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is the distinguished head. We have had great promises about what the Committee on the Judiciary was going to do, but they have fallen down, too. You see, when they meet this irresistible force from the White House they all fade away and nothing is done.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am not certain that my memory serves me right exactly, but as I recall there was a bill of some nature seeking to regulate this nefarious practice, before the Labor Committee, and it was not reported out by a single vote. The report was rumored around here that had the gentleman from Michigan been present and voted as he has so often spoken here on the floor of the House, the bill would have been reported to the floor of the House, but instead his proxy had voted the other way.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, I guess I will have to plead guilty to the fact that I did trust a member of the committee. I did not realize that every single Democrat was going to vote wrong. I had believed there would be one of them on the majority side that would vote right. But, being of a trusting nature, being innocent and inexperienced in the ways of politicians who are seasoned, I did not realize what might happen, and I did give my proxy, but, brother, I have never done it since. And I might say that a few days later I voted to bring out that same bill, but still we did not have a majority. You know how they treat legislation which comes from the Labor Committee. The House just waves it aside. The House does not pay any attention to it. You on the Democratic side have had a majority for 8 years, and yet these things have gone on.

Mr. MAY. Ten years.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes. The gentleman says 10 years. That makes just 2 years worse than I thought.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEWART. How about your side on the same issue?

Mr. HOFFMAN. One time when I had an amendment that I thought would cure some of that trouble we had 20 votes on the Republican side and 30 on your side, which was a fair proportion, and which showed that at that time the sentiment was about equally divided on percentages. But do not lay that to me, because I am not a leader on our side; I cannot even get these new Members membership on a major committee; they are just shoved aside and put on the committee on the disposition of useless executive papers, or wastebasket collections, or something of that kind; that is not my fault.

Mr. ELMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. ELMER. Can the gentleman imagine any greater contribution to enforced isolation than to build and pay for all these airfields all over the world, yet have no contract for the use of them and be shut out of them by other nations?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I hope the Members on the majority side heard that question. Isolationists have been condemned and damned for a long time and in a good many different ways. The gentleman from Missouri wants to know if I can imagine any way in which this country could be more isolated than, after having built this great world system of airports, to be excluded from either the use or control of them. That makes friend WALLACE an isolationist. I am sure I do not know whether the gentleman from Missouri wants to so classify him or not.

You gentlemen are all familiar with what is happening with reference to the labor situation.

WHY NOT DO SOMETHING ABOUT IT?

The un-American practice, which has prevailed throughout the New Deal, of requiring American citizens to pay tribute, not to the Barbary pirates, but to labor politicians and labor racketeers, is not only a violation of the principles enunciated in the Bill of Rights and the Constitution, but is unjust and offensive to every right-thinking citizen.

It has continued overlong. A great deal of talk has been directed toward ending it, but effective action to accomplish that purpose has always been lacking. Decent citizens throughout the land, Members of Congress, rage and storm about it, condemn it in vigorous language, but to date Congress has failed to take the necessary steps to end the vicious practices which not only added to the cost of national defense, which are adding to the cost of the war, but delayed preparation for national defense and today delay more effective prosecution of the war.

More than 3 years ago, on the floor of this House, I relayed to the membership the statement of the then Acting Secretary of the Navy, Charles Edison, that a strike in Detroit, conducted by members of the C. I. O., delayed for a period of 41 calendar days the delivery to the Navy of completed castings, bearings, and parts which were needed for airplane engines in process of manufacture at the Naval Aircraft Factory, Navy Yard, Philadelphia, Pa.

At the same time, from the same source, the Congress was informed that the Navy Department was unable, during the duration of the strike, to obtain the return of Government-owned patterns, plans, and equipment.

Just a few days ago, the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON], informed this House that the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Ralph A. Bard, over his signature stated that one of the consequences of the recent strike on the west coast was the—> failure to effect repairs on Navy and Army vessels so preventing these vessels from meeting schedules controlling convoys required for shipment of men and supplies with the result that convoys were delayed and schedules of troop movements to ports of embarkation were seriously disorganized.

Still later, we learn from news sources that, for one reason or another, seamen belonging to the N. M. U., a C. I. O. affiliate dominated by Communists, refused, upon arrival of the ships carrying supplies for our fighting men at Guadalcanal in the southern Pacific, to unload those supplies.

Now we know—and there is no disputing the fact—that as long as 3 years ago the C. I. O. deliberately and willfully interfered with production for national defense. Now we know that C. I. O. and A. F .of L. organizations refused to make repairs and by that refusal, hindered and delayed convoys carrying supplies to the men who are fighting our battle down in the southwest Pacific. Now we read that an affiliate of that same union has refused to unload food and supplies needed by men who have been battling for weeks in what are practically desert islands more than 7,000 miles from home.

The cold facts, the bare truth, give us a story of treasonable activities unsurpassed in the history of the world. This Congress to date has failed to end those treasonable activities.

No one with any judgment contends for one moment that the workers of America are disloyal or that they approve of the practices to which reference has been made. They are as indignant, they are as desirous of ending those practices, as any other class or group of citizens. They have on several occasions, as witness the recent strike at Jackson, Mich.; the still more recent one in Pennsylvania against the 50-cent addition to their dues, taken action against their officials, their bosses.

To date, this administration, by its labor policy, has stood back of and supported those who are responsible for the situation which now exists. By that statement I do not mean that all labor leaders approve of or sanction those things which have been here narrated. But I do mean that, because of the labor policy of the New Deal administration and because of the policies pursued by the officials of the major labor organizations, we have now gotten into a situation where they do not effectively control the membership of their organizations, but permit some, who would overthrow this Government by sabotaging its war efforts, to carry on their program aimed at the destruction of our national existence.

I am today introducing a resolution directing the Commander in Chief, the officers of the Army and the Navy, and the Department of Justice to take action forthwith to end these subversive actions.

There has also been introduced by me an amendment to the Selective Service Act which would cause those who strike, bring about slow-downs, who in any way interfere with the production or transportation of war materials, to be inducted into the Army, there to have the status of privates in the armed forces.

The appointment of committees, the carrying on of investigations on this subject, is a waste of time and money. What the people of this country are demanding is action, and they do not mean some time in the dim and distant future. They want action now.

Let me paraphrase a statement written long, long ago:

> For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God? (I Timothy 3: 5).

If an administration cannot rule its own people; if it cannot preserve the freedom and the liberty of its own citizens, how shall it carry the four freedoms to the uttermost parts of the world?

To the majority party, which is responsible for legislation, I put this query: Regardless of what you say about it, what do you intend to do about the situation which confronts us? And when, if ever, do you intend to do it?

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication, which was read.

JANUARY 25, 1943.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I respectfully tender herewith my resignation as a member of the Committee on Claims.

Cordially yours,

HUGH D. SCOTT, Jr.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 26, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 26, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Reverend Dr. Robert J. Slavin, of the Order of Preachers, professor of philosophy, Catholic University, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

O Lord Jesus Christ, who in Thy mercy heareth the prayers of sinners, pour forth, we beseech Thee, all grace and blessings upon our country and its citizens We pray in particular for the President, for our Congress, for all who are suffering the hardships of war. Give grace and strength to everyone in his own place to fight Thy battle. Give the light of wisdom to those in high station that they may neither yield to fear nor be seduced by daring. Make them prudent as serpents and simple as doves. Be with all courageous servants of Thine whether in low station or in high; instruct them from Thy divine heart how to act every hour of the day so as to preserve their own souls from evil and to protect the welfare of this country.

To our rulers and leaders upon the earth Thou, O Lord, has given a share of Thy power in order that we, recognizing the glory and honor given them by Thee may be subject unto them according to Thy divine will. Give to them, we pray, health, peace, harmony, wisdom in order that they may exercise the authority given them by Thee. Order their counsels, O Lord of Hosts, according to that which is pleasing and good in Thy sight, so that they devotedly exercising their power may find Thee guiding and directing them. Teach us one and all to live in Thy presence and to see Thee as our leader, and Thy cross as the foundation for the new battle cry which Your victory made possible: "Peace be to you." May this peace and the blessing of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost descend upon you and remain forever and ever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 158. An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include copy of resolutions, letters, and newspaper clippings in regard to the O. P. A.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include certain correspondence.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, in the days of the Revolutionary War, George Washington is said to have spoken these words:

Give me a banner to plant upon the hills of West Augusta, and I will gather around me men who will set this bleeding Nation free.

He, of course, referred to the Allegheny Highlands, now the State of West Virginia.

We have a man, Quartermaster Clerk Hugh F. Deakins, from Rowlesburg, W. Va., from this mountain country, who now after 35 years as a marine has taken his accumulated pay, more than $21,000 coming to him, and has purchased $20,000 worth of War bonds. I have a letter from his wife who explains that they have forgone the purchase of a home and other certain needs because not only does he fight to win the war but he uses his dollars to preserve America and civilization.

Mr. Speaker, I include a newspaper report and correspondence which is further explanatory:

MARINE VETERAN DRAWS HIS PAY—$21,269.29

Quartermaster Clerk Hugh F. Deakins, United States Marines, Quantico, Va., hit the jackpot yesterday when he received $21,269.29 in settlement of his accounts as an enlisted man and promptly invested $20,000 in War bonds.

When a man is promoted to warrant officer grade his enlisted accounts are settled. Recently Mr. Deakins traded his Quartermaster sergeant's chevrons for the insignia of a clerk. The sum he received represented savings he permitted to accumulate on the books during his 35 years' service.

And he isn't through yet. He's going to finish out this war before he thinks of retirement.

"Buying War bonds," he said, "is the greatest opportunity ever offered to the people. "You are not speculating when you buy them," he said, "You are investing in a sure thing."

His pay check was one of the highest ever issued to a marine. Mr. Deakins, native of Rowlesburg, W. Va., has a 9-year-old son, Howard.

---

QUANTICO, VA., January 18, 1943.

Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,

DEAR SIR: I am taking this liberty and a minute of your time to enclose a clipping of one of your native sons of West Virginia.

No doubt you have heard of the family, for I think you were invited to speak at one of the reunions a couple of years ago.

We are so proud of him to think we have passed up everything—buying a home and many other things that we could have done—but we think this is the wisest thing he could have done.

I am sure you will be as proud of them being West Virginians as we all are.

We are like all others; we want this war over as soon as possible, and I hope, with this small help, it will do some good in place.

Thanking you in advance to read same, I am,

Sincerely,

Mrs. LOIS DEAKINS.

---

JANUARY 21, 1943.

Mrs. LOIS DEAKINS,
Quantico, Va.

DEAR MRS. DEAKINS: I deeply appreciate your letter of January 18, with newspaper clipping about your good husband. I am so happy that he is making good. In the days of the Revolution, George Washington paid tribute to the fighting qualities of the men from that section of the country now known as West Virginia. In this terrible war worthy successors like Hugh Deakins are in uniform ready to protect America and all for which our country stands.

Extend to Mr. Deakins my best wishes and congratulations for the splendid spirit which he has shown in not only fighting for our country in the armed service but also by buying bonds.

With kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JENNINGS RANDOLPH.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DEWEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on a proposal for the liquidation of the 1942 tax liability in order that the putting of the payment of taxes on a current basis may be more speedily effected.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DEWEY]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial on No Substitute for Freedom.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TIBBOTT]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARSON] may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

AMERICA FIRST

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, one living in Washington can begin to see already indications of the fact that a certain group here is endeavoring to, as a part of the peace program, establish a supergovernment, or world government, in which the United States would be simply one integral part thereof and our flag would be subservient to a world flag. This is the dream of those proponents of such a scheme. There are certain American citizens who, in their zeal and idealism, would support a world government even to the detriment of our own. But, let me call your attention to the fact that Russia, after the World War is ended, and peace is restored, will be thinking in terms of Russia first; the British in terms of the British Empire first; and the Chinese in terms of China first. It is definite that the Russians, for example, will take no advice from us about their form of government and little, if any, about their post-war boundaries. Mr. Churchill has said frankly that he would not liquidate the British Empire—a rebuff in advance for any American idealist who may come to the peace conference with advice to Britain to cut India adrift. It is my judgment that after the war is over and peace comes, our peace treaty will be able to alleviate many, if not all, of the causes of war without turning our American Government over to a supergovernment above us. It is fine to be idealistic, but it is finer to be thoroughly patriotic based upon good clear common sense. We can still show our brotherly relations toward the liberty-loving nations of the world without sacrificing American institutions or making America subservient to some foreign influence.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WASIELEWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WASIELEWSKI]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial appearing in the Boston Daily Record of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE]?

There was no objection.

(Mr. CELLER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. FOAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Dr. A. B. Cox, of the University of Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

CRITICISM OF THE CONDUCT OF THE WAR

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, when there is a lull on the battle fronts, some of the news columnists and a few of the radio news commentators begin to speculate on what is happening in that area, and since there is a dearth of news which they can give to the public, they fill their columns with criticism and unwarranted attacks on their own Government and its conduct of the war. It gives them something to talk and write about, and they can thereby impress their readers and listeners with their superior knowledge, and they likewise know that things controversial always attract the attention of the public.

They do not stop to weigh the effect of such utterances upon our own people, our allies, or our enemies.

Criticism of things happening at home is in a different category to the happenings on the battle fronts abroad. What happens here is within our knowledge, and criticism of it affects our own people only.

When our armed forces are far from home on another continent fighting side by side with those of our allies, to publicly condemn our Government for what is happening is calculated to instill a lack of confidence in our own armed forces, to create disunity among our allies, and to give aid and comfort to the enemy.

I am referring specifically to the snipers in our own country who have been pointing out alleged mistakes with reference to our occupation in North Africa and our collaboration with the French.

Some of these busybodies, all of whom are thousands of miles from the theater of conflict, and are entirely unacquainted with conditions existing there talk glibly and write voluminously about the mistakes of our military leaders and our State Department, in the recognition of certain Frenchmen who are temporarily holding positions there.

Secretary Hull recently administered a justly deserved rebuke to these critics when he said that he had complete confidence in those of our Government who are in charge there, and he thought it best for us to keep our minds on the prosecution of the war rather than the political, social, factional, and other situations behind the battle lines.

I thoroughly agree with Secretary Hull's position, and in my judgment, these critics, however eminent or smart they may be, are rendering a disservice to their country in time of war.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Wheeling (W. Va.) Intelligencer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

REPEAL OF DAYLIGHT-SAVING TIME

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a concurrent resolution to repeal Public Law No. 403, Seventy-seventh Congress, chapter 7, second session, and to reinstate the standard time provided by the act entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States, approved March 19, 1918, as amended."

Since July 20, 1942, our Nation has been on what is referred to as wartime, disregarding God's time. This arrangement has been tried for a full year, resulting in untold inconveniences and hardships to the people of our great country, and with no material contribution to our war effort, except to bring home to each and every individual that we are at war—a fact that they all well know.

I have had complaints from all over my district—from mothers of school children, farmers, business and professional men, and individuals in all walks of life. Most of the complaints, however, are from mothers in the rural sections of my district, to the effect that at 7:30 a. m. wartime, they are required to carry a lantern and walk from one-half mile to 1 mile, in order to protect their children while going to and waiting for a school bus.

It is my opinion that my concurrent resolution should be speedily adopted, in order that God's time be restored to the citizens of our great Nation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address on social security and the Beveridge plan, delivered by the Honorable W. Arthur Simpson, old age assistance commission chairman, of Vermont.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement on O. P. A. price policy issued by Mr. Edward C. Welsh, regional price executive of the O. P. A., which I believe explains the purposes of that Bureau of Government in regimentation of the people.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a proclamation by Governor Bricker of Ohio on the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of William McKinley.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a copy of last Sunday's Gallup poll.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL CURRENCY

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I acquired what appears to be a $20 bill. Printed across the top are the words "National Currency Secured by United States Bonds Deposited with the Treasurer of the United States of America or by Like Deposit of Other Securities." May I ask some member of the Committee on Banking and Currency or the Committee on Ways and Means just what kind of currency that is? It was issued by the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia.

Mr. DEWEY rose.

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DEWEY. That is a Federal Reserve bank note. I believe its issue at the present time is unauthorized.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does the gentleman mean to say that we would have money in circulation called national currency the issue of which would be unauthorized?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. May I state to the gentleman that it is no more misleading than the paper money we have out that is supposed to be payable in gold, although we are off the gold standard and it is not payable in gold.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would not argue with the gentleman on that question, but this is a piece of national currency that is secured by the deposit of United States bonds or other securities. Can we go on indefinitely depositing bonds by the billions and issuing national currency?

Mr. DEWEY. I understand that the issue of $660,000,000 of this currency was authorized, but its further issue has been stopped.

Mr. HINSHAW. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman will yield further, it is worth 100 cents on the dollar. The gentleman would not sell his bill for any less than that?

Mr. HINSHAW. I took it for a $20 bill myself. I am not worried about that.

Mr. RANKIN. I will give the gentleman $19 for it.

In fact I would give him full value for it. It is the same kind of money that Abraham Lincoln issued to fight the Civil War on. He issued $346,000,000 of United States notes that are still outstanding, and during that time we have saved $11,000,000,000 in interest on it.

The editorial follows:

[From the San Marino (Calif.) Tribune of January 14, 1943]

THINKING ALLOWED

(By Stanley Arndt)

WHERE I AM ALLOWED TO THINK ALOUD—IT COULDN'T HAPPEN HERE

We've heard a lot about blue Monday and black Friday, but Monday, December 21, 1942, may turn out to be the blackest day in American history. Something happened that day that may wipe out the savings of the entire American people; something that may destroy the value of every note and bond and mortgage and deed of trust in this country; something that may make the American dollar worth but a dime or a nickel or even a penny.

And yet not a newspaper that I've seen carried the story; not a news commentator told about the event; not a financial journal chronicled the happening or raised a word of warning. Ralph Robey in Newsweek for January 4, alone caught the affair and its significance.

You've heard of printing-press money, fiat money, phoney money, printed and issued by a poverty-stricken government without any gold or silver or bonds or collateral behind it. You've no doubt heard what happened in Germany with its printing press money after the last war. Look at your son's stamp collection and see the German stamps he has—10 marks, 100 marks, 500 marks, 1,000 marks, 5,000 marks, 100,000 marks. That 100,000-mark stamp cost 100,000 marks and 100,000 marks in pre-First World War days was worth $25,000 in United States gold coin—but when it was issued, that 100,000-mark stamp wasn't worth a single United States silver dollar.

Why?

Inflation—not inflation of rising prices, but inflation caused by printing-press money unbacked by coin or collateral.

But that couldn't happen here.

"True," you say, "we can have simple inflation caused by the law of supply and demand acting upon increased purchasing power (from higher wages) trying to buy the decreased production of consumer's goods (due to curtailment and rationing) but we'll never have print-press money like Germany did. It couldn't happer here—the people wouldn't stand for it."

That's what you think; it couldn't happen here.

But it has!

On December 21, 1942, the Federal Reserve bank commenced putting into circulation $660,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes not secured by anything, pure 100-percent fiat printing-press money; not the Federal Reserve Bank of the Third Reich; not the Federal Reserve of the Nip-huns; but the Federal Reserve bank of these United States.

You may have some in your pocket now, they look just like the Federal Reserve notes we've been used to for 25 years, the ones that were secured by Government bonds or other collateral 100 percent, only these are secured by nothing.

"But," you ask, "how could it be done? Congress didn't pass a law allowing such printing-press money and the Federal Reserve bank couldn't act without congressional sanction."

Let's think back a few years. On March 9, 1933, just after Mr. Roosevelt was inaugurated, this country was faced with a panic—the banks were all closed by Presidential decree—a real emergency was facing us. On that day Congress amended the Federal Reserve Act (sec. 18, par 6) and authorized the issuance of fiat printing-press money. Nearly $660,000,000 of this emergency printing-press money was printed—but was never issued—then. But the 1933 amendment provided "no such circulating notes shall be issued * * * after the President has declared by proclamation that the emergency recognized by the President by proclamation of March 6, 1933, has terminated."

True, the emergency has, as a matter of fact, terminated; true the closed banks have all reopened. But the President has never declared such termination by proclamation—and so the administration says the emergency powers of 1933 to issue fiat printing-press money still exists, and on December 21, 1942, started to issue the money.

It couldn't happen here. Well, it has.

It was only $660,000,000, says the Treasurer. But fiat money is fiat money, and phoney money is phoney money. If the Government can and does issue that amount under that 1933 act, it can and might issue a second and a third and a fourth six hundred and sixty millions.

If the people don't complain about the first six hundred and sixty million, then perhaps they'll try another batch and another batch and another.

Inflation is here—and unless the people of this Nation raise a mighty shout of protest, they can look forward to buying $10,000 stamps to send an air-mail letter across the country. It's no use writing JERRY VOORHIS—he's always advocated this very type of money—but you can protest to JOHNSON and DOWNEY and the rest of the California delegation, and you can write Morgenthau and Roosevelt.

It couldn't happen here, but it has.

December 21, 1942, may become the blackest day in American history—unless you act.

BOARD OF VISITORS TO THE UNITED STATES COAST GUARD ACADEMY

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Law 183, Seventy-sixth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the Board of Visitors to the United States Coast Guard Academy the following Members of the House: The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a short address by Sarah Ruth Frazier.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and insert a short item.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a newspaper editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POSTPONEMENT OF LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order for this afternoon. I ask unanimous consent that I may have that same time on Tuesday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including a letter from a soldier and an additional letter from an Army officer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

STANDARD TIME

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and extend my remarks by the insertion of a joint resolution which I have filed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, I have also introduced a resolution this morning in the matter of time, and I cooperate 100 percent with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLE] who addressed the House a few moments ago.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas it is provided in the act entitled "An act to promote the national security and defense by establishing daylight saving time," approved January 20, 1942, that the Congress may by concurrent resolution designate the date when such act shall cease to be in effect; and

Whereas it is provided in such act that at 2 a. m. of the last Sunday in the calendar month following the calendar month during which such act ceases to be in effect the standard time of each zone shall be returned to the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing the standard time for such zone as provided in the Standard Time Act of March 19, 1918, as amended: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the act entitled "An act to promote the national security and defense by establishing daylight saving time," approved January 20, 1942, shall cease to be in effect as of January 31, 1943.

NATIONAL CURRENCY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW], who spoke a moment ago about the money that has been issued by the Treasury Department, I call attention to the fact that the only difference between it and the money issued regularly by the Federal Reserve is that the Federal Government is not now paying interest on its own money. We have all the gold necessary behind every dollar, as well as the resources of this Nation. They are behind every dollar issued by the Federal Government, but we do not have to pay interest on it.

I presume if it had been issued through the Federal Reserve banks, and the Government had paid interest on it, then it would have been all right.

But let me remind the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] that we gave the President of the United States the right to issue $3,000,000,000 of United States notes, and he still has that right. If that had been done 10 years ago, instead of the borrowing spree that we have been on, the chances are the Government would have been better off. I remind the gentleman also that during the Civil War this same question arose, and Abraham Lincoln issued United States notes and put them into circulation in order to raise money to fight the Civil War. Three hundred and forty-six million dollars of that money is still in circulation, and it is estimated that we have saved $11,000,000,000 in interest upon it in that time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after other special orders and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michgan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back that time.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE MEAT SHORTAGE

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, the Nation is engaged in a war effort of stupendous proportions. One that dwarfs and overshadows any similar undertaking of our own Nation or of other nations in the history of man. The American people are not unconscious of the magnitude of this effort, and, like other people in nations similarly engaged, are girding themselves for sacrifices never before contemplated.

Those who are making the fight for us on the world's battle fronts—our own boys, our brave allies, and the people of the nations alined with our cause—must have food. An ever-increasing stream of life's necessities must be kept flowing to them. Nobody in the Nation can take issue with the necessity of such an obligation. And nobody would countenance a measure that would have the effect of lessening or diminishing food supplies for the armed forces and lend-lease. The people of the United States can take it. They are conscious of the gravity and immensity of the war in which we are engaged, and know full well the consequences of defeat. And they are willing to make any sacrifice that is necessary to make final victory certain. And if going without food items will hasten victory, by keeping the boys in the battle areas adequately supplied with life's necessities, you can depend on the people of America.

But, when a condition exists, as now, when the American people are told by responsible Government officials that an ample meat supply is available for the Armed Forces and lend-lease and that an ample meat supply is available for their tables, and find that their retail and wholesale shops have no meat; when they find that meat is available for the rich and not for the poor; when they observe that meat is piled high in the windows of some of the better restaurants; when they hear of retailers compelled to drive their automobiles from suburban districts, form lines 3 to 4 blocks long outside packing plants, and go away with 1 or 2 pieces of meat, when they hear of wholesale houses closing down all over the Nation because packers, placed in a monopolistic status by O. P. A. regulations, refuse to sell them meat, and get away with it; when housewives are compelled to walk 20 or more city blocks in search of a piece of meat for the dinner table and return home with Canadian bacon for which they have paid 95 cents per pound; when racketeering, brought on by O. P. A. regulations has skyrocketed meat prices beyond the pocketbook of the poor and even the middle class; when conditions like that are prevalent—and they are today—there is something very, very rotten in the bureaucratic woodpile, something that must be smoked out forthwith, if the national morale is to be maintained. But whatever the cause, and wherever the responsibility reposes, matters have reached the stage where the American people are asking "Why?" And as far as my own constituency is concerned, I can tell you they are asking in no uncertain terms.

Of course, there are some of us who have had the temerity to form our own opinions. Opinions that have crystallized into convictions, as ill-conceived regulations, born in the fertile minds of theorists and experimentalists with little or no practical experience in business or industry, have forced constituents to close down establishments that have flourished through the years.

Perhaps a few excerpts from a report of the National Association of Retail Meat Dealers, dated January 1942, may indicate the uncompromising O. P. A. approach to the formulation of regulations. I quote:

Unfortunately, every meeting attended by our representatives the past year is presided over by a new chairman and different groups, again emphasizing the trial and error method; in other words, if this doesn't work, we will try something else, with another set of Office of Price Administration officers.

Ten months ago officials of Office of Price Administration were conferred with and some practical recommendations discussed, but those in charge who wanted to try out their theories ignored the sound recommendations of businessmen, and, failing, were obliged to try something else. Hypocritical meetings were called to confer with meat experts, but their advice or recommendation is ignored unless in harmony with the blueprint—theoretical plans prepared for the conference.

Those are the reactions of meat retailers—reactions of the men who come in contact with the consumer every day in the year. They know the meat problem, not from theory, not from what textbooks have told them, not from experimenting in college classroom or laboratory, but from actual, practical, day in and day out experience with it, and they came to Washington to assist, to cooperate, to give O. P. A. the benefit of suggestions gleaned the hard way through the years. Their industry was affected by proposed regulations and they assumed that their suggestions would be accorded serious consideration. But apparently those who formulate regulations at O. P. A. feel they need no advice or suggestions from the practical phase of the various industries they tinker with, and that brings to mind an expression one frequently hears with reference to the O. P. A. attitude concerning its regulations, which is summed up like this: "If you do not like our regulations, get out of business."

But regardless of the beautiful phraseology of O. P. A. meat regulations, the civilian population still is not getting its equitable share of available meat. And it seems to me that the worth of these regulatory measures is summed up realistically and accurately by application of the before-and-after formula—before the regulations everybody had meat after the regulations nobody has meat. That is the reason the American people want to know why.

One answer is furnished by E. W. Williams, a food authority, in an editorial that appeared in Butcher's Advocate under date of January 13 last:

"Despite the Army and lend-lease," writes Mr. Williams, "there should be enough beef to go around in this country. Yet stores are closing for lack of beef, housewives and defense workers find it increasingly difficult to get meat.

"There are today more cows coming on the market than ever before. This is due to the labor shortage on dairy farms and will result in decreased breeding. Steers coming on the market are not fully mature, lacking in many cases about 300 pounds of potential meat and fat. This is because they come directly from the range and have not had the benefit of the feed lot.

"It would seem clear that the duty of the planners is to see that meat is grown which will produce every possible pound of beef and fat. But let us see what really happened. First, no effort has been made to stop the marketing of she cattle. Secondly, the Office of Price Administration repeatedly refuses to place a ceiling on livestock, thus setting prices on finished beef which are not sufficiently above the prices of range cattle to encourage raising cattle to maturity and getting the maximum amount of weight."

As early as August 14, last, Mr. Joseph Cohn, counsel and executive director or the New York Meat Trade Institute, addressed communications to both Leon Henderson of O. P. A. and Secretary Wickard of Agriculture, emphasizing the fact that current meat shortages, among other things, are due to the lack of a ceiling on livestock, and urging the establishement of such ceilings in price regulations then under consideration. Others, equally informed and experienced in the meat industry, advanced similar recommendations.

Several regulations fixing ceilings on various meats have emanated from O. P. A. since these suggestions were advanced. All are without the ceilings on livestock so urged. Apparently the boys who dream up the regulations at O. P. A. either want no advice from practical sources in industries or make a pretense of accepting it, and then toss it into the wastebasket. "If that doesn't work, we'll try something else," the head of an O. P. A. division once remarked to a friend of mine whose business future was at the brink of disaster as the result of O. P. A. theorizing. The let's-try-something-else impulse undoubtedly is an exhilarating one to the boys at O. P. A.; but it is not exhilarating to the housewife who walks 20 city blocks for a pound of hamburger, or to the poor who pay 68 cents for a pound of soup meat in New York City. And it should not be exhilarating to those of us here in the Congress whose constituents are in that category.

According to Secretary Wickard, the packers actually are buying livestock at a loss. In a radio address, delivered August 19 last, he said:

They are bidding more for livestock than the meat dressed out of the livestock will bring under existing price ceilings. They are doing this because they are willing to give up profits temporarily in order to keep their line-up of customers.

The Secretary's statement is absolutely accurate. But whenever the packers turn their backs on profits, it is time to look for the Ethiopian in the proverbial woodpile. And here it is: the packers are casting expectant eyes to the future. They control the meat industry now—thanks to the boys at O. P. A.—and by refusing to sell meat to competitive nonslaughtering processors and wholesalers, they put the latter out of business and eventually, take over their customers.

Several months ago O. P. A. issued price regulations on beef and lamb. During the same period it also issued what is known as meat restriction order No. 1, which limits slaughterers—packers—to 70 percent of their 1941 kill. The purposes of these measures were twofold; first, as announced in the price regulations, statement of considerations, to insure an equitable distribution of meat; and secondly, to keep prices at a level that would prevent inflation.

HAVE EITHER OF THESE OBJECTIVES BEEN ACHIEVED?

Ask wholesalers, processors, and retailers, who are going out of business because they cannot get meat from the packer. Ask the housewife who is paying abnormal prices for unpalatable meat. And ask the poor who are going without meat because they cannot afford to pay the "black market" prices.

If all of that spells equitable distribution and reasonable price levels, then Hitler and his murdering rabble are just a bunch of big-hearted, good-natured play boys.

The price regulations compel the packer to pay a discount of 50 cents per hundred pounds for meat sold to wholesalers or processors in less-than-carload lots; but they do not make the same discount applicable when the packer sells meat to hotel supply houses and retailers. In other words, it costs the packer money to sell to wholesalers and processors, but costs him nothing to sell to hotel supply houses or retailers. The packer has been accused of a lot of things through the years, but never, to my recollection, of being remiss in business acumen. And need I tell you who is getting his meat since the price regulations went into effect?

That is just another nail driven into the coffin of a branch of the meat industry that represents investments and facilities aggregating millions of dollars and employing thousands of skilled workers that know no other trade; a long-established, economically sound, and, despite the O. P. A.'s contention to the contrary, an essential and necessary branch of the industry.

But the final nail in the coffin—the act they call the coup de grâce in the parlance of the firing squad—takes the form of O. P. A. Meat Restriction Order No. 1. If any doubt existed as to whether rigor mortis had set in after the price regulations, the meat-restriction order removed all doubt. It left the nonslaughtering processor and wholesaler facing a future that spelled ruin with a capital R.

The phraseology of this order is innocent-appearing enough. It provides chiefly that slaughterers—packers—for 1943, must not kill more than 70 percent of the cattle slaughtered in the year 1941 for civilian consumption. Nobody can quarrel with the kill-limitation theory, but the order fails to specify what the slaughterer—packer—shall do with the 70 percent. And remember the packer is in competition with nonslaughtering processors and wholesalers. He maintains his own branch houses, his own processing plants, and one of his most burning desires, through the years, has been to eliminate competition from the independents. Well, O. P. A. has done the job for him. And what a job! The meat industry today is his—lock, stock, and barrel. For the packer—and who can blame him—is using the 70 percent for his own wholesale and processing plants, and for the retail trade—chiefly the chain stores—he wants to take from his competitors. And as for competition—it is no longer any contest.

I do not suppose it is a matter of any importance to those who formulate the policies and regulations at O. P. A. that the packers currently are under indictment for monopolistic practices. The Government, it seems, has been trying to keep them from gobbling up the little fellows of the industry. That is why they are in court. And it has been consistently a policy of the Department of Justice through the years to keep a watchful eye on their avaricious tendencies. But apparently a little matter like antitrust laws does not bother the boys at O. P. A. They have handed the packers a complete sky-is-the-limit monopoly on a silver platter. And one of the officials at O. P. A. who played a major role in framing the restriction order was loaned to O. P. A. by Armour & Co., with a 20-year background in the packing industry.

Quite recently the Office of Price Administration has been making a spectacular show of going after the so-called "black market." But it might be interesting to inquire, Who is responsible for the 'black market?" Is not it O. P. A.? If their meat regulations had permitted the normal distribution of meat what need would exist for a "black market?" There would be meat for everybody—packer, processor, wholesaler, and retailer. But under present conditions the packer calls the turn. The meat of the Nation has been placed entirely in his hands, to distribute as and how he sees fit. And we know that he is not delivering meat to wholesale and processing plants in competition with his own wholesale branch houses and processing plants. And we know also that, not possessing adequate distributive facilities, he cannot deliver meat to all of the retailers that wholesalers could deliver to, because wholesalers possess adequate facilities in the larger cities—facilities that permitted in most cases, Statewide, daily deliveries. That is why my people and your people cannot buy meat—and that is the genesis of your "black market."

Roy M. Cohen, an authority on meat, who writes for the Butcher's Advocate, has the following to say about the situation:

> We must show that the Office of Price Administration's theorizing is the direct cause of bootlegging "black markets," and that their threats will not remedy our situation at the present moment, calling spades spades, and the present methods of supplying meats to the consumer is so bad that it is just like an apple that is rotten to the core. The whole meat plan of the Office of Price Administration must be scrapped. We will have to start all over from scratch on a sound economic basis.

Only last Saturday one of our big retailers in Brooklyn said to me:

> For many years there has been a wholesale house and packing branch house in my district and I have been doing business with both, and never once has the price of the wholesaler been higher than that of the packing branch house. But I know that if the wholesale house goes, I will be at the mercy of the packer, and the Lord himself only knows what prices may be in that event.

Now, I would like to read for the record a letter which was received from a man who has been engaged in the meat-processing business for more than half a century. This is typical of the letters Members of both Houses have been receiving since the issuance of O. P. A. meat regulations and the restriction order:

> We have been engaged in the manufacture and the processing of sausage and meat products over 60 years. We have an organization of 25 employees and have recently completed an addition to our sausage plant due to the increased demand for our processed food products. After years of struggle and effort to establish our business, we find ourselves faced with a disastrous situation, being eliminated from business.
>
> Since the history of our business we have been purchasing beef and pork products necessary for the manufacture of sausage principally from the large packing houses, such as Swift, Armour, Morrell, Cudahy, Hammond, Dold, Kingan, and others. However, under present Office of Price Administration Meat Restriction Order No. 1, supplies lie entirely in the hands of the slaughterers. We have helped them to establish their quotas. At the present time they have usurped the entire quota for themselves and are not granting us any share of the quota which we helped to establish. Since they are not compelled to do so under Office of Price Administration regulations they are consequently taking advantage of the situation. We believe this to be monopolistic and greedy, an unfair practice, contrary to our Nation's principles of fair trade—the very principles for which this war is being fought.
> At this point we wish to make ourselves clear. We are in no way complaining about what the Government is taking, for we realize that our boys who are fighting for us must be fed, and fed well. We are only asking for a fair share of the quota. It looks to us as if the packers are making the world safe for the packers.

The plight of the man who wrote that letter is not an extraordinary, isolated case. It is rather, the plight of meat processors, wholesalers, and retailers all over the country. These men—most of them—are the little business men President Roosevelt declared the backbone of the Nation's economic structure. They have grown up with, and rendered honest, useful, and essential service to the communities of the Nation. For years in many instances more than half a century, they have constituted the medium that made meat available daily, to the butcher shop around the corner. Their service, their distributive facilities, and their dependability have brought meat to the Nation's dinner tables without interruption through the years. And any success, any prosperity that may have come to any of them, came because, in the beginning, they had faith in the promise that our system of government offers to all humans, the right to work out one's destiny without unwarranted interference from any source. And now that O. P. A. has decreed their liquidation not their utter ruin, the corner butcher shops of the Nation cannot get meat; black markets with prices beyond the means of the poor have come into being overnight and are flourishing; and the channels of distribution for meat are clogged, hopelessly. O. P. A. has decreed, by one or two strokes of some bureaucrat's pen, that the works these little business men have created by dint of honest toil must go. O. P. A. says they are necessary war casualties. I say they are not—they are not necessary war casualties. And here and now, I challenge anybody in O. P. A., in Agriculture, or any place else in the Government or out, to prove that their destruction is necessary to the winning of the war. And I say further, that unless and until O. P. A. can prove, by conclusive evidence, in a public hearing before a committee of this body, that these little business men of the Nation are not an integral and essential factor to the smooth flow of meat to the civilian population, they must immediately be placed in a position where the present packer monopoly, established by O. P. A. regulations, will not, and cannot deprive them of their just and equitable share of meat.

O. P. A. and Agriculture both know how this can be accomplished. Both have had before them for several weeks now, a plan—submitted by the processors and wholesalers—which sets up simple procedure and machinery for just and equitable allocation of the existing meat percentage allocated for civilian use; the percentage which, under existing conditions, the packer is devoting to his own use. This plan contemplates a situation where all factors of the industry will be able to secure meat.

It will free distributive channels now badly clogged and with meat available to all branches of the industry there will be no reason for the existence of the "black market."

One official at Agriculture pronounced the plan the clearest and most workable solution of the problem presented to date. But that seems to be the extent of any action on it, so far as that Department is concerned. Mr. Madigan of O. P. A. however—he is the former official of Armour & Co. who played a major role in preparation of the meat-restriction order that has put the finishing touches on the processors and wholesalers and has created a state of chaos with respect to current meat distribution—Mr. Madigan appears to feel it will take too long to work out the plan. I wonder if Mr. Madigan has observed the sign that seems to be plastered all over the walls at O. P. A. "the difficult can be done right away. The impossible takes a little while longer."

I have reached the conclusion that the present meat situation should be aired for the edification of the American public. The present mess is so muddled, so confused, and apparently so hopeless that nothing short of a thorough investigation by this body will clear the atmosphere and shed light on all persons and all interests responsible for it. If the responsibility reposes at O. P. A.—and I personally am convinced that is where it lies—or if it reposes elsewhere, let us make that determination—and let us make it quickly. For that reason I have introduced House Resolution 48 which, you will observe, aims to lay the entire meat problem open from beginning to end, by a complete and comprehensive investigation. We are faced with a situation where a certain percentage of meat has been made available to the civilian population and the civilian population is not getting it; where the Government is spending large sums of money and adding to the Government pay roll to make investigations, and prosecute persons allegedly operating on the "black market." And the "black market" is the direct result of lack of meat; lack of the percentage of meat allotted by the Government to the civilian population. Where is that percentage of meat? Why cannot our housewives get it? Why do they have to pay sky-high prices on the "black market," when meat should be available in their regular retail stores? Who is responsible for all of these things? The people of the Nation are asking these questions. They feel they should know. House Resolution 48 will accomplish that end.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I subscribe completely to all my colleague [Mr. O'TOOLE] has said concerning the meat situation. I happen to represent a constituency on the East Side of New York City; one that comprises fine, hard-working patriotic Americans. But most of my people are poor. They are the people of the Nation that find it difficult, frequently, to make both ends meet. But they are trying to do their share in the war effort. Their sons are fighting—and dying—on the battlefields of the world, as are the sons of other people, in other parts of the country. And they are prepared to make any sacrifice, cheerfully and willingly, to make the lot of the little people of the world a better and a happier one.

My people, too, most of them, are in the category mentioned by my distinguished colleague from New York. So long as there exists a "black market" for meat, with its prohibitive prices; so long as this present intolerable condition remain with us, where meat is available only to those who can afford to pay bootleg prices—the majority of my people will be unable to have meat on their dinner tables.

It is not easy for people who have steeled themselves to great sacrifices—for people who are willing to go without most of the small luxuries that helped dispel the shadows of a difficult existence—for people who have been told that this is everybody's war—to learn that an essential commodity like meat actually is available; but is not available to everybody, except at exorbitant prices. And when the housewives of my district are compelled to tramp the city streets and go from butcher shop to butcher shop, without finding meat for the dinner table that is within the range of their slender income, they are human, and they begin to wonder and ask questions. That is what is going on among the families of the East Side. They are asking one another—and asking me—by mail, by telephone, and by direct contact "Has not the Government told us there is sufficient meat for the armed forces, for lend-lease and a substantial amount for the civilian population? Where is it? Why cannot our butchers get it? The people up on Park Avenue get it; the big hotels have it; and there is a lot of it in the windows of the big Broadway restaurants."

I suppose that the little people all over the Nation—the middle class and the poor—are asking the same question. The Government said there was meat for all of us. Where is it? And I submit that when the people of the Nation begin asking questions of that character a definite, logical, and accurate explanation should be forthcoming forthwith. If there has been bureaucratic bungling, if the meat situation has become enmeshed in a jungle of red tape, if some of our governmental theorists have applied the wrong formula, it is high time the people were apprised of the error.

In the past few days the press has carried stories describing steps taken by the O. P. A. to curb the so-called "black market." One reads of arrests being made and of impending prosecutions by the score, and one observes statements by O. P. A. officials and by other Government, State, and municipal officials condemning "black market" practices and urging prosecutions and other measures. But it does not seem to have occurred to anyone that the best and most effective manner in which to curb and eliminate it is to attack it at its roots. Arrests, prosecutions, and statements do not mean anything unless the source of the evil definitely is erased. We did not stop prohibition violations until we repealed the prohibition law, and it does not seem necessary to recall the millions of dollars of taxpayers' money expended, as well as the hopelessly clogged Federal and State court dockets that continued until prohibition actually became a dead letter; and so it is important, I submit, that before we enter upon another law-enforcement era like that of prohibition we search out the causes of this black-market problem.

Current meat regulations were planned, sponsored, and issued by the O. P. A. They were sprung upon the industry several months ago, and immediately more civic worries, headaches, and difficulties came into being than ever flew out of the famed Pandora's box. Their purpose was, first, to insure an equitable distribution of meat, and, second, to keep prices at a level that would prevent inflation; neither of those objectives have been accomplished. In fact, instead of an equitable distribution of meat, a gross and notorious inequitable distribution is apparent; and instead of maintenance of prices at a level to prevent inflation, sky-high, exorbitant prices currently prevail, and whereas there was no "black market" before those regulations came into being, a healthy and flourishing black market has sprung into existence since their issuance.

It does not seem to me that it takes a meat economist, a mathematician, or a "superdooper" administrative genius to figure out the answer. As my colleague has said, "Apply the old before-and-after formula." Before O. P. A. theorists went into a huddle and came up with the meat regulations, everybody had meat, prices were not too high, and there was not a black market. After the huddle and the play, there is no meat, prices have skyrocketed, and we have a nice, big juicy black market.

The surest method for creating a scarcity of any commodity is to clog channels of distribution. O. P. A. meat regulations and orders do that very thing. How? Because they are putting the meat processor and wholesaler out of business and because the meat processor and wholesaler possess most of the distributive facilities of the industry. The packer now has the field practically to himself. He is sitting back, enjoying a more complete monopoly than ever was envisioned in his wildest and most ambitious dreams. Who "dun" it? O. P. A. with its little regulations and orders. The processor and the wholesaler had the distributive facilities; the packer had his branch houses, but not facilities for distribution comparable to those of his competitors. That is why our housewives cannot find meat at the corner butcher shop. It is not there because the packer, who now rules the meat roost, does not have sufficient means for reaching the thousands of retail shops that wholesalers and processors serviced daily. And regardless of the statements and explanations that are emanating from O. P. A., from Agriculture, and from other sources, meat will not be available in those little retail shops until the processor and the wholesaler are accorded the right to continue in business, which is being taken away by O. P. A. regulatory action.

All of this adds up to the word "investigation." If packer influences in O. P. A. have handed the meat industry to the packing interests, if O. P. A. bungling is responsible for the present meat mess, and if, as I am informed, O. P. A. and Agriculture both view the existing situation with complacency, the people of the Nation should have the opportunity to learn what brings things of that character about. For these reasons I favor the investigation envisioned by my colleague's resolution. But I favor more. I favor immediate remedial action by O. P. A. and Agriculture not only to save the millions of dollars invested in processing and wholesaling establishments, which have been in existence for years and have rendered efficient and honest service to their respective communities but to keep them in business by making meat available to them; meat that they can get to your corner butcher shop and those of my people on the East Side. Neither O. P. A. nor Agriculture can afford in these times to procrastinate or to temporize. Either they prove to us beyond a reasonable doubt that a sufficient supply of meat is not available or, failing in that, see to it that meat flows to the civilian population through its long-accustomed channels.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the other special orders today I may have 10 minutes in which to answer the city farmer on the beef shortage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] may extend his remarks in the Appendix and include a letter and statistics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] is recognized for 20 minutes.

COMMITTEE ON CIVILIAN AVIATION

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this time for the purpose of discussing with the membership of the House the pending proposal to establish a regular legislative committee on the subject of commercial aviation. What I shall say here this afternoon is wholly impersonal, and anything that I say to which objection might be taken is not intended as offensive to anybody concerned. I recognize the right of every Member of this House to have his own views and freely express them, and that is the reason I am expressing my views here today. I am opposed to the proposal on a good many grounds, only one or two of which I think it is necessary to state, to convince an impartial thinker that it ought not to be done. In the first place, as the gentleman who preceded me here this morning has just stated, we are now engaged, we do not know whether in the middle or in the front or in the last part of the most difficult war in the history of the whole world. We are fighting on every battle front where a fight can be staged, and are participating in this war on every continent in the world in one way or another. At this time, all ships of commerce in the air are under the supervision and control of the Army and Navy of the United States, and that is as it should be. I call attention now to a phrase in a statement that was made by your House Military Affairs Committee as a result of its investigation of these subjects and other subjects, which it was authorized to investigate, and I say that statement, when it came to the floor of the House in the form of a report, met with universal approval.

The House Military Affairs Committee for the past year and a half has been making many investigations, careful investigations, into the operation of the air power of this country. That, of course, was confined to military activities, as it should have been, and as any committee with authority and jurisdiction should do.

I was referring to a statement which we made in that report after these long months of study and investigation, and this is it:

> Whenever a new or varied problem is presented a new commission, board, committee, or agency is usually created. Let us concentrate and not duplicate.

That was a criticism of what was going on in the executive agencies and departments of the Government. What I am tremendously concerned about here today is not the question of whether my committee shall have jurisdiction of this, that, or the other, but it is a question of whether the House of Representatives is going to put itself in the attitude, through one of its special committees, of making a statement and then following up the practice that it has condemned in the executive departments of the Government.

Hardly a day passes but what somebody on the floor denounces bureaucracy. Hardly a day passes that somebody does not talk about duplication of effort. If I am not mistaken, the Congress has already passed four different measures seeking to consolidate and coordinate the executive agencies of the Government for the purpose of utilizing them more effectively and for the purpose of economizing in the expenditure of the taxpayers' money. That principle applied to Federal executive agencies is sound, and it is even more sound when it is applied to the legislative branch of the Government.

We have three regular standing committees, one of them more than 100 years old, another one close to a century old, and another one perhaps 50 years old. Those committees are regularly engaged in the investigation not only of interstate and foreign commerce, military affairs, and naval affairs, but the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, constituted as it is today, the personnel of which are able and capable statesmen, headed by the distinguished leader, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] enjoys, and ought to enjoy, the entire confidence of the membership of the House of Representatives. So long as we have that kind of a committee set-up, which has jurisdiction not only of the legislation to create but legislation to regulate, what reason is there to establish an additional legislative committee to deal alone with one of the many problems that are properly within the jurisdiction of that committee? In other words, the meaning of the thing is this, that we establish a regular legislative committee to be composed of 21 members to deal with peacetime civilian air commerce. If you do that, the next move may be to establish a committee to deal alone with rail carriers. The next move may be to establish a regular committee to deal with water carriers. The next move, a committee to deal with highway carriers, such as busses, trucks, and motor vehicles.

The reason I say that is this: I have proof of it in the Congressional Directory, because we have five committees now dealing with veterans' affairs and pensions, when, as a matter of fact, one committee could deal with the whole subject in a more concise and better way, without duplication, extra effort, and expense.

I find no fault with any of the excellent gentlemen who are on this special committee that has been investigating airplane accidents, but let me point out that one of the first resolutions they introduced—and there are two or three pending yet—provided that they were going to set up this committee for the purpose of dealing with civilian air commerce in its relation to the Army and the Navy. Now, if that is not authority to go out and deal with military and naval questions, I am somewhat uninformed and do not know how to think straight.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. NICHOLS I am sure the gentleman wants to properly inform the House. Of course, the resolution which is now being considered by the Committee on Rules has no reference, either by statement or inference, to military or naval aviation.

Mr. MAY. That is true, but I was not discussing the resolution nor any of them in that light. What I was pointing out was that a committee designated for a specific particular proposition might go out of its jurisdiction and invade the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or the House Military Affairs Committee. As evidence of that, and without any criticism whatever, of the distinguished and very capable gentleman from Oklahoma as chairman of the special committee that has made the investigations, and very ably made them with regard to air accidents, in the course of their investigation as to why an airplane fell here, there, or yonder, they found it necessary to look into a colony of Japanese in a foreign country to find out how many guns they had. They not only found that necessary, but they had meetings and assemblies with parliaments of foreign governments, none of which related to the sole question which they were authorized to investigate, that was to find out whether it was water in the gas, or whether it was bad equipment, or whether it was a foul in the mechanism of the airplane, or whether it was the failure of the pilot to read his orders, or whether it was bad weather conditions that brought about the airplane accident. I merely point that out, without any criticism or any feeling whatsoever, to show that when you set up a committee to deal with a particular subject, it is always difficult to keep from going out into the field of speculation and on the outside.

But now let us get ourselves in the right attitude. Why create a committee to deal with a subject that has been the matter of study by a regular House committee with long experience in all of the subjects relating to air transport and air traffic? Why bother the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee when they are going to deal from now on with problems in the realm of air commerce relating to air transport which we would have to authorize the other committee to deal with? Who set up the Civil Aeronautics Authority? Who created under that Authority the Air Commerce Board? So when you come to deal with the question of an additional legislative committee and the economy involved it may not be in dollars and cents but I find I have difficulty in holding down the cost of hearings in the House Military Affairs Committee perhaps due to the fact that we are almost constantly in session; but I believe that when you want to save money for the Government the man who knows how to save a penny will finally reach the economy of a dollar; the man who knows how to save $1 will finally know how to save $100; and the man who knows how to save $100 ultimately will save thousands. So it is not a question of necessity that exists here. The committee that has been appointed to make the investigation of air accidents has already performed its duty well; they have not only performed their duty, but they have asked permission for a 3-months' period of time to close their hearings, close their operations as a committee and go out of business. If they have finished the whole study of air accidents and you have your regular committees already established for the purpose of dealing with legislation and authority to deal with Air Corps personnel, then I say it is eminently improper at this time in the midst of a great war to make a change of this character.

What is the actual situation? The Army actually has in operation subject to its own control today a little more than one-half of all of the commercial air lines of this country. It not only operates those commercial air lines to points within the United States, but to points without the United States. Upon every battle front where our country is engaged in war they are coordinated and synchronized into the American Army Air Corps and Naval Air Corps. If they are welded together and mixed together in such way that they are under military supervision, nobody knowing how long this war is going to last, nobody willing to predict as to when it will end, nobody able to say whether it will be 2 years longer, 5 years longer, or 10 years longer, why take this step until we see where we are and get our feet on the ground and then move forward with the question of the appointment of a special or regular legislative committee dealing with this question?

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Can the gentleman give us any information as to whether the commercial planes in foreign countries, such as Great Britain, are operated by the military at the present time, or whether they are under some independent set-up?

Mr. MAY. They are under the supervision of the American armed forces, or the War Department; in other words, under the jurisdiction of General Arnold, the Chief of the Air Corps of the United States, so far as their operation is concerned.

Mr. REED of New York. I believe the gentleman did not understand my question. I asked the gentleman if foreign governments, such as Great Britain, for instance, had their planes operated by the military or whether they were operated under an independent set-up.

Mr. MAY. The Royal Air Force, of course, operates the Army planes for the British Government.

Mr. REED of New York. All right; now, I am talking about the commercial planes; what is being done about them over there?

Mr. MAY. It is my understanding there are no commercial planes in England right now, in the sense that commercial lines must have permits from the military authorities similar to our own situation.

Mr. REED of New York. I think the gentleman must be mistaken.

Mr. MAY. If there are any operating I believe they are controlled by the Army exactly as they are here; that is my understanding. The commercial aviation of Britain, of course, is operated by private companies, subject to control by the military.

Mr. NICHOLS. And, if the gentleman will yield, lend their efforts to the military and are under military control.

Mr. MAY. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. NICHOLS. In Germany only 2 weeks ago the German military took over all the commercial air lines in Germany; but that is not true in Britain; neither is it true in Canada. It is the same system we have here.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The gentleman from Oklahoma knows that the commercial air lines in foreign countries are under quasi-military control.

Mr. MAY. That is it exactly.

Mr. NICHOLS. Oh, no.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Just the same as our commercial air lines are.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman also knows that commercial aviation is operating in Great Britain to a very negligible extent.

Mr. NICHOLS. No.

Mr. MAY. They are flying to the armed fronts almost exclusively and are under military control; that is about the only place they go.

Mr. NICHOLS. They fly for military uses just the same as our lines do here, but they are owned privately.

Mr. MAY. The Royal Air Force has the final say as to what passengers, express, and mail shall be carried.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I was about to say they cannot leave an airfield to fly out of Great Britain without first having the O. K. of the Royal Air Force.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman has stated the matter as I understand it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman has discussed this question intelligently, of course, from his standpoint and I followed the argument carefully. I believe, however, that the gentleman said to the House that we could keep the status quo of the subject of commercial and civil aviation, or words to that effect.

Mr. MAY. No.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I believe the gentleman would be the last person to say that we have kept the status quo from the standpoint of the prosecution of this war by the armed forces of the United States. The gentleman knows that constantly we are making changes and are using aircraft to a greater degree and that within the organizations of the War Department and the Navy Department there is a constant change going on giving greater emphasis to air power.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman misunderstood me if he thought I said that the status quo was being maintained. I do not think I used those words at all.

Mr. RANDOLPH. No. I used them.

Mr. MAY. What I meant to say was that more than half of the commercial air lines of this country are now subject to the control and direction of the War Department. The other half is rapidly becoming so, because as the needs of the country develop and as the war problems become more difficult, the Army must take over. To that we all agree.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITTINGTON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. The chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, who has just retired from the floor, objects to the proposed committee because it will cause interference with jurisdiction in the House. Under existing law and rules the Military Affairs Committee has jurisdiction over military aviation. The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has jurisdiction over commercial aviation. If this other committee were set up to deal with commercial aviation alone, there could be no more conflict in jurisdiction under that set-up than there is today?

Mr. HINSHAW. None whatever.

Mr. Speaker, I have listened with intense interest to the addresses that have been made to this House by various chairmen of important committees. One of the gentlemen, of course, is my own chairman, the deeply revered and honored chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. As a member of that committee I perhaps should not be here in the Well of the House advocating a procedure which is inconsonant with his ideas or the ideas of others on that committee, including the ranking members on my side of the committee.

I have also heard the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] just now, and on yesterday the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], discuss this very same subject. They are highly respected in their own fields. I do not intend to launch into a general support of any contention that we should have a standing committee on aviation for the mere purpose of creating a new committee when we already have some committees whose work might well be consolidated, or for the purpose of robbing either the Military or the Naval Affairs Committees of their jurisdictions.

I am concerned, however, over the fact that both the Military Affairs and the Naval Affairs Committees would themselves be concerned over the creation of a standing committee on aviation. They doubtless have reasons of their own, but as this proposed committee would not take jurisdiction from them in any way I cannot see the cause for concern on their part unless it be the fear of both of those committees that there ultimately will be set up a standing committee which will take jurisdiction of aviation matters for both the Army and Navy which would, of course, mean first a separate air force. I know no Member of the House will stand on the floor and advocate that there be set up in this time of war a separate air force. That certainly could be a mistake.

However, I do believe that after this war is over and after the men return from the front, and this question is given sober consideration by all men who know well the problems of the Army and the Navy, at that time, probably, the armed forces of the United States will be divided into a land force, a sea force, and an air force, and there will be provided for those forces an over-all general staff in order that they may be coordinated in their various theaters of action to a far better degree than they have been in the past. I have heard men from both services, high in position, express themselves in that way. But that is not the point, that is not the thing that we are considering here at the present time.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina, distinguished member of my Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman introduced a resolution for a separate committee, did he not?

Mr. HINSHAW. Oh, yes; it is House Resolution No. 11.

Mr. BULWINKLE. And the gentleman provided in his resolution that jurisdiction would be taken from the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House, the Naval Affairs Committee and the Military Affairs Committee also, did he not?

Mr. HINSHAW. No; I do not believe so.

Mr. BULWINKLE. State what your resolution provided.

Mr. HINSHAW. May I state what I have in mind?

Mr. BULWINKLE. State what your resolution was.

Mr. HINSHAW. It reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Rules of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, amended as follows:

To rule X add the following:

"40B. On Air Services, to consist of 25 Members."

To rule XI add the following:

"40B. To Air Services, other than appropriations therefor, including all commercial and civil aviation and including their relationship with or between Army and Naval Air Services, and including meteorological services."

Let me explain that resolution. There was no intention in that language whatever of including the affairs of the Military and Naval Affairs Committees. May I say further that any commercial aviation set-up in the United States is per se related to the military and the naval, because in itself it is a part of the national defense under the Civil Aeronautics Act which the gentleman ably joined in presenting to the House as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce before I came here. The civil aviation of this country, including civil pilots and commercial pilots, and all of the airplanes that go along with it, are a part of the national defense. It is certainly a part of the duty of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, as well as it would be of any standing committee on aviation, to have due regard for the relationship between civil aviation and the military and naval aviation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. It is my understanding then that the gentleman did not intend to take any jurisdiction at all from any other committee aside from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee?

Mr. HINSHAW. That is correct.

Mr. BULWINKLE. May I not remind the gentleman of how he introduced that bill?

Mr. HINSHAW. I took the language from another bill and added some language of my own because I did not feel myself entirely competent to draw a proper technical amendment to the rules of the House. But that is a common practice. I may mention that I added additional language to it because I was concerned that another service be added to the jurisdiction of the civil aviation committee, and I refer to the subject of meteorology. If there is anything more vital to aviation than meteorology I do not know what it is, and certainly any standing committee on aviation in the House should also have jurisdiction over the subject of meteorology in this government, because it has been partly the development of meteorology that has enabled the airplane pilots to do the things that they are now doing in flying weather and in avoiding weather all over the world. It is a fact that the exacting requirements of commercial aviation in respect to weather observation and forecasting has spurred meteorology to new and remarkable accomplishments of enormous benefit not only to aviation but to almost every civil pursuit, not to mention the military.

Now let me proceed.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction over many important subjects. When it comes to considering the separation of some of its duties and placing them in another committee, it may be said that the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is the mother of committees, for certainly the committees I shall name and perhaps others have sprung from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. As was so ably stated, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was the second committee formed in the House of Representatives 147 years ago. I do not know how many committees have sprung from that committee, but I understand that the following have, although I have not checked the facts:

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; the Committee on Flood Control, which split off in its turn from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation and all of the general committees having to do with veterans' affairs and pensions that one gentleman has mentioned heretofore.

There are certainly four if not nine or more committees of the House that have sprung from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and no one here will say that if that committee still had jurisdiction over the matters now handled by those other committees it would be able to accomplish the work of all of them and do its own work as well.

Another statement has been made that I should like to discuss very briefly, namely, that all air commerce today in the United States is under the jurisdiction or under the control of the Army or the Navy. Practically speaking, that is correct, because, as everyone knows, one can hardly get on an airplane without a priority. Also, the number of airplanes that have been retained in the service of the domestic air lines is a little more than half the total number employed at the beginning of this war. The balance of the planes and a good many in addition are operated by what is known as the Air Service Command, which operates the air freight and transport system of the United States Army. Who operates the Air Service Command? Do you know? The United States air lines as a group operate the Air Service Command through the supply of its various functions in dispatch, in traffic, and in other features of the commercial air lines used by the Air Service Command, and a good many of the pilots and copilots of the air lines of the United States have gone on those lines.

If the air lines of the United States had not been available to take over that very important function for the United States air force, great confusion would have resulted, for they would not have had personnel trained and organized in the handling of that particular type of business—I mean freight and passenger transport. This is one of the great contributions the air lines of the United States have made to this war. They have made many other important contributions as well.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I think the gentleman might also add to his statement a word about the masterful work being done by the air-line pilots, that on several occasions they have pinch-hit for the Army and transported Army equipment over long distances on uncharted air lanes when the Army did not have the trained personnel available to take over the planes.

Mr. HINSHAW. I appreciate the gentleman's suggestion. But because this is not an executive session of the House, I do not propose to discuss that matter here, although what the gentleman has said is exactly correct.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. It is also true, is it not, that veteran air-line pilots who are today operating these services for the Army are at the same time performing a very valuable service in training copilots who are young Army officers?

Mr. HINSHAW. That is quite correct, I believe, although some difficulty was experienced in persuading the Army Air Force that its pilots could learn something from old experienced air-line pilots.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. May I read to the House a portion of a letter from General Marshall on the very subject of whether or not there is a commercial air-line system in the country and what it is doing. The following paragraphs are from a letter dated November 6 from Gen. G. C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, United States Army, addressed to the air-line industry:

> My business of the past 6 months has involved me in flights into active theaters. On each occasion I was in the hands of commercial pilots, so from that point of view it seems to me they are participating in active operations.
> However, my principal concern would be that they do not forget that in their personal desire to get into the active fighting they must not let us down in the tremendously important service of the transportation operations in which they are now engaged. Although in a civilian status, your personnel engaged in these operations have been performing not only a very great service for the Army and Naxy and, therefore, for the Nation, but to my mind an equally patriotic service with that of Army and Navy pilots.
> I very much hope that your personnel will keep on with this job which is essential to our business of getting on with the war.

Mr. HINSHAW. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, and I should like to remind the other gentlemen again that commercial aviation is not dead in the United States, for the time being or permanently or anything else. One of the reasons it is not dead today is that, perhaps exceeding their jurisdiction but still being Members of the House of Representatives, certain Members insisted that if there was going to be a taking over of the air-lines personnel by the United States Army those air lines and the functions they performed should be conducted as a unit, and that the personnel itself should not be dispersed all over the world, because then the air lines truly would be destroyed. It is a mighty good thing for us and our allies in this war that we had a strong and going air-transport industry in this country that could take over and expand into a world-wide network of military transport by air. And the end is not yet here. As the new great air-transport fleet comes off the assembly lines we will really have something, but we should have had it long ago. That, however, is another story.

I yield now to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, by the action of this Congress we created the so-called air-mail pick-up system, whereby the plane in flight drops and picks up the mail without the use of any landing facilities. There are approximately today in 6 States 115 communities being so served. The Civil Aeronautics Board at this time has applications to serve an additional 1850 communities in the United States, in more than 34 States. That program certainly is valuable, not only now but in the future, and will deserve the attention of a standing committee.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is quite correct. Let me go on now and mention a few more of the lesser things that should concern a standing committee on aviation. For example, one clever little device is of special importance to our aviation. It has been paid relatively little attention heretofore, even by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, although they have supplied the funds and built and operate this particular device. I do not know why, and they do not seem to know why, when you ask them—why the use of this device has not been expanded long since. I refer to the blind-landing system that is experimentally installed in one location in the central portion of the United States, a most vital thing. It is a device that will enable our aircraft to come into an airport practically at a zero ceiling and in low visibility. It would be exceedingly valuable to military aircraft as well as civil. It is amazing that its use has not been expanded, although every pilot who has flown it is sure that he can come into an airport safely under that system. That is something that will enable us to do remarkable things.

The Germans also have a device for almost blind landing, known as the Telefunken set. That is operated similarly to but at the same time very differently from our radio beam. Some Members of the House certainly should be out making studies not only of the great problems of world commerce in all its various aspects, but all these other things so that they might be able to come to their fellow Members and translate to them and tell them the great truths that have been discovered. Only in that way can the busy membership as a whole become cognizant of the full importance of, the needs of, and the progress of commercial aviation.

Under authority to extend my remarks, may I add that, as everyone knows, a million or two young men will come back from the war as experienced men in aviation. Another million or so will have become experienced in aircraft production. Other countries will have large numbers of aviation people to consider. Let us be in on the ground floor. Let us not wait until too late to prepare for the employment of our people after the war. The subject of aviation alone is big enough to absorb the full available time of a committee of the Congress. Let us take the progressive step and set up a standing committee on aviation—now. Let us not again be too late with too little.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] for 15 minutes.

CIVIL AVIATION COMMITTEE

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, we have heard during the last few days a great deal of discussion regarding the proposal to create a new committee in the House to handle civilian aviation. The question has been raised as to why the Military and the Naval Affairs Committees of the House should become interested in this question. I am quite sure that those of you who have been in attendance at this discussion, who were present at the executive meeting of the House, the first one that I have ever witnessed, will agree with me that the great basis of the argument made by the proponents of this proposal to create this new standing committee is largely a criticism of the War and Navy Departments. Gentlemen discussed almost entirely the War and Navy activities. They discussed their trip down into South America, and told us the great military things that they had uncovered down there. Of course, I think most of you will agree with me that much of the information that was given to the Congress was information that could have been read in the newspapers at any time during the past 2 years. In fact one of the gentlemen commented on the possibility of standing in the Pacific Ocean and being able to toss rocks at oil derricks on the coast of South America. I invite the gentleman and his committee to come to California and there they may duplicate that function. As a matter of fact, if the gentleman is a good swimmer, he might be able to swim out to several derricks placed in the water and if he had a good hatchet with him, he could hack on through the casing under the water. We were even told of Japanese bean fields down there that might be used as landing fields. Why, you have had the same kind of stories coming out of California day after day and month after month for the past 10 years, and it did not require a special committee to investigate the safety of our air lines to uncover those facts.

A great deal of criticism was directed at the War Department itself. One of the things brought up was the construction of commercial aircraft, and the air force was criticized because they attempted to stop production of commercial airplanes. It is all right to stand here and say that today we need a vast number of cargo planes, and yet 6 or 8 or 10 months ago the War Department through the air force attempted to stop that production. Why? Let us have the explanation. This country is engaged in a great war, a war whose complexion changes from week to week and month to month. When the lend-lease bill was passed in this Congress England was crying for aid, and what did she want? They wanted fighter planes to ward off German attack across the English Channel. They needed lots of them and they need them right now. When they had protected the channel, the picture changed. They wanted then to go on and bomb France, and they wanted light and short range bombers, and so the demand in this country was not for many fighter planes, but for light bombers. Then they wanted to bomb farther inland, and wanted long range bombers, and later this program of going into Africa developed, and they wanted some real long range ships.

The program of transporting cargo by air came into being subsequently. Then the necessity for cargo planes developed. But you only have so many airplane factories. You are only producing so many engines and you only have so much aluminum. At any given time you must allocate available supplies for those things that you need most. So it does not come with good grace to stand here and criticize the War Department because, appreciating the immediate necessity of the war which called for fighter planes and bombers, and did not call at that moment for cargo ships, that they therefore should curtail the production of cargo ships.

Many members of the Military and Naval Affairs Committees took this matter up with the War Department, just as did the members of that special investigating committee. We urged a continuance of our commercial airplanes. We urged that the air lines be given additional ships, but we were willing to see to it that our military needs came first, even at the sacrifice of the needs of our commercial aircraft.

Yes; our commercial airplanes are functioning. They are not only functioning all over the United States but they are functioning all over the world under the direction of the air force, and the Chief of the Army Air Forces has directed the establishment of air lines to every known spot upon this globe. The Army has developed the largest system of global air lines ever conceived. You say that they have brought in the commercial air lines to handle that job. Yes; that is true. The War Department is making use of every trained available man it can get to perform the function for which that man was trained. In the years that have gone by, your Army Air Force, through its pilot-training program, has trained the great majority of the pilots who serve the commercial air lines of this country. A great majority of them are Reserve officers of the Army Air Force. What is more natural, then, than that the air force should call upon those men whom the air force has trained to come and give service to the Army in its time of need? They have not been trained in recent years in combat flying. Those pilots know only the normal routine flying that is called for in the Ferry Command, in cargo dispatching. Therefore we called in the air lines to handle that noncombatant branch of the air force duty. As a result, we are able to employ this vast group of pilots to their greatest ability.

One point I would like to call to your attention is this question of post-war aviation, of which we have heard a great deal. I ask you who is going to direct the post-war aviation program? The Committee on Aviation in the House of Representatives? It seems to me that that program is going to rest almost exclusively in the hands of the State Department. It is the Secretary of State, in negotiating the peace treaty and in handling trade treaties following the war, who is going to be able to dictate whether we maintain our air lines as we have them today or whether we sacrifice them to other countries. Our Army Air Forces have gone out and established those lines. Our Army Air Forces are anxious to see America maintain those lines, but it will rest in the hands of the Department of State whether we do or not. The committee of this House that will have most influence there would be the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but more particularly that matter is going to rest on the other side of the Capitol. It is going to rest in the hands of the Senate, because the Senate will have to ratify whatever treaties may be entered into.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I wonder if the gentleman has read a recent book, of which Roland Young is the author, on the subject of Congress, What Is It? The New York Times of Sunday had a very extensive and commendatory review of the book. The New York Times said that every Member of Congress should read it. The paramount recommendation suggested in this book was that Congress should reduce the number of its committees; that it had too many committees.

Mr. COSTELLO. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. I have not read the book, but I think I can agree with the conclusion, and particularly emphasize, as the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] pointed out yesterday, that his committee is now handling all branches of transportation. There is no more logical thing than to concentrate in the hands of a single committee that one field of transportation, and the minute you start to segregate and scatter it in a dozen different committees you will have duplication and much of the confusion that we have in many of our bureaus because of the fact that there is overlapping authority and too many departments trying to handle similar or identical things.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. In yesterday's issue of the Washington News there is an article by someone writing on the subject of congressional committees in Congress in which they say it is laughable as to the number we have.

Mr. COSTELLO. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for his contribution.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. Regardless of what committee or committees handle the problems of aviation, I hope that in this current discussion somebody will take a pencil and paper and with the proper basic information do a little figuring on supply stations and repair bases to maintain cargo air transport. The Subcommittee on Military Appropriations has discussed the problem of airplane transportation with representatives of the War Department at various times. I think it is the opinion of the members of that committee that there is a place for air transportation of critical items, but that many of the general statements about large-scale air transportation will bear considerable scrutiny. For instance, maintaining a supply line to fuel and maintain the cargo planes themselves would be a problem not much smaller than the problem of carrying the original cargo, especially in certain theaters of operation. I like and everybody likes the idea of speed but supplying a modern army calls for moving a lot of old-fashioned heavy freight.

Mr. COSTELLO. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, and he is quite correct. When you fly cargo by plane you are only carrying pounds, but when you send it by boat you are carrying tons. There is the answer to your air transportation problem. When you start to maintain two or three million men overseas, equip them with their munitions, food, and implements of war, you are going to have to transport hundreds of thousands of tons of material; if you do not do that you are not going to have an efficient Army.

There is one other point I want to make and I want to impress it upon you very deeply: We would not have in this country today an aviation industry; we would not even have commercial airplanes in this country if it were not for the support, the aid, and the encouragement that the War and the Navy Departments have given to this industry. The small number of commercial and civilian airplanes that were purchased in a year was so insignificant that undoubtedly we should not have had any development of that character in the country except for the tremendous purchases on the part of the Army and the Navy. The experimentation they have encouraged, the pressure they have brought upon our manufacturers to produce bigger, better, and larger planes is one of the greatest factors furthering the development of commercial aviation in this country. I may say to you that at least 6 years ago I went into the office of General Arnold. At that time he showed me on his desk a little slip of paper in which he had marked out the size of the current airplanes. Next came 40,000 pound ships; and he turned to me and said: "We are going to make them 80, and we will get them up to 120,000 pounds, and when we get there we will just be starting." Then he showed me a little ship, a model which he had; he pulled back the cloth and there was a wooden model of an airplane with four engines; it was the Boeing bomber, the Flying Fortress of which we hear so much today. It is the plane that today is doing more in this war perhaps than any other single type of plane.

It is the support of the War and the Navy Departments that has built this industry. I say to you that for these reasons the Military and the Naval Affairs Committees of the House are naturally very much concerned when they see these two Departments being criticized as though they were trying to hold back aviation, as though they were trying to thwart its development when the truth is that these two Departments of the Government have done more to promote aviation in this country than any other force we have in the Nation.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I agree with the gentleman that both the Army and the Navy have made great contributions to the development of aviation in recent years; but I presume that the gentleman will agree with me that we led the world in commercial aviation before the military or the Navy gave any impetus to the development of commercial aviation in this country.

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman says we led the world in the development of commercial aviation before the military or the Navy added anything. I question his statement very definitely, because it is the force of the War and Navy Departments that has been constantly pushing the development of aircraft, that has brought about the fine type of transport plane that we now have; it is that force that has brought about the development of our own airplanes so that American ships are known all over the world and are appreciated because of their quality and workmanship—almost exclusively because of the interest of the War and Navy Departments in developing and building newer, bigger, and better ships. Because of that we developed these huge transport ships.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I am interested to know at what period it was that the Army and the Navy did not have an interest in aviation.

Mr. COSTELLO. I do not know that there ever was any period in which the Army and Navy did not have an interest in aviation.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Or in its advancement.

Mr. COSTELLO. The gentleman is correct. As a matter of fact, the men who are at the top of our Army Air Forces are men who started in aviation either before or at the time of the World War, and they have had their hands in it ever since. General Arnold could tell you some stories out of his personal experience of flying boxes and crates when they were held together by wires—flying them through the worst kind of storms—tell you any number of hair-raising experiances that he personally has had. We have at the head of our Army Air Forces a general who is willing to take any airplane anywhere he would ask any one of his men to take them. He has been in aviation from its very beginning and is a man who perhaps has done more for aviation in this country than any other single individual in the Nation. I say this without qualification.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] is entitled to recognition for 15 minutes, but will the gentleman from Nebraska yield to permit several Members to submit unanimous-consent requests?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield, Mr. Speaker, for that purpose.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(Mr. SHAFER asked and was given unanimous consent to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter I received from a former colleague of ours, one of the ablest men who ever served in the House, the Honorable Ross A. Collins, of Mississippi, together with an enclosure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Judge Wyman that he made to some men who were convicted of evading the draft.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

CREATION OF A SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AVIATION

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I request that I be not interrupted until I have completed my prepared statement.

Mr. Speaker, for several days we have been listening to some very fine addresses concerning the creation of a new committee on aviation. It may be true that the last speaker does not have a chance; perhaps you have already heard too many speeches; if so I am informed that the exits are still open and the retirement of any of the Members from this Chamber will not embarrass me in the least.

AVIATION IN THE POST-WAR WORLD

Mr. Speaker, I want to go on record as favoring the creation of a new standing committee in the House of Representatives to give attention to civil aeronautics, this committee to have jurisdiction over the legislative program for peacetime commercial aviation. We cannot stop the wheels of progress. Whichever nation dominates the airways of the world in the post-war days will be the greatest force for shaping the events of the world. If that nation is the United States, air domination will be a force for good. Therefore the expansion of aviation by the United States is both an opportunity and a responsibility. The time to act is now.

The Congress of the United States should have a committee on aviation, preparing for that day when the world will again be at peace. No good American wants to advocate anything, regardless of its merits, which would detract in the least from the winning of this war in the shortest possible time. That does not mean that we should not plan and lay the foundation for our economy that will follow this war. Much of the world trade of tomorrow is going to be carried on through the skies.

The peoples of the earth, whether they be in far-off Asia or our good neighbors to the south, are going to buy the products that are brought to them quickly and efficiently. That nation which dominates the air lanes, which has the bases, the fields, and the facilities, will be the nation that can supply that trade. It is true that much of the bulky and heavy shipments will never be made by air. But the air lines will supply the contacts and lines of communications from which trade will follow.

There are many reasons why we should expand aviation within our own country. Aviation will be expanded. If not by the United States, it will be expanded by others. In order that we, as a nation, keep abreast of the times, it is essential that we recognize the great aviation industry, which is so typical of American genius, by creating a standing committee in the House of Representatives to have jurisdiction over aviation and to assume responsibility on the part of our Government for its future development.

For this Congress to stand in the way of this progress, certainly is to get off the beam. It has always been the practice of the House of Representatives to adjust its committees to the needs of the times. Not many years ago, the Congress created a standing Committee on Flood Control, because of the tremendous flood problem that was developing in our Nation. Today, everyone recognizes the necessity and importance of that committee. With that same objective in mind, other committees, such as the ones on Mines and Mining, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Agriculture, Rivers and Harbors, and other like committees, have been created. It is said by some that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce should assume this job and that a new committee should not be created for aeronautics.

I have the utmost respect for the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of this House. I am convinced that some of the ablest Members of the House compose that committee, but they have a tremendous job on their hands. Their attention is not only directed to the railroads and truck and bus lines of the country, but they have jurisdiction over legislation relating to other forms of communication, such as telephone, telegraph, and radio. We have on that committee some outstanding individuals, who have become experts, but I submit that most of them are experts in other forms of transportation and not in aviation. The future for aviation is so big that we need a committee assigned to that task alone. It should also be borne in mind that, while the title of the committee that I have mentioned—the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—indicates that it has jurisdiction over foreign commerce, the facts are that its time and attention are absorbed with the pressing problems of our domestic or interstate commerce.

As we approach the post-war days, we have to think of world commerce. Either the United States must have a network of peacetime commercial air lines, meeting the needs and demands of Central and South America, or some other country, whose economic interests are adverse to ours, will gird South America with air lines, and with these great air lines of tomorrow and the radio they will dominate the culture, the ideas, and the trends of our South American neighbors as they have in the past. If the United States girds the entire globe with commercial air lines, it will mean that we will have "eyes that see 'round the world." What is more, it will mean the police force that we must have in the many parts of the world will be materially lessened, because an air base that can accommodate a passenger plane can also accommodate our military flying units.

This time we must see to it that our enemies stay licked. The war dogs and the totalitarian cliques of Germany and Japan must be brought to their knees and receive a good taste of what they have been inflicting upon the other peoples of the world. But that is not all—we must see to it that they are forever placed behind the well-known "eight ball." We must be in a position to overwhelm them from a military standpoint for a long, long time, and be able to do it on short notice.

Today the dollars provided by the American taxpayers are being spent in every corner of the earth. The blood of American boys is being spilled on every continent and countless islands of the seas. We cannot let that sacrifice be in vain. We must be so strong that a Hitler or a Tojo will never dare rise up again. By a world-wide expansion of commercial aviation we can at the same time make that task easier and do it with fewer troops on foreign soil.

In addition to that, the commerce of the United States will be greatly improved. No one can excel the Americans in making things and in marketing them if we set ourselves to the task. That nation which leads in the air will lead in the sale of its products; but that is not all, it will sell to the world the American idea of freedom, liberty, peacetime commerce, and representative government. It will cause the entire world to look to the United States and to realize that a free people get along better and are stronger than anybody else.

I would mention one other reason why we need to give time and attention now to post-war aviation within the United States—the taxpayers of this country have huge investments in almost every State in the Union in air bases, air schools, airfields, airplane factories, and other facilities. These great resources should not be abandoned and wasted. Every one of them should be made use of, not only to advance the transportation of tomorrow, but in line with economy and good business practice it will benefit taxpayers of this country.

Today, we are training thousands of American boys in aviation. They are becoming pilots, observers, mechanics, photographers, and skilled technicians of every sort. I favor this training program. It is going to be a vital factor in winning the war. In fact, some months ago I stressed on the floor of the House the necessity of extending aviation training to our high schools. I still favor that. But, when this war is over, are we going to send all of these boys back to loaf in front of the corner drug store in idleness? The expansion of peacetime world-wide commercial aviation will provide the answer to our employment problem. It will increase our world trade and commerce and thereby make for employment in our factories and on our farms. This is the American way, and from the employment angle alone, it will offer much more than a glorified leaf-raking program.

There are those who say, "Let's put off consideration of this until the war is over." That should not be done. This is a big job. This is the time to do it. The men chosen for this committee will have to give a great deal of thought and study to the problem that is placed in their hands. By taking this forward step now we will not detract from the war-time aviation effort carried on by the Committee on Military and Naval Affairs. Neither will we take one ounce of steel or any other critical material to expand commercial aviation, if the same is needed for military purposes, but we should get ready for the job that lies ahead. If the United States does not do it, some other nation will and the United States will become a second-rate nation.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman from Nebraska speaks with what I believe to be sound judgment on this subject. I do not want to commend the gentleman for the purpose of flattery, but I recall months and months ago the extended arguments when he spoke about the need for aviation courses in the high schools of this country. Certainly that must be done, not by haphazard, slipshod methods which are now employed, but by an over-all picture in every high school in the country at least in September 1943.

The second point, if the gentleman will indulge me, is this: He spoke about the desirability of going ahead now, not waiting, and he is correct, because these problems, even though we cannot attack them as of today, are here and careful consideration should be given to them now.

I call your attention to the Pennsylvania turnpike operating between Pittsburgh and Harrisburg. That is not only for high-speed traffic in the days of peace when those days come again, but we are going to have development of the so-called photocell whereby we will be able to stop highway traffic moving on that great road and dozens of other roads like it which will be built throughout the country, and we will know that great planes are going to come in and use that surface for landings and take-offs. The traffic will be blocked off for a moment. This is one of the tiny, although important developments, that we see in the future and it should be studied now.

Mr. CURTIS. I thank the gentleman, and may I ask him a question?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the gentleman feel, if some other nation whose economic interests are adverse to ours dominates the airways, owns the fields and all the facilities on any continent, that we can break in there for any kind of trade whether we ship by water, by land or by air?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman is correct. There was a day when we were laggards from the standpoint of filling out the white sails of the commerce of this country. Let us not become laggard again. Let us move forward and bring not only commerce and trade to the United States from all nations, but let us bring a preservation of the peace. It will come about only by this method.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I subscribe to the splendid theories and sentiments expressed by the gentleman. In reference to expanding our trade by air, and also expanding our world commerce, I wonder if the gentleman has considered the Atlantic Charter, the master agreement with Great Britain and the four freedoms, wherein it has been agreed already by this country that the commerce is to be shared with other countries of the world and we will not have the opportunity to go ahead? The gentleman knows that we are having a fight now in South America with Great Britain to see who is going to get the commerce of South America. While I agree with the gentleman generally, I hope he will give us a further dissertation at some time in the future with reference to the effect of those things on our future expansion of commerce.

Mr. CURTIS. I am sorry I haven't time to answer the gentleman.

WILLIAM J. JEFFERS

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Mr. William J. Jeffers, Director of Rubber in the War Production Board, for his frank and fearless statement to the country in regard to our rubber situation. I want to assure Mr. Jeffers that in my opinion the people of the United States are back of him. I believe Congress is back of him, and it is my sincere hope that he will continue to expose the dangers that our country is approaching. Our Nation is geared to an economy that must have rubber if we are to furnish materials for war and food necessary for our own people and our allies. This administration has bungled the rubber program from its very inception, and it is time that someone in administrative authority informed our people of the seriousness of the situation. We are now advised by Mr. Donald Nelson of the W. P. B. that in 1943 our Nation will be able to produce only 55 percent of the rubber recommended by the Baruch report, and Mr. Nelson makes the further statement that none of it will be available for civilian use. The picture is not much more encouraging for the year 1944. It is late, but not too late to make plans to produce a large amount of grain alcohol which can be converted into materials for making rubber. Mr. Jeffers, you are rendering the Nation a valuable service, and I am sure the American people will support you to a man.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to thank the gentleman for coming to the defense of this gentleman, although he needs no defense, because the American people are with him. Mr. William Jeffers, my fellow Nebraskan, is doing a splendid job and he is rendering a great service to the country in informing the people that some people in high places are willfully retarding our synthetic rubber program.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I do not think Mr. Jeffers needs any defense. He needs encouragement from the people and the Congress.

Mr. BUFFETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Jeffers is one of my constituents, I am proud to say, and I am sure he needs no defense before this House.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think Mr. Jeffers and others are overlooking the fact that there is a strong undercurrent among certain keymen in the administration who are determined to stop the establishment of a permanent synthetic-rubber program in the United States. They do not want our country to become self-sustaining in rubber production, and they are therefore retarding the progress of factories and processing plants which we need now and which we could have for the future use of our country.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I thank the gentleman and heartily agree with his statement. It was only last year that Vice President WALLACE was concerned about a tariff to protect our synthetic-rubber production. It was his thought that it would be unfortunate for our good neighbor policy if we became self-sustaining in rubber production. It is about time that some of the officials in key positions became concerned about the welfare of our own citizens.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. May I make this comment in support of the good thought the gentleman has expressed in connection with the courageous attitude Mr. Jeffers is demonstrating from the standpoint of the synthetic rubber program: I believe that within the next few days or few weeks at the outside a bill wil be brought before the Congress by Members of the Senate which will put some teeth into legislative support behind Mr. Jeffers, so that the synthetic-rubber program—that rural America is able and ready to implement—can be put into action. I think it is unwise to attempt to win this war without the use of synthetic rubber when synthetic rubber can be produced from the agricultural products raised in abundance on American farms.

[Here the gavel fell.]

THE SHORTAGE OF BEEF

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I agree with all the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] had to say about Mr. Jeffers, and I agree with the other commendatory remarks that have just been made about him, but someone should caution Mr. Jeffers to be a little more careful, because if he continues to question the infallibility of the "powers that be" down at the other end of the Avenue or contrary to the views expressed by the lady who travels so much, and who each day presumes to advise the world on any and all topics, he is very apt to be called in before a grand jury and Maloney may get after him. Mr. Jeffers had better watch his step, there is no question about it. The lightning from the throne may strike him as it has others who ventured to have opinions of their own. Some of us have been criticizing the so-called planning of the dreamers, and we have learned to our sorrow that that is an act which brings down the wrath of the smear-purge artists like Maloney, Browder, and keyhole peeper Winchell and should not be done, not here in the United States where freedom of speech and the right to work are opposed by the administration.

I was moved today by the very, very eloquent talk made by the farmer from Brooklyn, N. Y. [Mr. O'TOOLE]. He finds now that his people are short of beef. They are just not getting it. He gets up here and criticizes the O. P. A. because dealers in meat in his district and throughout the country are being put out of business. People are hungry for meat.

If memory serves me correctly, and I think it does, I recall when that same gentleman, if a Member on the minority side even ventured to suggest in a most delicate way that there might be something wrong with one of the administrative bodies downtown, condemned us as being pro-Nazi and aiding Hitler.

When we called to the attention of the Members of the House that if we took all the help off the farm either by putting the men in the Army or in the war plants there was going to be a shortage of milk and dairy products, and there was going to be a shortage of beef, we were criticized as being obstructionists, as hindering the war effort, as opposing the administration.

I am not a farmer but we have farmers on our side of the aisle. I talked with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN] two or three evenings, and I talked to a gentleman from the other side, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE], whose people raise and fatten cattle. I talked to some of the Members from Iowa, Kansas, and Illinois, more principally from Illinois, the great corn, hog, and cattle State, some of those men who feed cattle. They told me, and the Congress was warned, in all seriousness, that if this administration went on the way it was going there would be a shortage of beef and a lack of food.

Then one evening when I did not have anything else to do I read a Supreme Court decision and learned that those Justices, those wise men—not the nine wise old men but the new members of the Court—decided that when in 1935 Congress passed a law against racketeering it meant only that no one should engage in racketeering of the Dillinger type. The Supreme Court said it was all right for members of unions in New York, the constitutents of the gentleman who spoke this morning, to make our farmers going into New York City with a load of beef stand and deliver $8.41 or $9.42, depending upon the size of the truck, before driving on to take the meat to the gentleman's constituents or to his family—and I note that he has a wife and three children. Now, Mr. Justice Stone, dissenting, said that the rule laid down in that case "would render common-law robbery an innocent pastime," but the majority opinion written by Mr. Justice Byrnes, the same gentleman who now is the big boss over all bosses, laid down the doctrine that if members of unions conspired together to compel farmers driving their own trucks, loaded with produce or meat into the city of New York, to pay a fee to the conspirators, those conspirators were not guilty of racketeering, even though the union drivers did not intend to render any service at all.

The opinion held and I quote, that—

> And where, as here, the offense charged is conspiracy to violate the section, the defendants are entitled to immunity if their objective is to become bona fide employees and to obtain wages in that capacity, even though they may fail of their purpose.

The Court further said:

> For example, the members of a labor union may decide that they are entitled to the jobs in their trade in a particular area. They may agree to attempt to obtain contracts to do the work at the union wage scale. They may obtain the contracts, do the work, and receive the money. Certainly Congress intended that these activities should be excepted from the prohibitions of this particular act, even though the agreement may have contemplated the use of violence. But it is always an open question whether the employers' capitulation to the demands of the union is prompted by a desire to obtain services or to avoid further injury, or both.

The Court further said:

The doubtful case arises where the defendants agree to tender their services in good faith to an employer and to work if he accepts their offer, but agree further that the protection of their trade-union interests requires that he should pay an amount equivalent to the prevailing union wage, even if he rejects their proffered services.

We think that such an agreement is covered by the exception. The terms "wages," "bona fide employee," nad "bona fide employer" are susceptible of more than one meaning, and the background and legislative history of this act require that they be broadly defined. We have expressed our belief that Congress intended to leave unaffected the ordinary activities of labor unions.

And the Court then continues and holds that even though the union men who conspired to hold up the trucks, and who did hold up the trucks and who compelled the payment of tribute money as a condition precedent to driving into the city and who did not perform any service, were not guilty of racketeering because, forsooth, Congress did not intend to legislate against unions practicing that type of racketeering.

Note this language from the opinion:

The proviso in section 6 safeguarding "the rights of bona fide labor organizations in lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof," although obscure indeed, strengthens us somewhat in that opinion. The test must therefore be whether the particular activity was among or is akin to labor union activities with which Congress must be taken to have been familiar when this measure was enacted. Accepting payments even where services are refused is such an activity. The circuit court has referred to the stand-by orchestra device, by which a union local requires that its members be substituted for visiting musicians, or, if the producer or conductor insists upon using his own musicians that the members of the local be paid the sums which they would have earned had they performed. That similar devices are employed in other trades is well known. It is admitted here that the stand-by musician has a job even though he renders no actual service. There can be no question that he demands the payment of money regardless of the management's willingness to accept his labor. If, as it is agreed, the musician would escape punishment under this act even though he obtained his stand-by job by force or threats, it is certainly difficult to see how a teamster could be punished for engaging in the same practice. It is not our province either to approve or disapprove such tactics. But we do believe that they are not the activities of predatory criminal gangs of the Kelly and Dillinger types at which the act was aimed, and that on the contrary they are among those practices of labor unions which were intended to remain beyond its ban.

To kill that decision of the United States Supreme Court, which put the stamp of legality upon extortion, I yesterday introduced an amendment to the Anti-Racketeering Act of June 18, 1934. I ask your support.

I feel sorry for the consituents of the gentleman who spoke this morning. We all regret that they are hungry. That they must pay an outrageous price for meat. But it all goes back to the legislation the gentleman in the majority supported. You wanted it and now you have it. You do not like it. I cannot say you do not like the taste of it because you do not even get a taste of the meat. You just see it in the windows here and there where the Wall Street men, where the multi-millionaires can buy a steak. But the poor man and the woman and their children are hungry for meat, and they are hungry for meat because you have developed a situation where our farmers have had to kill their dairy herds—and the individual members of a dairy herd are the mothers of steers, you know; and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] told us here one day how an official in a department had inquired if there are both kinds, male and female steers. This administration has jumped upon the farmer—it has taken his sons and sent them to Africa, to Australia, to the islands of the southern Pacific in such numbers that the farms are idle and before another year rolls around there will be hunger in the land unless the dreamers and planners mend their ways. Now the scarcity has spread so far it has gone clear over to the eastern coast and you lack beef over there because you have tied the hands of the farmers in the Middle West and the great West so that they cannot raise these cattle. Now you feel sorry about it. So do we. And we suggest that before your constituents get too hungry, too angry, you take Wallace, Wickard, Hopkins, Tugwell, Perkins, and a few more out of the places where they are bringing chaos and ruin. If you want meat and food try a little, just a little, of the philosophy of the "horse and buggy" days.

What I am asking is what are you going to do about it, and when are you going to do it? How hungry will the constituents of the gentleman from New York have to get before he will come in here with some legislation or before he will support legislation I have heretofore introduced, or which other Members on the Republican side have introduced? How long will it be? If the people of the East do not get anything but a soup bone, maybe we will get something started on that side. But no one wants to see that condition. Talk about these regulations! I wish the gentleman was here. I know what he referred to. They are going to give you 2 pounds to an individual, and I ask the city farmer this question. When he goes down to the market and he wants to get his 2 pounds on that little ticket from some bureaucrat in the O. P. A. who does not know the conditions, or who wants to know how many kinds of steers there are, male and female, and asks for 2 pounds of meat, is he going to take a soup bone or a pig knuckle, or ribs, or a pound of hamburger and just plain meat? Just who will take 2 pounds of bones and who gets the 2 pounds of meat? Those are some questions that the gentlemen from the cities ought to make talks on and advise their constituents about, so that they do not get trimmed in still another way.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. What the gentleman has said in regard to the inability to get meats and other foods, is entirely due to the administration policies, although they are inconsistent with each other, and I point out this, inasmuch as the gentleman has referred to a certain court, and some decisions on some cases. Does the gentleman recall that the same court also approved a decision assessing a fine on farmers for feeding wheat that they raised on their own land to their own livestock on the farm so that they could produce more meat?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I recall that. It is 49 cents, is it not?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Fifty-nine cents.

Mr. HOFFMAN. At the time of the court decision I think it was 47 cents. The fine, as I recall, is one-half the loan value and that varies. Now I say to you city folks, let us take a farmer in the country who grows some wheat or some corn, and if he feeds that wheat or corn to the cattle, in order that he may make more beef, increase the quantity and quality, or to poultry, to get more eggs, we find that he is fined 47 cents a bushel. What do you think of that? That is so even if the farmers feed the grain to the chickens, so as to give you some fresh eggs once in a while. It is all wrong. We know it is wrong. It is off the same piece of regimentation that you gentlemen are complaining about. Under this new regulation which provides that the independent distributors shall not kill more than 70 percent of the number or weight of cattle that they killed the year before. That sounds all right, but here is the trouble. Some of the distributors and packers did not kill any cattle last year. They bought their supply from larger packers, and so now they have nothing to sell, because 70 percent of nothing killed is still nothing, and that is one thing the gentleman is complaining about. It is these independent distributors, these independent processors, who used to buy of the packers, and the result of this last regulation by the O. P. A. is that it throws all the business of dealing in cattle and processed meat into the hands of a few large packers, and these independents are being put out of business. The result is that these gentlemen's constituents are going hungry for meat because, first, the administration policy cut off the supply at the source on the farm, and second, what little is left is all thrown into the hands of the big packers, and the men who have heretofore served the gentleman's constituents in New York and Brooklyn and other cities, no longer have any beef to sell.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. GAVIN. I would like to ask the gentleman what they are going to do when they run out of pork? Pretty soon they will not have much pork to sell in New York or throughout the East. How about the little pigs? I have reference to the hogs that were slaughtered several years ago, to be converted into fertilizer, to distribute the fertilizer to the farmer to increase his yield and production and then to plow it under.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, well, some gentlemen back on the floor said that they do not eat pork. The gentleman from Michigan said that they do not eat pork out there, but it calls to mind, however, the old statement that the Chicago packers even utilize the squeal of the pig. And if the new dealers are not stopped, we will all be glad to get pork; yes, perhaps horse meat similar to that which is now being sold in Boston. But, as the gentleman said, if present policies are continued, our people will not have beef or pork or butter; they will not have milk or eggs; and if they keep on with their wheat program, they will not have even bread, and then will come hunger and trouble.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. And they will not have bread at any price.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You are right; they will not have it at any price, so it is up to this Congress to do something about it, and I appeal once more to the majority side. Come on, let us do something about it, and let us do it before it is too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 158. An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 27, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Saviour of the world, in whom the power of Almighty God is raised to the highest, in Thy name we pray that we may learn the lesson of self-revelation. Touch the deeps of our natures from which come the blessed issues of life and the measureless claims of a saving faith. Dear Lord, down in the human heart are wells which only Thy hand can open, here with a consciousness deeper than the sea, let Thy spirit speak calmly. "I am the way, the truth, and the life."

In our thoughts and in our secret impulses conform us to the divine law and in every heart open any sealed avenues of gratitude. Amid the friction of nations and the collisions of classes, we praise Thee for America and her mission. Being thus thankful, make us witnesses for the freedom of personal rights, for the defenseless, for justice cast down in the streets, pleading in this longing and waiting world. In the very soul of our Republic may there be a shrine where is breathed a noble spirit of sacrifice and of unselfish devotion to those ideals which shall make us worthy to stand among the peoples of earth and break those chains which shall never again stain the calendar of history. Oh, blessed Life eternal, in safety and in unyielding strength be at the side of our President day and night and bring to a glorious fruition the "Conference of Unconditional Surrender" and Thine shall be the praise. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Hon. VIRGIL CHAPMAN appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, many of the Members of Congress are seriously interested in and much concerned over the growing power of the Executive at the expense of the Congress. Many persons outside the Halls of Congress recognize the seriousness of this problem. The American Political Science Association some 2 years ago appointed a committee to study the whole question. Friday night there is to be a conference to consider the results of the work of that committee.

Not only will there be representatives of the committee, but our colleague, the Honorable EVERETT M. DIRKSEN, will participate in the discussions. Members of Congress are invited to attend the conference, which, let me repeat, will be held next Friday night at 8 p. m. in the auditorium of the Department of Commerce Building.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include some newspaper clippings.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by a sitting Member of this body.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an article by Clifford Prevost.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and include therein a letter from Mr. Kernkamp, secretary, Minnesota State Veterinarian Medical Society, and also a copy of resolutions adopted by that society having reference to the foot-and-mouth disease.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE FUEL OIL SITUATION

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, today there exists in this country a perfectly inexcusable and unjustifiable situation so far as heating of family homes is concerned and also so far as the distribution of oil for the running of essential industries. If the situation does not improve within 1 or 2 days, if some sort of order is not brought out of chaos, I am going to demand that the Army and the Navy take over the entire fuel problem.

Mr. Speaker, the Army and the Navy are not interested in sectionalism and are more interested in the entire country and in winning the war than any other groups. The Army and the Navy are the two departments most concerned in operating and winning the war. Today the whole petroleum situation amounts to a scandal. Persons in Massachusetts and other States are getting ready to be evacuated from their homes because of the cold. Already there have been numerous deaths. I ask that the Members of the House assist; otherwise, they may be considered a part of the same scandal.

Because of lack of coordination among the various Government departments confusion exists among different groups in the same Government departments. Even the fuel oil that is available is not being properly distributed. Some one person or some one Government department should have a single plan and should see to it that the plan is carried out. I ask that the Members of the House assist, otherwise they may regret it. Those whose districts are not affected today may well be tomorrow. If they refuse cooperation they may be considered a part of the same scandalous neglect of the fuel problem.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the business today and any other special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE VICTORY TAX WITH REFERENCE TO MILITARY AND NAVAL FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, section 465 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code—title 26 of the United States Code—does not include remuneration paid for services performed as a member of the military or naval forces of the United States, other than pensions or retired pay, in computing wages for the purpose of collecting the Victory tax at the source—but section 451 (a) of the Code imposes the Victory tax upon the members of our armed forces.

This is an anomalous and, in my opinion an indefensible situation, which I hope the Congress has but inadvertently created.

The wages paid our soldiers and sailors should not be charged with the Victory tax, and I have today introduced a bill which will have the effect of removing this injustice. The victory which will be ours will result in graver and greater contributions by our armed forces who should not be taxed, too—it will be their victory to which we at home are glad to contribute in the form of the Victory tax.

The wages of the soldier and the sailor are low enough. They should be free of any Victory tax, and I respectfully urge immediate action on my bill so as to correct the present situation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including an article that appeared in the American Bar Association Journal of January.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FARM MACHINERY AND PARTS

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

"HORSESHOES IS STILL HORSESHOES"

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk to you this evening for a few minutes about our farm machinery and parts program. If I took a text it would be horseshoes. Not that horseshoes are the most important things needed in connection with farming, but because the attitude of the Industrial Program Branch, Office of Civilian Supply, of the War Production Board, toward the humble horseshoe is indicative of the way farm machinery and parts are being handled, and gives a fairly good insight into the practical knowledge of those administering the program.

For many months I have not only been vexed and irritated, but at times alarmed, at some of the blunders that have been made in connection with our food-for-victory program. It is evident that many of those who seemingly are directing the farm program which, in my opinion, is the biggest, the toughest program confronting the American people today, never had their lily-white hands soiled by mother earth, nor needed a good scrubbing Saturday night to get rid of the malodor of the barnyard so they would not only look but smell presentable Sunday morning.

Some of these long haired star-gazers who are administering the program, I am afraid, know more about astronomy than they do about agronomy. If they would stop dreaming, take their eyes off of the stars, and get their feet back on good earth we would get along better.

In peacetime it is tragic for the directing head to be ignorant of what he is directing. In war it is not only tragic—it is fatal. When it comes to wrecking our war effort, the saboteur who has to work under cover and await his opportunity to wreck is a piker compared with the incompetent directing head who, by reason of his position, does not have to await his opportunity to wreck, but with a boldness engendered by ignorance, wrecks in the broad daylight.

But let me get back to my text. In my home town we have two very large hardware companies, manned by two country boys who moved to town and made good. E. H. Powers is the directing head of Mitchell-Powers Hardware Co., and J. T. Cecil is the directing head of the Interstate Hardware Co. Neither could get any horseshoes, so they took the matter up with the Industrial Program Branch, Office of Civilian Supply, War Production Board, and in due course received a reply which, while it clearly demonstrated that the writer knows his syntax and rhetoric, on its face furnishes indisputable proof that he does not know his horseshoes. Or does he? While Ez and Jim and I were all raised on the farm, it has been a good many years since we left the dear old sod, and during the intervening years probably horseshoes, like many other things, have been revolutionized, and our failure to appreciate the learned treatise on horseshoes is due to the fact that we have not kept abreast of the times. However, I have a sneaking idea that back on the farm today "pigs is still pigs" and "horseshoes is still horseshoes."

My colleagues, the fourth paragraph of the reply is such an illuminating, learned treatise on horseshoes, and especially on the use of horseshoes and the modern custom of farmers with respect thereto, that I believe it should be preserved among the sacred archives of this great Republic, so I quote it verbatim:

> The 75-percent quota for horseshoes when applied to the 1940–41 average as a base will yield 92 percent as many new shoes as were produced in 1942. This available production can be much further extended in supplying urgent 1943 needs for food production and other activities essential to the war effort by: (1) more "resets" to get more wear out of available shoes; (2) elimination of uses which are obviously nonproductive and nonessential in the war effort; (3) elimination of unessential styles and improved distribution methods to reduce the quantity tied up in inventories; and (4) horse owners can, in many cases, save shoes by removing the shoes immediately after a period of necessary road work or other work where shoes are necessary only during certain periods.

I do not think I should hide the identity of the author of the above masterpiece. He is no other than Mr. Edward R. Gay, chief of the Industrial Branch, Office of Civilian Supply, War Production Board. Mr. Gay, I am informed, is a resident of the city of New York, educated at Harvard, and prior to becoming attached to the Government on June 15, 1942, was vice president of St. Regis Paper Co. of New York City. A splendid background for one selected to administer the machinery and parts program for the farmers of America.

Now, when I was a boy, it was more or less a treat to take one of the horses to the country blacksmith to be shod. In the first place, it meant that I would get a good rest for a few hours; and then, too, I got a kick out of watching Uncle Ned take the old shoe off and put a new shoe on. As I remember, he had to first unclinch the nails that had been embedded into the hoof and then pull the nails in order to get the old shoe off. You know at that time we followed the crude method of nailing the things on. Having gotten the old shoe off, which was no easy undertaking, he then proceeded to trim the hoof down to get rid of the growth that had taken place since the old shoe was nailed on and to shape the hoof up for the new shoe. The hoof having been prepared, he then placed the new shoe over the hoof to determine what changes, if any, would have to be made in the new shoe before being nailed on. He then placed the new shoe in the forge, started pumping the bellows to fan the fire up, and after heating the shoe to a white heat took it out of the forge with a pair of tongs and commenced whipping it into shape on the anvil.

After two or three fittings the new shoe was ready to be nailed on. The nails were inserted in the holes the manufacturers had provided in the shoe, which had been opened up by Uncle Ned with the proper tool, and the nails were driven at the right angle for them to come through the hoof about 1 inch above the shoe. The nails having been driven in, a groove was filed just under the nails, the nails cut off to the proper length, and then embedded in the groove to hold them secure. Then, all that remained for Uncle Ned to do was to dress the hoof up with a file so it would be even and smooth around the shoe. Horseshoes in those days were put on to stay. It was supposed to be a permanent operation that would hold the shoe until it wore out. The shoes were not put on with the idea in mind that sooner or later they would be taken off or reset.

Well, it seems that Ez and Jim and I have grown a little rusty on our horseshoes and horseshoeing. The rules of the game have entirely changed. And for fear that the good farmers in my district are as ignorant on the subject as Ez and Jim and I, I want to make a few observations to set them right. These observations, of course, are all based upon the learned dissertation I have just quoted.

First, in order to lengthen the life of the shoe, you must have more "resets." I am glad that the word "resets" was enclosed in quotations, because I am frank to admit that at first the word as applied to horseshoes bothered me, and it was comforting to know that the learned author had evidently borrowed the expression. After much study, however, I believe I have the thing all figured out. If your horse is knock-kneed in his front legs, for instance, and this physical deformity causes the inner parts of the front shoes to wear out faster than the outer parts, why, all you have to do is to take old Dobbin back to Uncle Ned for a "reset," and he will correct the whole matter by simply changing shoes. Oh, it may be a little costly having the left shoe taken off and put on the right foot and the right shoe taken off and put on the left foot, but this little extra cost is all absorbed in the satisfaction that comes to you from knowing that you are living abreast of the times and playing the game according to the latest W. P. B. rules. Then, you know, another thing that frequently calls for "resets" is the slue-footed horse. This deformity usually appears in the front legs and causes the toe of the front foot to strike the surface first, which, in turn, has a tendency to wear the front of the shoes out faster. Well, this is all corrected by "resets." In this case all you have to do is to put the front shoes on the hind feet and the hind shoes on the front feet. Oh, it is all quite simple after you catch on to the rules of the game.

Now, the second rule to follow in prolonging the life of the horseshoe is, and I quote, the "elimination of uses which are obviously nonproductive and nonessential in the war effort." Well, what does this mean? Why, Mr. Farmer, among other things, it means this: You may feel the urge to go to church Sunday morning, and having worked from 14 to 15 hours per day all through the week you may feel "kinder" tired and entertain the old-fashioned idea that the thing to do is to "hitch old Dobbin to the shay" and drive your wife and children over. Well, if you entertain such thoughts, then banish them before you are considered unpatriotic in permitting old Dobbin to engage in work nonproductive and nonessential to the war effort. In such a case, under the new rules, the thing for you to do is to run down to the barn and put a fresh batch of straw in old Dobbin's stall to cushion her dear tootsie wootsies against the hardness of mother earth, and then go back home and get your wife and children and hoof it, brother, hoof it, on to church. Oh, this may entail the wear and tear of your own shoes, and the shoes of your wife and children, but when you think the thing through and consider the worthlessness of your own shoe leather, and the shoe leather of your wife and children, compared to the preservation of old Dobbin's shoes, the patriotic sacrifice you have made makes you feel as important to the war effort as a MacArthur or Eisenhower.

And then to prolong the life of the horseshoe you must not be too finicky about the style of shoe your horse wears, because the third rule calls for, and I quote, the "elimination of nonessential style." Now, when Ez and Jim and I were boys a horseshoe was simply a horseshoe. Of course, there were large shoes and small shoes and middle size shoes, but they were all made on the same type last. Styles were unknown. The rich man's horse could not lord it over the poor man's horse by wearing pointed toes, or box toes, or low quarters, or patent leather, or tan shoes. I am glad to know that we are going to get rid of the styles that came in vogue after Ez and Jim and I left the farm, because I know they created a lot of confusion and ill will and envy and jealousy among the female horses. I am afraid the female horses simply worried the farmers to death trying to keep up with the latest styles in high heels and open toes. Well, thank the Lord, this rule takes us back to the good old days of my boyhood when a horseshoe was a horseshoe which, to say the least, is comforting. Then, you know, equality of treatment is one of the things we are fighting for in this war, and I know it brings our boys who are doing the fighting a lot of comfort to know that this equality of treatment is going to apply to horses. Yes, when it comes to horses, we have abolished styles and placed all horses upon an equal shoe footing.

And now I come to the last rule. It reads:

> Horse owners can, in many cases, save shoes by removing the shoes immediately after a period of necessary road work or other work where shoes are necessary only during certain periods.

Well, this rule stumped me for a long time. Being kind of old fashioned I foolishly wondered how you would keep on taking the shoes off and putting the shoes back on. I construed the rule to mean, of course, that it was no longer polite or in accordance with established custom for old Dobbin to go to bed with her shoes on, and trying to figure out how to take her shoes off when she went to bed at night and put them back on when she got up in the morning, I confess stumped me for quite a while. And then it all came to me, as clear as the noonday sun. Why I was still living back in the horse-and-buggy days, and had forgotten all about—if I ever knew—the styles changing. Of course the improvement in styles brought about the zipper style, and I presume we now have zipper horseshoes. So, Mr. Farmer, all you have to do now in order to comply with the new rules is to buy the zipper style, and zip them off at night and zip them back on in the morning. This is mighty easy on you, Mr. Farmer, but I am afraid it has put old Uncle Ned out of the horseshoeing business. And, alas, it has taken the stuffin's right out of that dear old poem we all used to recite about the grand old village blacksmith. Poor old fellow, he has fallen by the way, the victim of the zipper.

Since I took a text, it is up to me, I suppose, to point to the lesson to be found in the text. The preachers do, and, you know, it is always safe to follow the preachers. Let me point to the lesson by telling a story.

Years ago in one of the counties of my district lived a school teacher by the name of Jonothan Phipps. In that day and time the people of that section, although there coursed through their veins the purest Anglo-Saxon blood to be found in America, paid very little attention to education. Clearing new ground called for brawn and muscle and a strong back, and these early pioneers had these qualities, plus indomitable will power and courage, to the *n*th degree. They did, however, respect education and looked up to those who were versed in the rudiments of the three R's. Naturally, Jonothan stood out as a real personage in the county, and, quite naturally, his wife assumed that what he did not know had not been written in the books, and that he was capable of engaging in any undertaking or directing any project or program. When it came to Jonothan she was no respecter of limitations, and Jonothan, because of the popular acclaim that surrounded him, augmented by his wife's admiration, was looking for new worlds to conquer. Well, in the course of time Jonothan's faithful old mare, Maude by name, reached the age that made it advisable to swap her off for a younger mare, and so he took her over to the Hardshell Baptist Association to make the swap. In that day every meeting place of the association had a jockey ground hard by, where the slickest horse jockeys that ever cocained an old mare into acting like a young filly operated without let or hindrance. Meeting a jockey that had a likely looking prancing mare, Jonothan asked:

"How will you trade?"

"How old is your mare?" inquired the jockey.

"I neither ask nor answer questions," responded Jonothan.

"Well," said the jockey, "if that is the way you feel about it, what do you say?"

Jonothan looked the mare over and then mounted the saddle and rode across the jockey lot for about 50 yards and back. When he dismounted, the jockey again asked, "Well, what do you say?"

"Give you my mare and $25," replied Jonothan.

"It is a trade," snapped the jockey.

Returning home, Jonothan, thinking that he had made a wonderful trade, in high spirits related to his wife the old story about "I came, I saw, I conquered."

The next morning when Jonothan went to feed he found the mare lying down. His efforts to get her up proved of no avail, and it at least dawned upon him that the mare's spirits and spryness had been caused by cocaine, which had died, and that he had let the jockey beat him out of a faithful old mare and $25.

Returning to the house, his wife at once knew from his dejected look that all was not well; and when he had finished telling the sad, pathetic story, she cried out:

"Jonothan, it passes strange to me that a man of your education could be made a sucker out of by an ignorant horse jockey."

And Jonothan replied—and there is wisdom in his words—"Martha, Martha, education has darn little to do with horse swapping."

And so say I; rhetoric and syntax and B. A.'s and M. A.'s and Ph. D.'s and a Harvard accent have darn little to do with horseshoes.

Moral: As long as we have to have bureaus, divided into divisions and sections, let us man them with men of practical knowledge and experience, even at the expense of getting rid of some of our wonder boys, because, after all is said and done, back on the farm "pigs is still pigs" and "horseshoes is still horseshoes."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DOMESTIC FUEL OIL

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Member from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] just stated on the floor of the House that if the shortage of fuel oil in the East continued the Army should be given authority and should take over. In addition she made the statement that the Army was more interested in winning the war than any other group. Now I challenge as arrant nonsense that last statement. If it comes to a question of making comparisons that is a poor one to make. No one questions the desire or the ability of the armed forces to win the war. Comparison of degrees of patriotism are odious. There is no degree of loyalty or willingness to serve among our people. All will give their utmost. Did the Member mean to tell me that the mothers and fathers and all those who are willing to give everything they have to the winning of the war are less interested than the officers of the Army? Or are the men of the Army? I say it is just nonsense; everyone is interested in this war and there is no reason why any comparisons should be made. We are all in the same boat and every one is interested in stopping the leaks.

The Member from Massachusetts should have remembered when she was advocating the giving of everything to foreign governments, when she was crying for lend-lease, she should have remembered that the supply of fuel oil, gasoline, food, manpower, and everything else was limited, and that if we gave it all away, sent it across the seas, somebody here at home would suffer. She asks for sympathy because now there is a shortage of many things necessary not only to the comfort but to the existence of our own people. We have made our bed and if we find in it corn cobs and corn stalks we should not cry for a beauty rest mattress. We of the Middle West will take it and grin but we intend to kick out of the way all who block the road to victory. That far I can go with the Member from Massachusetts, but when she stands on the floor and says the Army is more interested in winning than are the people at home we part company. She should appeal at the other end of the Avenue. If anyone is welcome to go down there it is the Member from Massachusetts. She should go down there and make her complaint against the incompetents who take shelter under the Commander in Chief's shadow.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and include an editorial concerning the lend-lease policy.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from today's Washington Post on the significance of the mode of travel the President used to North Africa.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE RATIONING PROGRAM AND ITS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I am prepared today to discuss a subject which I am sure every Member of the House will be vitally interested in because it affects each and every district throughout this country. I am going to talk about the situation back home as regards rationing, pleasure driving, and various other measures which have been undertaken to aid the prosecution of the great struggle we are in. At this time I want to make it perfectly clear that I am in no way criticizing or challenging the patriotism of any group of people in the Government or in any way casting aspersions upon their interest in the war effort. I do propose, however, to elaborate upon the conditions as I find them in my district in connection with the Government's attitude toward patriotic men and women whom it is my honor and privilege to represent in this House.

In the first place I want to pay tribute to the people I represent for the wonderful way they have responded to the war effort, for the way they have sacrificed their personal fortunes, placed their sons in the service and given up the hundred and one things they previously enjoyed before this great crisis came upon us; I want to take time out to pay my tribute to the loyal men and women back home who have given so much of their time in a volunteer capacity serving on rationing boards and draft boards, in the interests of the war effort in general. Their effort and their patriotism have contributed in very large degree to the great success which the American public is enjoying on the home front.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman represents a district that borders on mine. I want to take this occasion to join with him in saying that the people he represents are the finest type of American citizens, loyal, patriotic, and self-sacrificing, and doing everything within their power to help win this war.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I thank the gentleman for his observation. In return I want also to say that I believe my district is only typical of every other district throughout the country in the patriotic and generous way in which they have responded to this war effort.

I also want to make clear today in my discussion that along with just about every other Member of the House I voted for the system of rationing which has been introduced to the country because I recognized that some definite action along this line would have to be taken if the population were to receive an equitable distribution of the food, gasoline, tires, and of the other various commodities which we have known in civilian life. I also recognized the fact that if the Nation were to proceed with an all-out war effort and to supply the armed forces of our country with tanks, planes, and guns with which and only with which we could be victorious, drastic steps should be taken at home in order to provide our men with the necessary weapons. So today I do not propose to challenge the wisdom of rationing, because I feel that it is necessary for the prosecution of the war; but I do expect to criticize the way rationing has been handled as far as the administrative end of it goes. I feel it my sovereign duty as a Representative of a fine patriotic district to stand here in the House today and protest about some of the high-handed ways which various agencies have taken in superseding the power of the Congress in a legislative sense by making their own rules, in superseding and encroaching upon the powers of the various local law-enforcement agencies by executive officers to enforce the rules and regulations which they have made. I also rise today to protest the deliberate invasion of the privileges of the Congress of the United States by the various agencies of government who, after having been given more or less blanket authority on the part of Congress, have assumed powers above and beyond anything that either the Congress or the people ever intended to have them assume.

At this point I think it only fair to state that a great deal has been said on the subject of bureaucracy in this House. Ever since the last election, which was taken by most of the people as an indication of the dissatisfaction of the people back home with increased regulations, I have recognized a vigilance on the part of the men and women of this House. I have observed a definite interest on their part to see that the Congress took drastic action to curb the ever-increasing power of the bureaucrats throughout the country.

Today I am prepared to discuss in detail H. R. 1359, which I introduced about a week ago, because, as I have said, I feel it the solemn duty of every Member of the House of Representatives and Senate to speak for their people back home and to maintain American privileges and rights which they so anxiously desire to be preserved. I took the last election, which was definitely a protest of the Gestapo methods used by the Government, as an indication of the approval of the people to hear their representatives speak in this manner. I am only waiting to see steps taken and to see legislation presented which will enable me to cast my vote for the preservation of the individual rights of the people back home whom I represent.

I wish to discuss the subject of pleasure driving and some of the other steps that have been taken by the Office of Price Administration and other agencies to regulate and to regiment, if you please, the people of the United States of America. I am sure I share the same feeling as most of the other Members here today when I say that I gladly gave authority to the Office of Price Administration to regulate the amount of gasoline we should use, or the amount of coffee that we should drink, or the types and number of tires which we could buy or purchase, or the distance that we should be able to drive our cars. I think those are reasonable regulations which every right-thinking American is willing to consider as his honest and just sacrifice in the great crisis we are now facing. However, I raise my voice in protest against any official of the O. P. A., or any other agency of the administrative branch of our Government, who swoops down upon the people of my district and tells them how they are to use their ration coupons and who tells them that they cannot do this, that, or the other thing. I raise my voice in protest against the agencies of the Government that have been created by the Congress and the people challenging the authority—the sovereign constitutional rights—of the people. I protest against those individuals entering into the personal affairs of our people and telling them what they should do or how they should live or what steps they should take.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman represents a great farming district. Does he know whether the farmers of his district are permitted to attend grange meetings under their gasoline supply or whether they are permitted to go to town to buy supplies on Saturday night?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I will say to the gentleman, in answer to his appropriate question, that after a great deal of protest had been brought to bear upon the agencies in charge by the rural population of my district, they were finally allowed to drive to grange meetings. But, since we are on that subject, may I point out some of the petty regulations which were placed upon the citizens of my district. I know that every Member here will join with me in protesting such petty regulations.

For example, there is a defense worker in my district who was recently given enough gasoline to drive to and from his work. He happens to be employed in a defense factory making vital weapons for the war. It happened that this gentleman stopped on the way home at a barber shop to get a shave and a haircut. On his way out he was accosted by a snooper of the O. P. A. who had been delegated to cover his activities. This defense worker found that he had disobeyed one of the regulations he never dreamed existed, in that he was not supposed to stop and get a haircut on the way home from his work in the factory. He found that he was to take his car home, according to this official, to drive his car all the way home from his place of employment, and he must take the bus back to the barber shop. Even though this barber shop was on his way home, he could not stop and get a haircut. He would be forced to return home with his automobile, then return to the barber shop and get a haircut. I say today that such regulations are absolutely ridiculous, not only ridiculous but they are undemocratic, and they are an encroachment upon the rights of every American citizen back home.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I believe that there is one great cardinal principle the O. P. A. is violating today. In their treatment of the American people, does not the gentleman feel that perhaps first of all they take it for granted that the average American citizen is a crook?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. That is right.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I believe that the O. P. A. would do much better, and this is offered in the same constructive strain that the gentleman from New York is speaking today, if that agency would get down to the township method of government and give as far as possible as much of their authority as they could to our township boards who know every person, having as little bureaucratic control as is necessary.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. To elaborate upon the gentleman's statement, may I say that I have in mind a further regulation which was brought to my attention in the district I have the honor to represent. A couple wanted to get married. They were allowed by the O. P. A. officials to ride to their wedding in their own car. However, this was a rather large church wedding. They had invited several guests and several relatives. Imagine their surprise to find out that the guests at the wedding had to walk or take public conveyances, even though they had cars of their own and plenty of gasoline, according to their ration books. That to me is another example of the deliberate encroachment and invasion of the personal rights and privileges which Americans hold so dear.

If the Office of Price Administration continues with these obnoxious activities, these deliberate intimidations against the rights of every American citizen, every citizen back home will raise his voice in righteous indignation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Walking to the wedding was not so serious as letting people freeze in their homes?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I thank the gentlewoman. She has hit upon a very important point which should have every consideration by the House.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RAMEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RAMEY. The gentleman alluded to the term "defense worker." Is not the farmer or the farm hand just as much a defense worker as the man on a factory pay roll, or perhaps more so?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. The gentleman is right. May I also call attention to an instance which came to my attention in my district. It happens that I am a very good friend of a small merchant in one of the villages of my district. He has a considerable number of rubber boots on the shelves of his shoe store, but he is actually unable to dispose of them because it has been decreed by the Office of Price Administration that boots of that type shall be sold only to coal miners. The mine nearest to my district is about 100 miles down into Pennsylvania.

I happen to represent largely an agricultural district in this one particular county in which the man who owns the store resides. He is unable to dispose of those rubber boots because the O. P. A. has forbidden him to do so. In the meantime, I have received letters from farmers in that and adjacent counties to the effect that they are unable to proceed with their own work of raising food for freedom because they have no footwear suitable to withstand the elements.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am rather surprised to hear the story about the rubber boots. Possibly the O. P. A. down here thinks that all the barnyards in New York are paved with paving blocks.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. That may be the case with penthouse farmers, but it is not so with the farmers of my district. One farmer wrote me recently:

> It is impossible for me to get any rubber footwear whatsoever, but I want to know what the Office of Price Administration expects me to do. Do they expect that I am going to shovel manure in my bare feet?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Any kind of fuel is important to the people of my district today. I do not know whether or not any of the farmers in the gentleman's district sell cordwood, but I have been surprised to learn that by regulation the O. P. A., without reducing the price of a cord of wood, has taken 32 cubic feet out of every cord of wood that is sold. That is important in New England today. I wish the gentleman could get an answer to that for me.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I think the gentleman is correct, and I feel he should have a definite answer from the Office of Price Administration.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In answer to the gentleman's question about the O. P. A. expecting the farmers to go into the barnyard in their bare feet, may I say that some of us have done that, but you cannot do that until after the April rains come along. In February and March, when the work should be done in our country, some of it, at least, it is a little different, and it just cannot be done.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. It is pretty hard for anybody to do that in this freezing weather.

I have had these questions presented to me in the form of letters of protest. I am sure every other Member in the House has received some such protest from his district.

I cannot help but feel that these agencies of government are deliberately encroaching upon the authority of Congress and upon the jurisdiction of the courts. They are doing worse than that, they are assuming authority that was never given to them and which the Congress never intended they should have. They are going along with about 10-percent authority and 90-percent bluff. They are intimidating the people back home in such a way that they are definitely hindering the war effort. I submit that you cannot get away with pushing people around. You cannot insult the patriotism which is so manifest back home and not expect a lot of hard feeling. I for one raise my voice today to protest against such procedure.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman has indicated that these bureaucrats are intimidating the people. Has the gentleman given any thought to the fact that in order to intimidate the people they are snooping around among the people? The thought occurs to me that it might be well to consider the enforcement of all these Federal regulations by local and State officers, who know what the conditions are in every community.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I thank the gentleman for the contribution he has made. Frankly, I think there has been intimidation of the local authorities; at least, there has been intimidation in certain instances in my district on the part of those agencies who have swooped down from Washington and come into each small locality and assumed powers they were never given. They have been loud in their demands for cooperation on the part of the local population. They have made insinuations against certain people in my district and everywhere else. They have questioned their patriotism, if they have not received immediate cooperation from them. I for one believe that the administrative agencies of the Government should have cooperation from the people, but I believe they can get it without snooping and prying into their business.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLEVENGER. The gentleman comes from a dairy district. Are the gentleman's people having any trouble getting feed concentrates up there to mix dairy feeds?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I am pleased to have the gentleman mention that, because we are.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I have a letter from my own district which, like the gentleman's, is a dairy and farming district, stating that the feed mills are suffering from a lack of oil cake, linseed cake, peanut meal, soybean meal, or what have you, which by ration has been withheld, so that they are on the point of closing down. I am sure the gentleman, like myself, has received dozens of letters from dairy producers telling of their inability to obtain these concentrated feeds to produce foods for victory. It may not make so much difference to the gentleman whether or not his people have rubber boots, but if they do not have some cow feed they will not have any manure to haul.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. The gentleman is correct. I appreciate his remarks.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman spoke of the difficulty of a merchant in his district disposing of certain boots in that district, and asked for a suggestion as to how he might dispose of them. I suggest we might dispose of some of the heels in Washington that have caused all this trouble.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I thank the gentleman. My purpose in rising today is to do just that, and I think by a combined interest on the part of every Member of the House along these lines Congress can take definite action, and that is one of the reasons I have just introduced H. R. 1359, which has for its title "A bill to prohibit the use of sanctions not provided by law for violations or alleged violations of orders and regulations issued by the Price Administrator," and I have provided in this bill that no agency shall have the power—it does not have the power now, but a lot of people think it has—no administrator shall have the power to go into anybody's locality and say to the population there, "We have the right to take away your gasoline coupons; we have the right to take away your drivers' licenses; we have the right to intimidate you along this and that line and to deprive you of the rights you have under the law." Mr. Speaker, they have no right at all because Congress has never given them that right.

Mr. ELMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Yes.

Mr. ELMER. Does the gentleman not think that the things he is griping about now are the very reason that there are 48 new Members like myself on this side of the House?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I agree with the gentleman. I believe more than anything else it was not so much the prosecution of the war effort, because everybody had one objective in mind and that was to win the war, and that is true of Members on both sides of the House. The reason for the New Deal disaster was because the people resented their patriotism being questioned by agents of the Government snooping around back home and trying to put everybody on the spot, trying to scare everybody out of his personal liberties and rights.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Yes.

Mr. FISH. Is it not a fact that these snoopers and spies are just a part of the vicious circle of a growing democracy here in Washington, and did they not simply go there as a part of the bureaucratic system, having actually little power, but in order to make good in their jobs and seize all of the power they can on the part of that system?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Yes. In connection with that, not long ago I disclosed the fact that I was going to do some considerable agitating myself against the encroachment of power on the part of these agencies. I said that to a friend of mine back home, and he said, "You are wasting your breath in raising your voice in protest against it, because nothing will ever be done about it, and, furthermore, you are bucking a bureaucracy which is going to swallow you up and is going to swallow up the whole Congress and take away the last vestige of the rights and privileges that the Constitution has guaranteed to everybody throughout the country." I said in answer to that that no matter what happens to me, or to anybody else, I feel it is my duty to do everything I can to fight this Frankenstein which the New Deal has created and which is rapidly gobbling up every vestige of right which the people have and enjoy today.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I wonder if the gentleman has had an opportunity to read the extension of remarks I put into the RECORD this morning, which contains an order or price policy just issued, in more or less secrecy, by the Office of Price Administration, and in which two very significant sentences appear. First, there is this statement:

> The Office of Price Administration is not concerned with whether individual businesses flourish or fail, just so long as necessities are produced in as large a volume as war conditions will permit and that these necessities are available at controlled prices to all persons essential to our war effort.

If the gentleman will bear with me for a moment, I think he will interpret that to mean that they do not care whether a business fails or goes to the wall, just so long as a certain group of citizens receive goods at prices that they fix.

Second. I want to read this. They set forth four new orders, No. 4. This is the new policy:

> 4. Making price adjustments only in cases which involve war materials or commodities and services absolutely necessary for the successful prosecution of the war. All other things must be considered of secondary importance. Hence the manpower of the Office of Price Administration cannot be dissipated in considering price adjustments for nonessential goods.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Incidentally, they go further and say they do not care particularly what happens to any particular community.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes to conclude my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I have brought this discussion to the floor because I feel it is necessary that the Congress take some steps against this bureaucratic invasion not only of the people's rights, but of the right of Congress and of every other legislative and judicial branch of our Government.

If I may make one more observation, there will be no sense of Congress continuing or the courts or any other branch of our Government continuing except the dictatorial branch if we allow this situation to continue, if we allow these bureaucrats to make rules and regulations, to issue executive decrees and other directives, and if we continue to allow them to browbeat and intimidate and scare the local agencies of law enforcement and people generally throughout the United States. I raise my voice in the House today in defense of the rights that the people back home are losing now in an unnecessary and ridiculous way, because their patriotism does not need any tampering by being pushed around or by threatening their rights if they do not follow direct orders from these bureaucrats.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. Further along the line of the question raised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] and quoting from his extension of remarks, I call your attention to this statement:

> The policy of considering price adjustment for individual concerns or for cream puffs and hair nets is a thing of the past.

In other words, this man, clothed with arbitrary power, says he has just as much respect for a man's property rights, for his liberty, for the goodwill that he has built into his business through a lifetime of effort, as something which rises to the dignity of a cream puff or a hair net.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Before very long the strictest kind of rationing of food will be on the books, and it will be carried out with a mighty army of supersnoopers emanating from Washington. Although I am not criticizing rationing itself, and I think it is necessary, I think that when they threaten to search your homes for any articles you have hoarded you are opening the door for the final invasion of the American home and you violate the age-old adage "a man's home is his castle." You are reducing him to the status of a serf.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, after the conclusion of business on the Speaker's desk and any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the other special orders today I may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes, and I waive my time at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and include therein certain editorials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

GOVERNMENT-OWNED SHIPYARDS

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, the taxpayers of this country have a right to know, and they should know, of the incompetence and extravagance of the Maritime Commission.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House, of which I am a member, has been investigating its activities, and, among others, that of conditions existing at the South Portland

Shipbuilding Corporation yard. This shipyard is owned outright by the Maritime Commission as an agency of Government, just as much as the Government owns our navy yards. It financed the construction and operation of this yard. The Maritime Commission has had representatives personally at the South Portland yard from its very inception. The incompetence and extravagance of the Maritime Commission are amply shown by the deplorable conditions existing at that yard, as indicated in the report of the committee submitted on November 24 last.

Emory S. Land, Chairman of the Maritime Commission, and Commissioner Howard L. Vickery attempted to justify these conditions as set forth in the report by stating that conditions equally as bad exist at other yards under the Maritime Commission's control.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries unanimously recommended that the Maritime Commission cancel this contract on November 24 last, but up to this time, so far as is known, the Maritime Commission has failed to act upon this recommendation.

In accordance with the unanimous consent previously granted, there is appended hereto the report of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, No. 2653, of the Seventy-seventh Congress. I suggest and recommend that every Member of the House, in the interest of economy and good government, read it. It will be noted that the report contains my minority views. I voted to terminate the contract of the South Portland Shipbuilding Corporation with the Maritime Commission, but not to relieve the Maritime Commission of responsibilities which wholly belong to the Maritime Commission.

INVESTIGATION OF SOUTH PORTLAND SHIPBUILDING CORPORATION

INTERIM REPORT

FOREWORD

By the terms of House Resolution 281 your committee was authorized and directed to conduct an investigation into the merchant marine shipbuilding program. House Resolution 281 is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, acting as a whole or by subcommittee or subcommittees appointed by the chairman of said committee, is authorized and directed (a) to conduct thorough studies and investigation of the progress of the national defense program, insofar as it relates to matters coming within the jurisdiction of said committee, or administered by the United States Maritime Commission, or any other agency under the jurisdiction of said committee, with a view to determining whether such program is being carried forward efficiently, expeditiously, and economically; (b) to make such inquiry as said Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries may consider important or pertinent to the merchant marine or fisheries of the United States or any of the Territories thereof, or to any matter coming within the jurisdiction of said committee.

"For the purposes of this resolution, the said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books or papers or documents or vouchers by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony and records as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or by any person designated by him, and shall be served by such person or persons as the chairman of the committee or subcommittee may designate. The chairman of the committee or subcommittee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses.

"That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives during the present Congress the results of their studies, inquiries, and investigations with such recommendations for legislation or otherwise as the committee deems desirable."

At the very beginning it appeared obvious that the best procedure was for your committee to devote its attention to the most pressing matters and that policy has been consistently followed.

In the early stages of its work the committee employed various investigators. In July 1942 it employed a general counsel and other counsel within the limits of the committee's appropriation. Your committee decided upon an immediate detailed investigation of the affairs of South Portland Shipbuilding Corporation, hereinafter referred to as South Portland Ship. This decision was prompted by various considerations, including the fact that South Portland Ship had the poorest performance record of any company engaged in the construction of Liberty ships.

Members of the investigating staff were in Portland from shortly after August 1 until November 1. During that time they made a thorough examination of all phases of the activities of South Portland Ship in the performance of its facilities and ship-construction contracts. They investigated certain vendors who dealt with the shipyard. They investigated the files of the Maritime Commission at the yard, at the regional offices in Philadelphia and in Washington. Extensive hearings have been held and the testimony of many witnesses taken both in Portland and in Washington.

Your committee sought among other things to discover the underlying reasons for the poor performance of South Portland Ship. The sole purpose of the accelerated merchant shipbuilding program is to produce ships at an ever-increasing pace. The demands of a global war cannot be met except by superlative performance. Your committee had no preconceived ideas as to the cause of the delays at South Portland Ship. Its findings have been dictated by undisputed evidence.

THE CONTRACTS BETWEEN THE MARITIME COMMISSION AND SOUTH PORTLAND SHIP

There are two shipyards located at South Portland, Maine, with a total building capacity of 13 ships. The older of the yards was built early in 1941, pursuant to a contract between the British Government and the Todd-Bath Iron Shipbuilding Corporation, hereinafter referred to as Todd-Bath. This contract provided for the construction of the necessary facilities and of 30 merchant ships. The yard has 3 basins, with a capacity of 7 ships. The British contract has been virtually completed and the Maritime Commission has acquired the yard for consolidation with the adjoining South Portland Ship yard. Construction of the South Portland Ship yard was commenced in the spring of 1941, pursuant to a contract between the Maritime Commission and South Portland Ship dated April 28, 1941. Both South Portland Ship and Todd-Bath are controlled by the same interests, to wit, 50 percent by Bath Iron Works and 50 percent by Todd Shipyards Corporation.

At the time of the making of the facilities contract the Maritime Commission and South Portland Ship entered into a separate contract for the construction of 16 Liberty ships. Since the original contracts were made the Maritime Commission has entered into further contracts with South Portland Ship for additional facilities and for 68 more Liberty ships. Thirty-three of these Liberty ships are to be built in the Todd-Bath yard, and construction has begun there. The contracts with South Portland Ship for facilities were straight-cost contracts with no provision for any fee. The contracts for ship construction are cost-plus-fixed-fee contracts. The fixed fee is $110,000 per ship, plus bonuses for good performance, minus penalties for poor performance. Fee plus bonuses are limited to $140,000 per ship. The imposition of penalties cannot reduce the fee below $60,000 per ship.

The original plan was that South Portland Ship would be a four-way yard with very limited facilities for fabrication. The intention was that most of the fabrication would be handled at the Todd-Bath yard adjoining or at the Harding plant of the Bath Iron Works, which is located some 35 miles from South Portland. Subsequently, it was decided to add two additional ways. Since fabricating facilities were not available for the additional ways, it was necessary to make provision for such facilities.

An examination of the contracts, both for facilities and for ships, indicates an attitude of extreme generosity on the part of the Maritime Commission. In the facilities contracts there is no obligation on the part of the contractor to complete construction of the facilities by any given date and there is virtually no limitation upon their cost. The contracts provide "that the contractor shall not be deemed to have guaranteed that this contract can be performed" for the amount stated and "shall in no event be obligated to continue its performance of this contract beyond a point to which its obligations * * * equal the unexpended portion of the amount payable by the owner hereunder." The ship contracts are equally generous and, among other provisions state that "the contractor shall be reimbursed for all costs of remedying defective work * * * whether the * * * work shall have been furnished or supplied by the Commission or the contractor."

INADEQUATE MANAGEMENT

The fundamental trouble with South Portland Ship is that it lacked sufficient managerial personnel and skill to accomplish the vast task of organizing and operating a yard capable of performing its contracts. That lack still exists. While Bath Iron Works and Todd Shipyards Corporation are equal owners, Todd Shipyards Corporation has contributed virtually nothing in the way of personnel or management. The management load was carried originally by Bath Iron Works.

The vast majority of the managerial personnel at both Todd-Bath and South Portland Ship came from Bath Iron Works. While Bath Iron Works enjoyed an excellent reputation for shipbuilding for many years, it was a small concern. When the Todd-Bath yard was organized, its staffing necessitated a big drain on this small, though well-trained, personnel. The Todd-Bath yard was bigger than Bath Iron Works had ever been. The available managerial material was, therefore, already spread thin, possibly too thin, even before the South Portland Ship contracts were awarded. The result was inevitable. Men, likely good mechanics—on that score we venture no opinion—who had always been subordinates, were suddenly vaulted into executive and subexecutive posts.

This can readily be illustrated. On the pay roll there are approximately 100 superintendents, foremen, and assistant foremen. Of these, 75 had no prior experience in the direction of men. These 75 were originally employed by the yard in various capacities ranging from common laborers to skilled mechanics of one kind or another. Their average beginning salary at time of employment was $1.15 per hour, and their average salary at the present time is approximately $5,500 per year. The average length of time it took these men to reach their present salary levels from the date when they were first employed is 5 months.

The failure of the management at South Portland Ship could be evidenced by innumerable instances. A few examples must suffice.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE FACILITIES

Shortly after the execution of the facilities contract in April 1941, South Portland Ship, with the approval of the Maritime Commission, entered into contracts with Alonzo N. Harriman for all architectural, engineering, and supervisory service required for the construction of the yard, and with Ellis C. Snodgrass as general contractor for the entire construction thereof. Pursuant to these contracts, plans were drawn and construction got under way. Until after October 1, 1941, South Portland Ship had virtually no organization on the site and the entire construction program was left in the hands of the Harriman and Snodgrass organizations. Thus, by reason of the fact that South Portland Ship had no purchasing department, all of the purchases of materials for facilities construction were made by the Harriman organization, although this is wholly outside the sphere of the usual activities of an architect and engineer. At the same time, supervision of the work by South Poland Ship was virtually nonexistent.

During the early period of construction of facilities the only supervision exercised by South Portland Ship over the performance of their contracts by the architect and the general contractor, was by two representatives of the company, Mr. T. R. Allen and Mr. Robert Crean. Mr. Allen was an experienced shipbuilder and had for many years been connected with Bath Iron Works. He had, however, no experience in building construction. When asked for an explanation as to what construction experience Mr. Allen had which would fit him for the task of supervising the construction of the yard, Mr. William S. Newell, president of South Portland Ship, testified before the committee:

"Mr. HAYES. Was Mr. Allen ever in the building construction business?

"Mr. NEWELL. I do not know, Mr. Hayes. I believe h's father was a contractor, but I am not sure of that. I do think, however, that I recall hearing Mr. Allen say that Mr. Allen was with his father, who was a contractor in Philadelphia.

* * * * *

"Mr. HAYES. So far as you know, Mr. Allen had never engaged in building construction before? He was a shipbuilder, as I understand your testimony.

"Mr. NEWELL. Yes; but as I told you his father was a contractor, and I believe as a young man he had done some work with his father."

Mr. Crean likewise had no building construction experience and had even less shipbuilding experience than did Mr. Allen. Mr. Crean was only 27 years old and had previously been employed as a ship fitter at Bath Iron Works. It was not until the construction of the original facilities had been largely completed in the early part of October 1941 that a competent representative was appointed by South Portland Ship to oversee the conduct of the balance of the work.

About the only contribution made by the top management of South Portland Ship or either of its stockholders, the Bath Iron Works and Todd Shipyards Corporation, to the construction of the facilities, was the lay-out of the yard itself. The yard was laid out by the architect, Mr. Harriman, with the advice of Mr. Newell and Mr. Allen. The lay-out is bad for a yard which was intended to exploit to the full the use of prefabrication and preassembly in the construction of ships. The assembly building is much too close to the head of the ways, and a portion of the distance between is taken up with a roadway for the passage of trucks and with a railroad track. The remaining space is too small to take care of the preassembled units in sufficient number.

The placing of the assembly building in a position so close to the head of the ways was described by a witness before the committee, an experienced engineer, as a $5,000,000 blunder. The explanation for the blunder lies likely in the fact that Bath Iron Works and its president, Mr. Newell, have engaged principally in custom-tailor ship construction and were not acquainted with the methods of mass construction used and intended to be used in the building of Liberty ships. Thus, the only participation by South Portland Ship in the performance of the facilities contract was the furnishing of a bad lay-out and the appointment of two inexperienced men to supervise construction.

FAULTY RECORD KEEPING

The failure to establish proper and accurate checking systems on material deliveries and to keep adequate records has caused much confusion, with a consequent loss of precious time that should have been devoted to construction. We instance the handling of timber, equipment, and appropriations as examples of this failure.

Timber

In connection with the construction of the facilities, it became apparent that large quantities of timber would be required and delays in deliveries had previously been experienced. To meet this situation the architect prepared tentative estimates of the sizes and quantities of timber that he expected to use. The amount required was calculated at about 2,500,000 board feet and, after bids were obtained, the contract for its delivery was awarded. As detailed plans were prepared, the actual timber requirements were calculated and sent to the vendor who, in turn, delivered the required amount to the yard. Several months after the execution of the contract the vendor sought payment, South Portland Ship at that time owing him some $145,000. Thereupon an attempt was made by the Harriman organization to check the records of South Portland Ship to determine the amounts actually delivered. It was found that it was impossible to do so as the necessary records had not been kept and recourse had to be had to the vendor's own records. Thus, it was discovered that approximately 1,200,000 feet, or some 75 carloads, over and above the amount originally ordered, had been delivered, and that no record of this overage had been kept.

Equipment

In the course of the construction, a considerable quantity of equipment, cranes, compressors, pumps, etc., had to be rented for the use of the general contractor. The facilities contracts provide that rentals upon such equipment shall not exceed the cost of such equipment and that whenever the rental paid equals the replacement value at the beginning of the rental period, such equipment shall become the property of the Maritime Commission. In order to effectuate this provision of the contract it would be necessary to determine the value of the equipment at the time it was first used in the yard. At the present time this is done by a clause in the rental agreement between the equipment vendor and South Portland Ship. In the beginning, however, and until about February 1942, equipment was brought into the yard without any effort to fix either its value or the amount of rental to be paid and, at times, it was worked for several months before any purchase order was prepared.

The customary basis of renting equipment is to rent for use during a period of 8 hours per day In the event that it is used for any part of an additional 8 hours per day, one-half of the rental for the first period is paid and a similar amount is paid for use during the third 8-hour period. In view of the fact that the rental on various pieces of equipment ran to as much as $1,500 per month for 8 hours' use per day, it was important to determine the number of actual hours use. No record of the time was kept by South Portland Ship until about February 1942, and payments were made upon the basis of bills submitted by the vendors without any check thereof being possible through the records of South Portland Ship. Disputes going back to this early period are still in process of settlement.

Appropriations

The appropriations made by the Maritime Commission for the construction of the facilities were divided into separate amounts for the construction of particular items; i. e., crane ways, assembly building, etc. The plan was that as each commitment was made by South Portland Ship for services or materials upon a particular structure, such commitment would be charged against the appropriation and thus a record would be available to determine the degree of exhaustion of the particular appropriation. There was, however, a progressive failure to record commitments when made, with the result that by March 1942 actual commitments exceeded recorded commitments by approximately $600,000. In order to bring the records up to date, it became necessary at that time to cease purchases and to instruct vendors to make no further deliveries for a period of about 2 weeks.

The important point in connection with the failure to keep adequate records is the time loss that resulted. It is impossible now to determine how many man-hours, not merely of subordinates but of men in executive posts, were wasted in their endeavors to settle the controversies that resulted from this failure.

THOMPSON'S POINT

When the yard was expanded from a four-way to a six-way yard South Portland Ship decided to use as a fabrication and storage site a property known as Thompson's Point. This property consists of abandoned railroad engine and car repair shops located some 7 miles from the yard across the city of Portland. For the past several years the property has been used for the storage of sulfur, automobiles, and wood pulp. The Maritime Commission quite properly vetoed the use of Thompson's Point for prefabrication and has since acquired a site adjacent to the yard for the erection of a fabrication plant which is now virtually complete. However, in January 1942, South Portland Ship leased the Thompson's Point property and has since used it for storage of materials. The lessor of the property is the Portland Terminal Co., a subsidiary of the Maine Central Railroad, of which William S. Newell is a director. Mr. Wadleigh Drummond, counsel to South Portland Ship, is a director of one of the underlying railroad corporations involved. The maximum revenue of Thompson's Point for any year during the 5-year period immediately preceding the making of the lease was less than $15,000. The assessed valuation of the property was under $120,000 and the book value of the buildings thereon was $103,000.

The lease provided for $36,000 per year rent for a minimum term of 2 years and for a maximum term, including renewals, of 6 years. In addition, the lessee agreed to pay all taxes in excess of $5,541.12 per year and was permitted to make improvements which would become the property of the lessor upon the termination of the lease. The Maritime Commission's estimate of the cost of these improvements is $520,000. The lessee was given an option to purchase the property at any time during the term of the lease for $555,000.

The property consists of a point of land extending into a body of water known as Fore River, which is a part of Portland Harbor. The main line of the Boston & Maine Railroad, which operates the Maine Central Railroad, crosses Fore River on a trestle located between Thompsons Point and Portland Harbor at a distance of approximately three-quarters of a mile from the former. The lease contains a covenant to the effect that the lessee will in no way, directly or indirectly, attempt to promote the use of Fore River as a navigable waterway, and that if, at any time within 20 years, the railroad is compelled to build a bridge to permit navigation there, South Portland Ship will defray the entire cost of such structure and its maintenance until January 1, 1962.

It is difficult to understand why South Portland Ship should ever have entered into such a lease. It is impossible to justify it. Testifying before your committee, Mr. Newell explained the rent by stating that an officer of the Portland Terminal Co. had informed him that the property was worth $600,000, 6-percent return on which would amount to $36,000, but that he had made no investigation of his own to verify the value. He could offer no explanation for the inclusion in the lease of the strange and unusual provisions relating to the construction of the bridge. In response to questions concerning that provision, his testimony was that he didn't remember the lease contained such provision. He finally admitted that either the railroad company of which he is a director had driven a "sharp bargain" or "somebody was asleep" in his organization.

No prudent businessman, dealing with his own money, would ever have entered into such a lease. Its improvidence and imprudence can be explained only by keeping in mind that all costs incurred are reimbursable by the Maritime Commission.

Quite properly, the Maritime Commission refused to approve the lease, primarily on the ground that the rent was excessive. Its action in doing so is to be commended. Instead, on March 12, 1942, the Martime Commission authorized the condemnation of the property. No petition in condemnation was filed in the United States District Court for the District of Maine until June 23, 1942, and up to the present no declaration of taking has been filed. In the meantime, South Portland Ship has been using the Thompsons Point property as a storage yard, and the Maritime Commission has been expending money for the erection of facilities there. No rent has yet been paid to the lessor for the use of the property.

In a hearing before your committee in October of this year, representatives of the Maritime Commission testified that the Commission had taken title to the property. This testimony was erroneous. It is our understanding that the Commission, acting through the Lands Division of the Department of Justice, is presently arranging for the filing of a declaration of taking so that title will vest in the Commission. Because of the improvident nature of the lease, your committee called the whole transaction to the attention of the War Frauds Unit of the Department of Justice.

TRUCKING

The intrayard transportation problem is chiefly one of transporting steel from the storage racks to the ways. Originally, this was handled by the use of 3 tractor and trailer combinations, for which South Portland Ship paid Materials Handling Corporation, hereinafter referred to as Materials Handling, $4.75 per hour each for 24 hours per day. In addition, a flatcar rented from the Maine Central Railroad at 50 cents per day performed the same service. In the course of time, 2 other flatcars were added and a small gasoline locomotive was obtained. These 4 pieces of equipment require the services of 11 men over the 24-hour period. The distance traveled is about 200 yards, and the locomotive makes approximately 5 trips over that distance in a 24-hour period. The functions performed by the tractor-trailers and the railroad equipment are essentially the same, and either means of transportation alone is sufficient to perform the work. By the use of additional flatcars and the installation of a small amount of trackage the entire work could be performed by rail, without any increase in expense other than rental of flatcars at 50 cents per day each. There appears to be no reason for the continuance of both means of transportation, and the elimination of the truck transportation would decrease the expense of this phase of the operation approximately 75 percent.

Up to the present the yard has spent about $325,000 on trucking, almost all of which went to Materials Handling. At the present time the bills of Materials Handling average in excess of $1,000 a day.

The majority ownership of Materials Handling is in Mr. Kenneth T. Burr, general manager of Bancroft & Martin, a local steel concern, his wife, and his daughter. Small minority interests are held by various employees of Bancroft & Martin. Prior to 1941, neither Bancroft & Martin nor any of the individuals connected with Materials Handling had ever been in the trucking business. Materials Handling was incorporated in January 1941 to perform trucking services for the Todd-Bath yard. The total investment was $3,000, of which $2,000 was paid by Kenneth T. Burr, and $1,000 by Mortier D. Harris, a director both of the Todd-Bath yard and of the South Portland shipyard, and an old friend of Mr. Burr. Mr. Harris withdrew from the company shortly after its organization and, according to both Mr. Burr and Mr. Harris, was repaid his investment, although no record of the repayment could be found on the books of the parties involved. The company purchased its original equipment by borrowing the money therefor from a local bank, giving to the bank as security mortgages on the equipment acquired.

Materials Handling has never had sufficient equipment to supply all the needs of the yard. Accordingly, it has rented equipment from others, and in turn rerented it to the yard at a higher rental than that which it paid. An example of the operation of this method is the following. A firm known as Truck Leasing Corporation rented a truck, supplying gasoline and oil, but without a driver, at $6.50 per day to Hunnewell Trucking Co., hereinafter referred to as Hunnewell. Hunnewell placed a driver on the truck and rented it to Materials Handling at $2.75 per hour. Materials Handling in turn rented the same truck with the Hunnewell driver to the yard at $3.50 per hour.

Most of the equipment supplied by others to Materials Handling for rental by it to the yard was obtained from either Hunnewell or William H. Gilbert Partnership, hereinafter referred to as the Gilbert Partnership. Hunnewell is an old, established concern. The Gilbert Partnership, on the other hand, is, like Materials Handling, a by-product of the shipbuilding boom in Portland. The members of the partnership are Bernard, Elery, and Omah Harris, all brothers of the aforementioned Mortier D. Harris. Originally one William H. Gilbert had a one-third interest in the partnership but his interest was retired in April of this year.

The rental of trucks to the yard is a most profitable business. During the period from its incorporation in January 1941 to September 30, 1942, Materials Handling Corporation showed a profit of $87,394.30, after deducting officers' salaries totaling $38,000, and after writing off depreciation based on an 18-month life for equipment, a rate of depreciation wholly unjustified by any standard. If a 3-year life for the equipment were taken as a base—the equipment was all purchased new—the profit would be over $107,000, after deducting the afore-mentioned salaries. Of the total of $38,000 salaries $10,000 was paid to Kenneth T. Burr and $9,875 was paid to Miss Barbara Burr, a daughter of Kenneth T. Burr. Miss Burr is 22 years of age, and is employed as a stenographer by Bancroft & Martin at a salary of $25 per week.

While these salaries were being paid the individuals so recompensed were all receiving very substantial salaries from Bancroft & Martin, for which firm they were chiefly working. The total profits received by Materials Handling, plus the total salaries paid, amount to $145,000. To repeat, the total investment was $3,000.

The experience of Hunnewell is equally interesting. It was not until the last part of 1941 that Materials Handling began to rent trucks from Hunnewell in any appreciable number. During the years 1936 to 1940, inclusive, Hunnewell's average profit was approximately $2,000 per year, after deduction of officers' salaries, which never exceeded $12,000 in any one year. It first began to receive business from Materials Handling in 1941 and in that year showed a profit of over $5,000, after deduction of officers' salaries totaling $24,000. For the 9-month period ended September 30, 1942, the profit of Hunnewell was $71,000, after deduction of officers' salaries at the rate of $36,000 per year.

The Gilbert partnership has had an equally profitable existence. This partnership, like Materials Handling, has never rented a truck to anyone other than the two shipyards or contractors engaged in work at either of the two shipyards. However, all of the trucks of the Gilbert partnership used at the South Portland shipyard are rented to the yard through Materials Handling and not directly. The Gilbert partnership had no investment, acquiring its equipment, mostly second-hand, on the installment plan, and paying the installment notes out of the proceeds of its trucking rentals. During the period from its creation in January 1941 to October 31, 1942, the Gilbert partnership showed a profit of $74,000.

The profits and salaries mentioned above exceed $300,000. While the business which produced such profits was in part supplied by the Todd-Bath yard, the bulk of the business came from the South Portland shipyard.

In addition to its enjoyment of a virtual monopoly on trucking at the South Portland shipyard, Materials Handling has been accorded some unusually favorable treatment. The best example of this has to do with the failure to apply the usual recapture provisions to the equipment rented by it to the yard. There is no recapture of any equipment rented by or through Materials Handling. This is not the case, however, with other trucks rented to the yard. There is a local truckman who owns two trucks. Both are used at the yard. He supplies the fuel, maintenance, and the driver in both instances. In the one case he rents the truck directly to the yard and in the other case he rents the truck through Materials Handling. In the case of the truck which he rents directly the recapture provisions are being applied, but in the case of the truck which he rents through Materials Handling recapture is not applied. Further, he receives more rental on the truck he rents through Materials Handling than on the truck he rents directly to the yard.

One would suppose that the owners of Materials Handling would be quite satisfied with the profits they were making, but such appears not to be the case. Examination has disclosed that they have been engaged in a systematic course of double billing the yard on certain hauling on which they are supposed to be paid on a pure tonnage basis. They have been billing for such hauling on both a tonnage and a time basis, and because of the method of record keeping at the yard, a method which was installed by the Materials Handling representatives themselves with the knowledge and approval of Mr. John W. Osborn, then general manager of Thompson's Point for South Portland Ship, this practice was not discovered until we made our examination. We have advised the War Frauds Unit of the Department of Justice of the condition which we discovered. Since our investigation brought the double billing to light, Materials Handling has issued a credit to South Portland Ship of $6,079.50. We are convinced that the double billing amounted to a much larger sum.

Our endeavors to get some explanation from the executives of South Portland Ship as to why the yard did not do its own trucking or why it did not seek competitive bids—no such bids were ever asked—or why favored treatment was accorded Materials Handling were totally fruitless. The invariable answer was (a) that the particular executive was not very well acquainted with the arrangement, and (b) that anyhow he was interested in getting ships built and couldn't be bothered with such details. This answer might carry some conviction if, in fact, ships were being built.

The lack of experienced supervision during the original construction of facilities, the bad yard lay-out, the time lost in wrangling and fruitless search for verification of vendors' bills due to the lack of adequate records, the profligate Thompson's Point lease, the use of expensive tractor-trailer combinations instead of cheap flatcars within the yard, the granting of a trucking monopoly to Materials Handling and the delegation to Materials Handling of the task of instituting a record-keeping system to check its own transactions, all spell, to be charitable, the laxest kind of management. Yet, if possible, a worse story is told by the performance of South Portland Ship in ship construction itself.

SHIP CONSTRUCTION

From the beginning it was apparent that the progress made by South Portland Ship in the construction of ships was unsatisfactory. Numerous reports of conditions in the yard were made to the Maritime Commission and the urgent necessity for changes was pointed out. These reports came not only from Maritime Commission representatives within the yard but also from its traveling inspectors. So ineffective was the management that at the time of the delivery of the first ship it was necessary for representatives of the Maritime Commission, Mr. Bonner, chief inspector of machinery, and Mr. Blakeman, chief, ship construction section, to take control of the trial trip.

The lack of managerial skill is further illustrated by the failure of South Portland Ship to use prefabrication to the extent to which it could and should be used in this type of shipbuilding. As has been stated, the management of the yard was secured chiefly from Bath Iron Works. That organization, while possibly efficient in the construction of single ships, was wholly inexperienced in the use of mass-production methods, and very shortly after the contract was awarded, at the Maritime Commission's suggestion, the president, Mr. William S. Newell, and the vice president in charge of production, Mr. T. R. Allen, visited shipyards on the west coast to learn modern shipbuilding technique. This, of course, involves the use of prefabrication by which large units of the hull are preassembled and then fitted into place on the ways. The use of this method permits the employment of a far greater number of men per hull and vastly increases the speed of construction. But whatever they may have learned with respect to the far speedier methods of ship construction in use there, they applied none of it to the South Portland yard, and continued to build ships piece by piece.

In March of this year one of the members of the Maritime Commission and a representative of the War Production Board visited the yard. At that time, and after that, the Commission took the position that a new manager would have to be placed in the yard, and as a result Mr. Carl Klitgaard was appointed deputy to the president. Mr. Klitgaard's specific task was to build a shipbuilding organization, and one of his first acts was to send the general manager, Mr. Thatcher B. Pinkham, on a visit to other shipyards. That as late as May of this year, just 1 year after the original facilities and ship-construction contracts had been made, a new manager should have to be brought into the yard, is the most eloquent testimony obtainable of the failure of South Portland Ship to supply what was expected of it, to wit, an organization capable of building ships.

Mr. Klitgaard's first task in this direction was the elimination of incompetents, all of whom had come from Bath Iron Works, who had been placed in important posts in the yard by the South Portland management. For example, he removed Mr. Thomas R. Allen, who had been vice president in charge of production, the gentleman who, with Mr. Newell, made a tour of the west-coast yards so that he could learn mass-construction methods and then objected to the use of automatic-welding machines. In the original master plans prepared for the construction of Liberty ships, the use of automatic welding was contemplated. By reason of the opposition of the corporation, voiced by Mr. Allen particularly, the substitution of hand welding was permitted and was utilized until it became evident that such outmoded methods could not produce the desired results. Nevertheless, it was only through the continued insistence of the Commission that the more modern and speedy automatic welding procedure was instituted in the spring of this year.

Mr. Klitgaard also removed Mr. John W. Osborn, who had been the general manager at Thompsons Point and who had formerly held other key posts in the yard. It was Mr. Osborn who failed to establish a proper method of checking on trucking which made it possible for the double billing by Materials Handling. Mr. Klitgaard also removed Mr. Crean, the 27-year-old ship fitter, who had been placed in the important position of hull superintendent, after serving as general manager during the early construction of facilities. Most of the people removed were relatives or favorites of officers or stockholders of Bath Iron Works. Thanks to Mr. Klitgaard's efforts nepotism has largely been removed from the yard.

LABOR

Perhaps the worst example of the management's bungling has been its handling of labor relations. The result is that there is a complete lack of morale in the yard. The chief reason for this lack of morale is the failure of South Portland Ship to act on an agreement it made on July 2, 1942, with the metal-trades department of the American Federation of Labor covering wages and working conditions in the yard. In general, the wages agreed to by the parties were higher than the prevailing rates in the yard. Although the agreement was executed on July 2, 1942, and was stated to be retroactive to May 4, 1942, the management did not pay any part of the agreed increases until the latter part of October, when a few of the men were increased "as evidence of good faith."

Within the past 2 weeks a tentative agreement was arrived at in the course of a meeting in Washington of a subcommittee of the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee of the War Production Board, which meeting was attended by the chairman of your committee. It appears that now, at long last, the wage disputes at the yard will be settled by paying the men the moneys owing to them.

Although the labor conditions at the yard have been notoriously bad for many months, and although there has been a complete lack of morale, it was not until about 1 month ago that South Portland Ship took any positive step toward meeting the situation by appointment of a labor-relations counselor. There is a crying need to establish a spirit of cooperation and mutual understanding between labor and management at the yard.

IMPROVEMENT DUE TO MARITIME COMMISSION

While Mr. Klitgaard is technically an employee of South Portland Ship, his presence in the yard is due entirely to the intervention of the Maritime Commission. The members of the Maritime Commission secured his release from a retainer to another company so that he could accept employment at the yard. Under the terms of his employment he is free to act independently of the officers and directors of South Portland Ship, to whom he is in no way beholden. He has, in fact, acted independently of the officers and directors of South Portland Ship, which, as a corporation, today has nothing to do with the management of the employees insofar as ship construction is concerned.

As a result, any improvement which has taken place in the production of the yard since Mr. Klitgaard's arrival, and there has been an improvement, is due not to South Portland Ship, but to the Maritime Commission. Were it not for the insistence of the Commission the yard would still be under the control of Mr. Newell's appointees, such as Messrs. Allen and Osborn, who have now been eliminated.

Since Mr. Klitgaard's arrival he has devoted most of his time and attention to affairs at South Portland Ship. He has left the existing set-up at the Todd-Bath yard quite alone. The result is that since March of 1942 the Todd-Bath yard has been conducted almost entirely by the superintendents with almost no supervision of any kind by management. There are at Todd-Bath some very capable men in the superintendents' posts and there exists virtually no contact between them and the management.

FORBEARANCE OF MARITIME COMMISSION

These conditions have been well known to the Maritime Commission during the whole period of the yard's history. The members of the Maritime Commission have seen fit to devote very little of their personal attention to it. The Maritime Commission did insist upon and obtain a change of management in the appointment of Mr. Klitgaard. Aside from that single contribution, however, it has done nothing to improve conditions at the yard other than to plead with South Portland Ship for better performance.

COMPARISON WITH OTHER YARDS

As the test of the pudding is in the eating, the test of a shipyard's efficiency is in the results obtained. During the months of March, April, and May 1941, contracts for construction of Liberty ships were made with 9 different shipyards in different parts of the United States including South Portland Ship. As of November 1, 1942, South Portland had delivered 8 ships. Next lowest is a yard which delivered 13 ships, and the next lowest yard delivered 17 ships. The 2 best yards delivered 80 and 86 ships. One yard received a contract for construction of ships in March of this year and has already, less than 8 months later, delivered 1. South

Portland Ship did not deliver its first ship until more than a year after it received its contract. A more significant comparison exists between the Todd-Bath yard, which is now being devoted exclusively to the construction of Liberty ships, and the Richmond No. 1 yard, located in California. Both these yards on the same day received contracts for the construction of facilities and of 30 identical merchant ships from the British. That was in December 1940. In addition, both yards, in January 1942, received contracts for the construction of 33 Liberty ships. At November 1, 1942, the Richmond No. 1 yard had delivered all of the 30 British ships and 15 Liberty ships. At the same date the Todd-Bath yard had not yet completed its British contract, 3 ships remaining to be delivered, and had delivered no Liberty ships.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FACILITIES

Recently South Portland Ship requested the Maritime Commission to appropriate $9,769,000 for the construction of additional facilities. Upon examination of the request, the regional office of the Commission approved additional facilities in the sum of approximately $5,000,000 and communicated its approval to the Commission. Some time ago the Commission decided as a matter of policy, that, under certain circumstances, if any additional facilities beyond those originally provided for a shipyard were to be furnished, it would not appropriate the necessary funds unless the yard would agree to reduce the fees payable to it for all ships remaining to be built. The reason for this policy is that the additional facilities would make it easier for the yard to complete its contract and thus earn large bonuses, and its fee on each ship should therefore be reduced. We commend this policy.

When the Maritime Commission received from its regional office approval of $5,000,000 additional facilities, it wrote to South Portland Ship, suggesting that the fees be reduced from $60,000, $110,000, and $140,000, to $35,000, $75,000, and $100,000, respectively. Several weeks later South Portland Ship wrote to the Commission over the signature of Mr. Newell, stating, that it could not agree to a reduction of its fees. When he appeared as a witness before your committee Mr. Newell stated that he considered a reduction of fees "not fair" and that, so far as he knew, none of his associates in South Portland Ship "feel that it is fair." As a result of this attitude on the part of South Portland Ship, the construction of the additional facilities is being held up.

SOUTH PORTLAND SHIP'S POSSIBLE PROFIT

The fees paid to South Portland Ship as of October 31, 1942, amounted to $450,000. These fees are, for all practical purposes, net earnings of South Portland Ship. Its total investment is $250,000. All costs and expenses incurred by it, including salaries of officers, even $6,575 of the $10,000 salary paid to Mr. Newell, are being reimbursed to it by the Maritime Commission. It has already received a return on its investment of almost 200 percent. Under its contracts with the Commission it is to build 84 ships. Judging by its performance to date, its fees will not exceed $60,000 per ship, as on the ships built so far the penalties imposed for bad performance keep the fees at the minimum figure. Even at the minimum figure, however, its total fees will amount to $5,040,000, or a return of 2,000 percent on investment. This high return on investment must be considered in the light of the fact that South Portland Ship incurs no risk. Up to the present time it has financed its operations by short-term bank loans, a simple matter when one is enabled to borrow on the security of a Government contract. Incidentally, even the interest expense incurred on such loans is reimbursable.

CONCLUSION AND RECOMMENDATION

The question presented is whether or not the performance by South Portland Ship has been such as to warrant the payment of fees of not less than $5,040,000. To summarize the relevant facts in the light of which an answer to this question must be framed, South Portland Ship contributed substantially nothing to the performance of the facilities contracts other than the lay-out of the yard and the lay-out is bad. It delegated the performance of the facilities contracts to the architect and the general contractors. Until the original facilities were nearly complete, it supplied no experienced or able supervision over the work of either the architect or the general contractors. The original management was removed at the insistence of the Maritime Commission. Were it not for the Maritime Commission's insistence at that time, to wit, the spring of this year, there is no indication but that the then existing management would have been continued and the yard would be in even worse shape than it is today. Since the appointment of Mr. Klitgaard in May 1942, and the granting to him of complete authority without any control by either the officers or directors of South Portland Ship, it has delegated to him the performance of the ship construction contracts. For long periods of time and until very recently it followed a policy of not paying any bills rendered to it until those bills were first approved by the Maritime Commission auditors in the yard, thus assuring it that the items paid would be reimbursed. Its investment of $250,000 is insignificant when compared with the moneys necessary even to meet the pay rolls in a yard employing some 13,000 men, and now with the addition of the Todd-Bath facilities, some 25,000 men. It has delegated to banks the task of supplying the necessary funds for the financing of its work without cost to it since the interest expense incurred is paid by the Maritime Commission.

The inevitable conclusion is that South Portland Ship is receiving a fee for the trouble of incorporating a company, choosing a name for that company, holding an occasional directors meeting and delegating the performance of its contract duties.

Your committee conceives that it would not be doing its full duty if it merely reported the above facts and did not suggest a remedy. It is clear to your committee that to continue in force the existing contract with South Portland Ship would be to throw away millions of dollars needlessly. As indicated above, South Portland Ship has already received fees representing almost 200 percent of its invested capital. The contracts may be summarily canceled upon payment of fees earned to the date of cancelation. In the alternative the contracts may be terminated at any time without payment of fees when the contractor has failed to exercise due diligence. South Portland Ship has already received more than enough. There is ample cause, as recited above, for the termination of its contracts.

In a hearing held about a month ago, your committee suggested to the representatives of the Maritime Commission, including two of the members of the Commission, that the contracts be terminated immediately because of the failure of South Portland Ship to exercise due diligence in their performance. While the Commission members conceded freely that they were not satisfied with conditions at the yard, they demurred to the suggestion that the contracts be terminated giving as an excuse that there is bad management in other yards also.

The record of South Portland Ship is the worst of any company engaged in the construction of Liberty ships. Your committee is unable to subscribe to the principle that South Portland Ship should be paid $5,000,000 for its incompetence, inefficiency, and obvious inability to perform its contract duties solely because other yards furnish examples of bad management. There is no room for incompetence, inefficiency, and incapacity, the only effect of which is a hampering of our war effort. In the opinion of your committee, the proposition that the contracts enjoyed by South Portland Ship should be terminated immediately is so clear that it admits of no debate. The other yards which, it is said, furnish examples of bad management will be very carefully examined, if your committee is authorized to continue its investigation.

One other reason was suggested by the members of the Maritime Commission for their reluctance to terminate the contract of South Portland Ship, to wit, that there is a dearth of available managerial skill. Your committee believes to the contrary. In this connection it must be stressed that the job at South Portland is not a technical shipbuilding job but a construction job. Experience in other yards has demonstrated that the chief executive need not possess shipbuilding experience.

The specific suggestion of your committee is that the contracts with South Portland Ship should be terminated immediately and that the existing top management should be replaced by a single qualified executive who, with the existing staff of superintendents and foremen, can carry out the task of constructing the remaining ships. Under such an arrangement millions of dollars would be saved and there is every reason to believe that ships would be coming off the ways and out of the basins with ever-increasing speed.

MINORITY VIEWS

I concur in the recommendation contained in the report to terminate the contract of the South Portland Shipbuilding Corporation with the Maritime Commission, but believe it should go further for the following reasons:

1. The report indicates that the Maritime Commission has been fully aware of the condition existing at the South Portland Shipbuilding Corporation yard from its inception and it has been the responsibility of the Maritime Commission to eliminate the conditions existing without congressional investigation or action. The Maritime Commission has been derelict in its duty in not terminating this contract many months ago.

2. Members of the Maritime Commission have testified to the Commission's incompetency as set forth in the following language on page 38 of the typewritten report:

"In a hearing held about a month ago, your committee suggested to the representatives of the Maritime Commission, including two of the members of the Commission, that the contracts be terminated immediately because of the failure of South Portland Ship to exercise due diligence in their performance. While the Commission members conceded freely that they were not satisfied with conditions at the yard, they demurred to the suggestion that the contracts be terminated, giving as an excuse that there is bad management in other yards also."

RICHARD J. WELCH,

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CORE). Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

PRICE CEILINGS ON AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, the Office of Price Administration is threatening at this time to impose ceilings on wheat at less than parity. This is in direct violation of the Emergency Price Control

Act of 1942 as amended, in that that act prohibits the imposition of ceilings on any agricultural commodity at less than parity. Even if it were not expressly prohibited by law there is no justification for the imposition of price ceilings on wheat at this time. I understand the excuse given by the O. P. A. for imposing a ceiling at less than parity is that unless ceilings are imposed it may be necessary to slightly increase the price ceiling on bread. I do not profess to know whether parity prices on wheat will increase the price of bread or not. If they do increase it, it will be very little. Hard winter wheat prices today are from 15 to 17 cents per bushel below parity at country marketing points in Kansas. Sixty-two 1-pound loaves of bread can be made from a bushel of wheat. If wheat prices are permitted to move to parity it will mean at the most an increase of from one-quarter to one-third of a cent per loaf, assuming that all of the increase had to be assumed by the baker.

Let us assume for the sake of argument that it might be necessary to increase the retail price of bread one-half cent per loaf. It would still be by far the cheapest food we have. The price of bread would still be slightly less than it was in 1926 when both wages and employment were far below what they are now. The price of bread today is the same as it was a year ago. Of what other commodities can that be said? The wheat producers of this country have been subsidizing the bread consumers for many years by supplying wheat at less than parity prices, which means at less than fair prices. There might have been some excuse for this when we had millions of unemployed. Certainly there is no excuse for it now when everyone who wants work can secure it and when wages are the highest ever known.

It may be said that it is the Federal Government rather than the wheat farmer that is subsidizing the consumer of bread. This is because wheat producers who comply with the farm program are being paid a subsidy which covers a part of the difference between farm prices and parity prices. Assuming that the Federal Government is paying a part of this subsidy, what logical reason can be advanced for compelling the taxpayers of the country to subsidize the consumers of bread? Why should either the farmer or the taxpayers of this country be compelled to subsidize consumers in a time of full employment and high wages? It doesn't make sense.

While this move is being initiated by the O. P. A., it should not be forgotten that if ceilings are imposed the Secretary of Agriculture must be held equally responsible because under the Price Control Act no ceilings can be imposed on agricultural commodities without the prior approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. I do not think the Secretary of Agriculture believes that either the farmers or the Federal Government should subsidize consumers of bread in times like these. The record of the O. P. A. to date indicates that we cannot expect any sensible consideration of this question from that organization. The farmers of this country, however, have a right to demand that the Secretary of Agriculture use the authority which the law gives him to prevent the imposition of price ceilings at less than parity. There have been complaints in the past that the Secretary of Agriculture, instead of asserting his authority, had gone along with whatever was suggested by the Office of Price Administration. I have no way of knowing whether or not this is true. This attempt to impose wheat ceilings, however, will furnish the acid test. If the Secretary of Agriculture, a man in whom I believe the farmers of this country have confidence, expects to retain that confidence, he is going to have to decide whether he is on the side of the O. P. A. price fixers or the farmers of this country. He is going to have to approve or disapprove of the O. P. A. attempt to ignore and defy the laws of Congress. He is going to have to take a position on the question of whether in times of full employment and high wages either the farmer or the Federal Government shall subsidize the consumers of the cheapest food which we have. If the Secretary goes along with the O. P. A. on this clear-cut issue we might as well repeal the provision of the Price Control Act which requires that he give his approval of price ceilings imposed on agricultural commodities, and farmers might as well conclude that as far as this Administration is concerned even the Department of Agriculture has gone back on them.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. The gentleman has made a study of the cost of flour in a loaf of bread. I wonder if he has any figures on how much it would cost the average family annually if the price of bread were increased one-half cent per loaf.

Mr. HOPE. I may say to the gentleman from Kansas that the average annual per capita consumption of bread is 75 pounds. Thus an increase of one-half cent a loaf would mean 37½ cents increase per year per capita, or less than $2 per year per family of five.

Mr. JENKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman a question about a matter not exactly in line with what he is talking about; but this morning I received a letter from a very prominent citizen of my district which cites the case of a farmer taking wheat to the mill and turning it over to the Government and receiving $1.20 a bushel for it, then buying back his wagon loaded with wheat from the miller at 90 cents a bushel and taking it home to feed. What kind of situation is that? And who is responsible for it?

Mr. HOPE. I do not think the farmer actually bought the same wheat that he took to the mill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But wheat that was just as good.

Mr. HOPE. Yes; perhaps just as good. Undoubtedly this farmer bought some of the wheat which the Commodity Credit Corporation is selling as feed for livestock. This is being sold at less than the market price in order to make it profitable to feed it to livestock. I think out in Kansas it averages about 85 cents a bushel, whereas the market price of wheat in Kansas is $1.20 or $1.21 a bushel.

Mr. JENKINS. I presume if this man got $1.20 for the wheat, that was the loan value. Am I right in supposing that this is the loan value?

Mr. HOPE. It might have been sold on the market, because the market value at present is about $1.20; or it might be even higher at the present time. That sounds a little high for loan value, although the rates vary in different parts of the country, and it may well be that high in the gentleman's district.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. PACE. In connection with the wheat situation to which the gentleman has referred, it might be well also to bring to the attention of the Congress the fact that the wage earner today is receiving his food at a considerably less percentage of his income than at any time in the history of the Nation. The figures issued by the Department the other day showed that food is now costing about one-half of the percentage of his income that it did in the past.

Mr. HOPE. That is true, and I appreciate the gentleman's bringing that fact to the attention of the House; it is something that ought to be brought out.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. ARENDS. I was interested in what the gentleman had to say concerning wheat and the putting of a ceiling on the price of wheat. As the gentleman knows a ceiling was placed on corn recently. I wonder if the gentleman would express any opinion on that or tell us what he thinks of that.

Mr. HOPE. As far as placing a ceiling on corn is concerned, it stands on the same basis of illegality as the placing of a ceiling price on wheat, because under the Price Control Act the O. P. A. is prohibited from placing a ceiling on the price of any farm commodity at less than parity.

Mr. ARENDS. And corn is a long way from parity.

Mr. HOPE. The price fixed is considerably less than parity; yes.

Mr. ROWE. The gentleman having been referred to as an expert in this particular field, I, as a beginner, would ask what his opinion is as to why the Government will buy a farmer's wheat at $1.20 and then sell it back to the same farmer at 90 cents, 85 cents, or whatever the price may be.

Mr. HOPE. I do not know that I have time, within the few minutes left, to go into a full discussion of it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman that what is being done, of course, is perfectly legal and pursuant to legislation passed by Congress authorizing the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell wheat for feeding purposes at less than the market price. The sales that are being made are made by the Commodity Credit Corporation for feeding purposes, are considerably below the market price, and considerably below the loan price.

Mr. ROWE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROWE. If, as has been stated here, the wheat is equal, the kind that is sold back as is bought, may I ask the question, what is the purpose of the differential between 85 cents and $1.35?

Mr. HOPE. I have no way of knowing the facts of this particular case except as stated by the gentleman from Ohio. It is evident that there were two different transactions. First the farmer disposed of his own wheat either by an outright sale to a private purchaser or by getting a loan from the Commodity Credit Corporation. Then he must have purchased from the local dealer acting as agent for the Commodity Credit Corporation some of the wheat which that organization is selling for feed.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. Does not the cost of penalty wheat come into the picture. Will the gentleman explain that a little bit?

Mr. HOPE. That cannot be fed to livestock. I have introduced a bill which I hope the Committee on Agriculture will very soon report favorably to permit the feeding of penalty wheat to livestock.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Would the gentleman mind clearing up for us, those who have read and those who have not read the Supreme Court decision, which I understand to be to the effect that any fellow who grew wheat contrary to the provisions of law must put up that penalty if he uses that wheat for any purpose. Is that the effect of the Supreme Court decision?

Mr. HOPE. Yes; that is true.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask another question on that point? This bill which the gentleman proposes to introduce would correct the law so that the user of wheat under those conditions would not be subject to the penalty?

Mr. HOPE. Yes. The bill which I have introduced provides that penalty wheat may be fed to livestock by the farmer who produces it without payment of the penalty.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman from Illinois raised the question awhile ago about the price of corn. Victory, the Government publication by the O. W. I., came out the other day with headlines to the effect that the price of corn had been set 100 percent in excess of parity price. That is not so, is it?

Mr. HOPE No; it is not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The price of corn was not so set?

Mr. HOPE. No; the gentleman called the attention of the House to that the other day, and very properly so. I appreciate the fact he did so, because it was certainly a very misleading and untruthful statement on the part of the O. W. I.

Mr. ARENDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARENDS. I was interested in noticing that the Secretary of Agriculture now contemplates getting $100,000,000 in addition to appropriations from the Congress in order to do some intensive growing on the farms. Incorporated in one of these groups of commodities is the soy bean. Assuming we are getting payments for not growing something, and you increase the acreage of soy beans by 10 acres, for which it is proposed to give the farmer an additional amount, are you going to get a check both for increased production and also for not producing?

Mr. HOPE. I assume that would be possible if you used the same acreage.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KERR. Can the gentleman tell us how much the price of a loaf of bread has risen in the last 30, 60, or 90 days?

Mr. HOPE. It has not risen one fraction of a cent. The price today is the same as it was a year ago, and, as far as I understand, it is substantially the same as it was 2 years ago.

Mr. KERR. If that is true, how can there be any justification for putting a ceiling on wheat prices?

Mr. HOPE. I cannot see any justification for it, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. PACE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. In connection with the sale of wheat for feeding, the gentleman would probably want to mention that it is limited to 125,000,000 bushels and that that supply is rapidly diminishing now?

Mr. HOPE. Yes. I appreciate the gentleman bringing that to my attention. The legislation which we passed last year provided for the sale of wheat and limited the amount to 125,000,000 bushels.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GILLIE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas just one question. When I was home last fall I received information to the effect that wheat was being imported into this country from Canada and that it was being sold for feeding purposes at 83 cents a bushel.

I should like the gentleman to elaborate on that a little and tell us why that was done.

Mr. HOPE. I do not have any information on that point. If it is being imported, I do not know of it. I am unable to say whether or not it is. Of course, I cannot see much reason for importing wheat into this country for any purpose as long as we have on hand today a supply sufficient to last us for 2 years at present rates of consumption if we do not grow another bushel.

Mr. GILLIE. The information I got was that they went to a farmer to sell him some wheat, to take some of the wheat off their hands. He said, "I have no room, but I will tell you what I will do. I will take 100 bushels of this wheat to the mill and sell it and take 100 bushels of your wheat and put it into my bin." He sold his wheat at $1.36 a bushel and bought this wheat at 83 cents a bushel. This was imported wheat, A–No. 1 wheat.

Mr. HOPE. I am sorry I have no information on the subject. I am unable to enlighten the gentleman on it.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The main point the gentleman from Kansas is trying to make is that the law is not being followed. Is that right?

Mr. HOPE. That is the first point; yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The second point is that the gentleman cannot see any rhyme or reason in keeping one product, regardless of what it is, below parity and then fixing prices from 125 to 130 percent above parity for other farm products?

Mr. HOPE. I am not complaining about that. I am simply complaining of the fact that through this policy we are subsidizing the consumer of bread at the expense of the farmer, who is getting less than a fair price for his wheat.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The gentleman would be satisfied if they would follow the law?

Mr. HOPE. Certainly.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I think every fair-minded man will agree with the gentleman.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman indicated that the people were being subsidized in their purchase of bread. The only thing that is happening as a result of a recent price increase in flour is that a lot of small bakeries throughout the country are being put out of business, because they cannot manufacture and sell bread at the present price of flour. The gentleman no doubt has received complaints about that. The O. P. A. refuses to increase the price of bread, so they are putting these little fellows out of business all over the country.

Mr. HOPE. I have had complaints along the same line, I may say to the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, back of the ridiculous situation where the farmer takes 1 bushel of wheat to the market and gets $1.29 for it and buys another bushel of wheat from the same miller for 82 or 85 cents, is the position taken by the administration some years ago when it sought to bring every farmer under its control and tell the farmers how to operate their farms.

You will recall that at that time, I think it was back in 1935, all farmers who wanted to grow wheat and comply with the A. A. A. program had to sign a contract. Under the terms of that contract the farmer was told how many acres he could plant and how many bushels of wheat he could grow, the purpose being to establish what they called an ever-normal granary. Then if you grew more wheat than they told you to, they fined you some sort of a penalty which was one-half of the loan value of the wheat. They thought they were going to keep the supply constant all the time, at a certain level, and they thought they were going to have absolute control of the amount of wheat produced. Unfortunately for the successful working of their plan they were not able to control the laws of nature or the law of supply and demand, so we found ourselves with an enormous quantity of wheat on hand and they did not know what to do with it. They wanted to keep the price for the farmer up to a certain level but they wanted to get rid of this surplus wheat, so they provided that the farmer should get a certain price for his wheat but that the Government should charge another price for the wheat sold by it to the farmer to feed stock. Am I right, may I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY], the expert on butter, milk, cheese, all dairy products, the fattening of cattle, and all farm problems?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. That is right.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If any of you gentlemen ever want to know anything about matters affecting dairy farming, ask him.

That is the way this now apparent absurdity came about.

As I understand the gentleman from Kansas, he is complaining now that the O. P. A. is violating the law, disregarding the law as enacted by Congress. Yesterday the farmer from Brooklyn [Mr. O'TOOLE], who has three small children who are not, I judge from his remarks, able to get, up there in Brooklyn, without excessive cost the meat they should have. I sympathize with him because he and his people are not able to get meat. He was complaining yesterday about the same organization with which the gentleman from Kansas found fault; so it may be assumed the trouble extends at least from Brooklyn to Kansas. The gentleman from Kansas made a very, very clear statement to the effect that the O. P. A. is violating the law. Am I correct? Is that what the gentleman said?

Mr. HOPE. Yes; I say the O. P. A. is violating the law we passed here last October when we said that they should not fix the price of any agricultural commodity at less than parity or less than the market price between January 1 and September 15, whichever was the higher. In the case of wheat the parity price was higher than the market price during that period.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That statement that the law is being violated is not new, except in this particular case, to the older Members of Congress. It must be rather shocking to the new Members, some 69 of you, to discover that the departments down here in Washington are violating the law.

They are violating the law, and yet this Congress sits here and does nothing about it. When you charge a department with violating a Federal statute, you should have in mind the fact that the administration sets a bad example, that recently the President of the United States ordered Montgomery Ward & Co. to employ only those people who maintained membership in a certain union. Is there any authority for the President of the United States to tell an employer not in war production that he shall compel his employees to join a union? You know there is not.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. RAMEY. If they are violating the law, is there not an Attorney General? Congress is not the prosecuting attorney of this Government. If a department is violating a law, why not call the attention of the Attorney General of the United States to it?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thank the gentleman, but after he has been here a few weeks or months, he will learn that we have called violations of law to the attention of the Attorney General time and time again. The Attorney General knew of the sit-down strikes in 1937; he knew that men and women were driven from their jobs; he knew there was civil war. He let it ride. The Dies committee has called instances to the attention of the Attorney General where there are in the service of the Government Communists who are violating the law, and the Attorney General does not act. The only procedure that can be taken is impeachment by this Congress, or the enactment of laws stopping these things and then prosecution, and if the officers who are charged with the prosecution will not prosecute, then we should impeach those men.

However, going back to the Montgomery Ward matter, there are two statutes on the books already that prohibit the thing that the President did. The Railway Act, for example, is one. The railway employees wanted a closed shop, but they are not getting it. The Board had denied their plea. The law which governs their case does not apply to Montgomery Ward. But we have the so-called Wagner Act, the labor law administered by the National Labor Relations Board, and that law expressly provides that it is an unfair labor practice for any employer to even suggest that his employees join a particular union, and time and time again the Board has held, and the courts have held—the circuit courts of appeals and the Supreme Court of the United States have held that employers who did that thing, who suggested that their employees join or remain members of a certain union, were guilty of an unfair labor practice, and they have punished them, inflicted penalties on them. Yet here you have the President of the United States backing up his board and telling Montgomery Ward & Co. that they must do something which is a violation of law. Read the law. Read the order of the President. Judge for yourself.

There is no hope for the people of this country if we are to be judged in this Congress by what has happened in the past, by what has gone before. The older Members know all of these things. They have been pointed out time and time again from the floor and the Seventy-seventh Congress did not act. I appeal to you 69 new Members who have come here with a mandate from the people to reestablish in this country constitutional government. I appeal to you, I beg of you, I ask you in the name of God, if you love your country, insist that some action be taken. Members talked yesterday, and every day since you have been here on this floor, and have pointed out the things the bureaucrats are doing, that the administrative departments are doing, which are contrary to law, things which are a denial of constitutional government. There has been talk—words—but no action. What are you going to do? Sit here and take it? I know you have been told to sit tight and keep your mouth shut. I know it is early in the session, but do not let it go along too long. Get down here in the well of the House and call on the older Members to do something. I do not care anything about this advice to new Members to keep still. You come from the people. They sent you here because they wanted you here. You represent them. You are not representing the old Democrats, or the New Deal or the old Republican organization. When you are up for reelection in 1944 the old Members of Congress will not be voting for or against you. The home folks will weigh you in the balance and they will determine your fate. The people sent you here to represent them and I ask you to do it, and not to let it go on too long. Let us in the early weeks of this session force out and pass the needed legislation—force the administration to do its duty or kick those who will not out of office.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY], after other special orders, may address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROWAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.)

the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 28, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

There will be a meeting of the committee at 10:30 a. m. on Thursday, January 28, 1943, for consideration of House Resolution 1294.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 158. A bill for the relief of Emiliano Lopez and Eliza R. Lopez; with amendment (Rept. No. 21). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 170. A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of O. T. Travis; without amendment (Rept. No. 22). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 203. A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of Mike L Blank; without amendment (Rept. No. 23). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 204. A bill for the relief of the Growers Fertilizer Co., a Florida corporation; without amendment (Rept. No. 24). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 205. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of all persons who have claims for damages or losses allegedly resulting from the construction, further development, and improvement of the Intracoastal Waterway, Miami to Jacksonville, Fla., and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 25). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 227. A bill for the relief of the Tours Apartment Hotel; without amendment (Rept. No. 26). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 241. A bill for the relief of Blanche E. Broad; without amendment (Rept. No. 27). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 249. A bill for the relief of Gertrude Ricketts; without amendment (Rept. No. 28). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 250. A bill for the relief of Charles H. Daugherty, Sr.; without amendment (Rept. No. 29.) Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 251. A bill for the relief of Franklin E. Ludwig, Mary Taylor, and Frank A. Taylor; without amendment (Rept. No. 30). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 279. A bill for the relief of George Kennedy; with amendment (Rept. No. 31). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 402. A bill for the relief of Frank T. Been; without amendment (Rept. No. 32). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 478. A bill for the relief of Edith M. Powell; with amendment (Rept. No. 33). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 517. A bill for the relief of Irene Dial; with amendment (Rept. No. 34). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 533. A bill for the relief of John P. von Rosenberg; without amendment (Rept. No. 35). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 546. A bill for the relief of H. J. Blexrud estate; with amendments (Rept. No. 36). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House

Mr. PITTENGER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 605. A bill for the relief of Shumate Investment Co.; with amendment (Rept. No. 37). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE. Committee on Claims. H. R. 769. A bill for the relief of John Cardillo and Phillip Cardillo, with amendment (Rept. No. 38). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE. Committee on Claims. H. R. 845. A bill granting jurisdiction to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to reopen and readjudicate the case of Robert L. Demuth; without amendment (Rept. No. 39). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE. Committee on Claims. H. R. 940. A bill for the relief of Howard E. Dickison; without amendment (Rept. No. 40). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE. Committee on Claims. H. R. 946. A bill for the relief of Myrtle C. Radabaugh; without amendment (Rept. No. 41). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE. Committee on Claims. H. R. 976. A bill for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Sebastian Eger; without amendment (Rept. No. 42). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McGEHEE. Committee on Claims. H. R. 1047. A bill for the relief of the State of Oregon, department of forestry of the State of Oregon, and certain organized protection agencies in the State of Oregon for protection of unappropriated public-forest lands intermingled with Oregon and California lands from July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939; without amendment (Rept. No. 43). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in whose fear is the beginning of wisdom and from whom proceeds all holy desires, all good counsels and all just works, our greatness is that we can lose ourselves in Thee and become the healing channels for what Thou dost desire and will for our common humanity. Recognition of our oneness in Thee makes vivid our realization of the oneness of humanity across all separating barriers of race or birth. May our human loyalties be as wide as Thy divine fatherhood. Make us wise enough to give ourselves to the greatest. Make us good enough to surrender ourselves to the best.

In what we have to give to a hate-torn world may our own inner lives be part of the solution—not part of the problem—of our ailing social order. In honest moods may our hearts not utter the fatal judgment upon ourselves: They have made me a keeper of the vineyards and my own vineyard have I not kept. Save us from an easy belief in statutory substitutes for character. Give us this day light to guide us, courage to support us, love to unite us. We ask it in the Name that is above every name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 25, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

ELECTION OF SERGEANT AT ARMS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, by direction of the conference of the majority, I send to the desk a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 87), as follows:

Resolved, That Wall Doxey, of Mississippi, be, and he is hereby, elected Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is understood that Mr. Doxey will take the oath of office and begin his term on next Monday.

PERSONAL STATEMENT

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to insert in the RECORD an editorial from the Courier-Journal, of Louisville, Ky., published January 21, 1943, under the title "The Poll Tax Bloc Is on the March."

I desire to read a few lines from the editorial:

In the Senate the poll taxers won a victory about which more regret may be expressed. They succeeded in retiring the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, Chesley W. Jurney, who has served Congress 46 years, the last 10 of them in the post from which he is now ousted. Mr. Jurney is a victim of the venom of Senator MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, because one of the Sergeant at Arms' deputies carried out the order of Majority Leader BARKLEY for the arrest of the Tennessean during the late poll-tax filibuster.

Omitting a portion of the editorial, I continue the reading:

Simultaneously in the Senate their colleagues were engineering a political deal whereby Mr. MCKELLAR'S grudge was satisfied and a job found for a southern "lame duck," former Senator Wall Doxey, of Mississippi, who now becomes Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. President, I wish to read a letter which I have written a colleague in the newspaper business of the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], at whom I happen to be looking at the moment. On yesterday I wrote this letter:

JANUARY 27, 1943.

LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL,
Louisville, Ky.

DEAR SIRS: Someone has sent me a copy of your editorial entitled "The Poll Tax Bloc Is on the March." In part, you say:

"Mr. Jurney is a victim of the venom of Senator MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, because one of the Sergeant at Arms' deputies carried out the order of Majority Leader BARKLEY for the arrest of the Tennessean during the late poll-tax filibuster.

* * * * *

"Simultaneously in the Senate their colleagues were engineering a political deal whereby Mr. MCKELLAR'S grudge was satisfied and a job found for a southern 'lame duck,' former Senator Wall Doxey, of Mississippi, who now becomes Sergeant at Arms."

My letter to the Courier-Journal continues:

Your statements are willful, deliberate, and vicious falsehoods. Another newspaper published a similar statement, and I corrected it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a copy of which I am sending you. I shall denounce your statements in the Senate as false.

Why do you newspapermen not find out the truth about the cause of Jurney's dismissal before you publish such falsehoods against Members of the Senate? There is not a man, woman, or child at the Capitol—

Of course, I refer to the Capitol Building here on the Hill—

who cannot give you the reasons for his dismissal. There were a number of reasons, and any newspaperman desiring fact and not falsehood could obtain information as to these reasons simply by asking. An honest press is one of the finest of American institutions, and it would, indeed, be refreshing to have facts reported correctly once in a while.

Yours truly,

KENNETH MCKELLAR.

I regret that the chairman of the committee who had charge of the Jurney matter is not present at the moment. I shall ask him to make a statement verifying what I have written the Courier-Journal and have just expressed to the Senate.

I have no grudge of any kind against Jurney. As I said the other day in the Senate, in executing the writs of arrest he was carrying out his duty; that was one time he was certainly carrying out his duty, and no one could entertain any grudge on that account. I had nothing but kindly feelings toward Jurney until I found the facts which have recently developed about him. But somebody is engineering an effort to defame me because I happened to recommend the nomination of Mr. Wall Doxey, a neighbor and friend of mine, who lives about 40 miles from my home, for the place of Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. Jurney was not even a candidate for Sergeant at Arms before the matter closed; he was not proposed by anybody at the last, and could not be proposed by any Member of the Senate as I looked at it.

The idea of trying to make it appear that he was defeated because of any grudge that I had against him is willfully and insolently false and untrue, and if any man will make such a suggestion to me face to face I will tell him exactly where to "head off."

I now ask that the entire editorial from Courier-Journal be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal of January 21, 1943]

THE POLL-TAX BLOC IS ON THE MARCH

There can be no cause for satisfaction in seeing the kind of people triumph who have triumphed in the House Democratic caucus and prevented the assignment of Representative VITO MARCANTONIO, of New York, to the Judiciary Committee. The victors were the old southern poll-tax bloc, led in this instance by two of its most small-minded members, the Texans, SUMNERS and DIES. But there could have been no special satisfaction either in seeing the New Yorker win. He has lately assumed sponsorship of anti-poll-tax legislation and wanted the place on the Judiciary Committee for that reason. As the Courier-Journal has said before, Mr. MARCANTONIO's sponsorship of that legislation can do it no good.

He has been revealed as a doggedly consistent follower of the Communist Party line. He voted against lend-lease and against selective service. He was, he said, against any bill which would "catapult the American people * * * into a war between two gangs of imperialistic bandits." That was the Communist Party line at the time, and on both the political and labor fronts. There was a definite attempt to impede our preparedness both in policy and in production.

After the German invasion of Russia, Mr. MARCANTONIO about-faced with the others. It turned out, of course, that these efforts and a vote like Mr. MARCANTONIO's against selective service and lend-lease had been not only against the interests of this country but against the interests of Russia, too. That is an ironic instance of the folly of an American taking his politics from a foreign capital. And it is simply impossible to have confidence in such Americans.

This is said in full awareness of and deep gratitude for the incomparable courage and invincible devotion which have just wrought the miracle of Leningrad. None of the United Nations has yet contributed as much as Russia to the cause in the way of killing Germans, and we believe that she, in cooperation with the democracies, can and will contribute indispensably to the stability of the peace. That cooperation will be hindered rather than helped by the Marcantonios, and we doubt if realistic Joe Stalin shed any tears over the New York Congressman's reverse.

In the Senate the poll taxers won a victory about which more regret may be expressed. They succeeded in retiring as Sergeant at Arms of the Senate Chesley W. Jurney, who has served Congress 46 years, the last 10 of them in the post from which he is now ousted. Mr. Jurney is a victim of the venom of Senator MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, because one of the Sergeant at Arms' deputies carried out the order of Majority Leader BARKLEY for the arrest of the Tennessean during the late poll-tax filibuster. Over in the House the poll taxers piously protested that assignment of Mr. MARCANTONIO to the Judiciary Committee would only carry out a "political deal" made in New York, and that this was no time for political deals. Simultaneously in the Senate their colleagues were engineering a political deal whereby Mr. MCKELLAR's grudge was satisfied and a job found for a southern "lame duck," former Senator Wall Doxey, of Mississippi, who now becomes Sergeant at Arms.

The MARCANTONIO and Jurney incidents are worth mentioning, not for their importance in themselves but for the demonstration they gave of the cohesiveness of the southern reactionaries. This cohesiveness, plus the power the poll taxers can wield when they combine, as they can whenever they want to, with their northern Bourbon friends is going to make for plenty of trouble in the Seventy-eighth Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have not seen the editorial from the Courier-Journal which has been quoted by the Senator from Tennessee, but I think that in all fairness, without indulging in the revelation of any confidential information, I should say that soon after the defeat of Senator Doxey in the primary in Mississippi, and some time before the poll-tax bill was taken up in the Senate, friends of his here began to urge his election as Sergeant at Arms.

When the majority conference first met, Mr. Jurney was presented as a candidate, and Mr. Doxey was presented as a candidate. Some discussion ensued, following which a motion was made that I, as chairman of the conference, appoint a committee of five to bring in a nomination for Sergeant at Arms. I appointed the committee, and it met and went into the question of a choice for Sergeant at Arms. During the sessions of the committee Mr. Jurney voluntarily retired from the race for reelection as Sergeant at Arms. The committee reported that fact, and made no nomination and no recommendation.

When the committee made its report there was before the conference for consideration no candidate for Sergeant at Arms. Mr. Doxey's name was again presented, no other name was presented, and he was recommended to the Senate by the conference for the position.

In fairness to Mr. Jurney, and to the Senator from Tennessee as well, and to all others, I think it is not inappropriate to say that in all probability someone else would have been elected Sergeant at Arms if Mr. Doxey had not been. Mr. Jurney had retired from consideration. I do not know what motives actuated anyone in any vote he cast, but it is true that Mr. Doxey's name was seriously under consideration weeks before the poll-tax bill came before the Senate, and he was being suggested and considered immediately after his defeat in the primary in Mississippi.

I make this statement in fairness to everyone concerned, and I hope there will be no further agitation of the matter.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator can certainly say that no grudge or suggestion of a grudge on my part had anything in the world to do with the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was no evidence of such a thing in the conference, so far as I know, and I do not now recall whether the Senator from Tennessee was one of those who, back in September, or whenever it was that the primary was held in Mississippi, suggested the propriety of electing Mr. Doxey as Sergeant at Arms.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A telegram in the nature of a memorial from officers and members of the medical and chirurgical faculty (the State medical society), Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 345) to amend section 40 of the United States Employees' Compensation Act, as amended; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Quinter, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of liquor in the vicinity of military camps and naval establishments; ordered to lie on the table.

USE OF ELECTRIC POWER—RESOLUTION OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, LEGISLATURE OF TENNESSEE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I present and ask to have appropriately referred and printed, under the rule, a resolution of the House of Representatives of Tennessee concerning the use of electric power.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the southeastern section of the United States has in the recent past suffered a severe shortage of electric power; and

Whereas the power demand in the State of Tennessee has increased over seven times during the past 10 years; and

Whereas the shortage of such power at this time in this section would seriously, if not disastrously, handicap the Nation in its production of the necessary sinews of modern war; and

Whereas such shortages, having occurred in the past, may well under the pressure of ever-mounting demands reoccur; and

Whereas this section and, more particularly, the lands and cities drained and visited by the Cumberland River in its course through Tennessee and Kentucky have many times been laid waste by floods, and may well be again, causing great loss of topsoil and the destruction of valuable properties, as such, at this critical time, the Nation could less than ever afford to endure; and

Whereas the completion of the dams now under construction by the Government in the Cumberland Valley area would go far toward providing against occurrence of the aforestated dangers, and would entirely prevent reoccurrence of floods in this area, as well as supply ample electric power for the rapidly increasing needs of the vastly enlarged industry and war-plant consumption in this territory, and, furthermore, increase the facilities of freight transportation on this river upon which this section largely depends for supply of gasoline: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Tennessee, That War Production Board Chairman Donald M. Nelson is hereby memorialized by this body to complete the above-mentioned dams at the earliest possible date in order that another power shortage may be averted, thereby hastening the day when peace and liberty will again be restored to the world; be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house transmit immediately by wire a copy of this resolution to War Production Board Chairman Donald M. Nelson, and that copies be mailed to all of the Senators and Congressmen from the States of Kentucky and Tennessee.

RESOLUTION OF NATIONAL RURAL ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I also present and ask to have appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, representing 1,000,000 farmers in convention assembled at St. Louis, Mo., on the 20th of January 1943, urging that action be taken immediately to clean up the Power Branch of the War Production Board. I call the attention of Senators to the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, representing 1,000,000 farmers, in convention assembled in St. Louis, Mo., on the 20th day of January 1943, That action be taken immediately to clean up the Power Branch of the War Production Board.

In July 1942 the War Production Board after due consideration limited the extension of construction of new projects by rural electric cooperatives. The Power Branch of the War Production Board misinterpreted this order to prohibit extensions to serve farm families from existing distribution lines. Rural electric cooperatives during the past 6 months have attempted to show the Power Branch that this order had no bearing whatsoever on extensions from existing lines. The Power Branch consistently pursued a policy of, in effect, prohibiting any connections of additional farmers engaged in the production of food for war.

In the early part of this month, January 1943, representatives of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association discussed with Chairman Donald Nelson this misinterpretation by the Power Branch of the War Production Board order. Chairman Nelson agreed that the Power Branch had misinterpreted the order and that the materials designed for rural extensions, and immediately available, should be put to productive use. In the conference with Chairman Nelson it was again urgently insisted that these materials now frozen in the hands of the cooperatives should be put to use for increased food production or should be used for the making of ammunition and other implements of war. Chairman Nelson emphatically stated that increasing food production was imperative for the conduct of the war and these materials, without limitation, should be used for his purpose.

A new directive was issued to use these materials for the production of food for war. The Power Branch again distorted the clear intent of this program. They have again misinterpreted the order, without even attempting to confer with the Rural Electric Cooperatives engaged in the production of food. Their interpretation benefits the Power Trust.

We are today confronted, through the press, with the astounding announcement that Curtis Ernest Calder, of Bronxville, N. Y., who lists his office address as No. 2 Rector Street, which is the office of the Electric Bond & Share Co., as Director General of Operations in the War Production Board, is now to determine the destiny of our country in the application of power to the production of food and to the relief of the shortage of manpower. Mr. Caider is a former secretary, vice president, and president of the Texas Power & Light Co., a subsidiary of Electric Bond & Share. He is now president of the American & Foreign Power Co., Inc., and the Southwestern Sewer Co., and he is a director in one of Mussolini's power companies—the Italian Super Power, Inc.

We respectfully urge, in the interest of the war program, that intelligent, patriotic use be made of the materials now available and the country place its destiny in the hands and hearts and minds of individuals who have only one allegiance—the United States of America.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

S. 408. A bill to amend the act approved May 27, 1937 (ch. 269, 50 Stat. 208), by providing substitute and additional authority for the prevention of speculation in lands of the Columbia Basin project, and substitute and additional authority related to the settlement and development of the project, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 22).

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

S. 176. A bill for the relief of Austin L. Tierney; without amendment (Rept. No. 23);

S. 301. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to grant easements for rights-of-way over, across, in, and upon naval reservations; with an amendment (Rept. No. 25);

S. 303. A bill to extend the jurisdiction of naval courts martial in time of war or national emergency to certain persons outside the continental limits of the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 26);

S. 304. A bill for the relief of Capt. Richard Rothwell, United States Marine Corps; without amendment (Rept. No. 27);

S. 305. A bill for the relief of Master Gunnery Sgt. Eugene M. Martin, United States Marine Corps; without amendment (Rept. No. 28);

S. 306. A bill to provide for the reimbursement of certain Navy personnel for personal property lost as a result of the disaster at east base, Antarctica, on March 21, 1941; without amendment (Rept. No. 29); and

S. 393. A bill for the relief of William Kovatis; without amendment (Rept. No. 30).

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri, from the Committee on Commerce:

S. Res. 60. Resolution continuing the authority for an investigation of airplane crashes; without amendment, and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

By Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

S. Res. 61. Resolution continuing the authority for an investigation with respect to fuel in certain areas west of the Mississippi River; without amendment, and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

By Mr. CLARK of Idaho, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

S. Res. 81. Resolution continuing the authority for an investigation of the denial to certain musicians of rights in connection with the mechanical reproduction of music; without amendment, and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

PRODUCTION OF GOLD AND SILVER—CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I report favorably, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Senate Resolution 20, with an additional amendment, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the amendments.

The amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency was, on page 2, line 3, to strike out "and succeeding Congresses" and to insert "Congress", and the amendment of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was, on page 1, line 2, after the word "January", to strike out "17" and insert "16", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 187, agreed to August 16, 1935, as amended by motion on January 16, 1939, increasing the membership of the committee to nine Senators instead of five, and as further amended by Senate Resolution 261, agreed to June 29, 1942, authorizing a special committee of nine Senators, to confer with the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the administration, and the economic and commercial effect in the United States and abroad, of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 1178), and to make a full and complete investigation with respect to the production, or the lack of production, of gold and silver in the United States and its Territories, and so forth, hereby is continued in full force and effect during the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CONDITIONS IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. LUCAS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with an additional amendment, Senate Resolution 26, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the amendments will be stated.

The amendments of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs were, on page 1, line 6, after the name "Puerto Rico", to strike out "resulting from the interruption of the normal flow of trade between Puerto Rico and the United States which has been brought about by the war", and on page 2, line 6, after the word "employ", to insert "clerical and other assistance."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question about the second amendment. That is the usual form, is it not?

Mr. LUCAS. I cannot say to the Senator that it is the usual form.

Mr. McNARY. It is customary, is it not? In making inquiries for information from departments, is it necessary to have assistance?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico to reply to the inquiry.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I should like to inform the Senator from Oregon that that amendment was inserted at the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], who felt it would clarify the situation, and that it would be better for the Senate to be under no obligations to the departments.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments, which have been stated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will now be stated.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 15, to strike out "$25,000" and to insert "$15,000"

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a subcommittee of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to be composed of five members of such committee appointed by the chairman thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to economic and social conditions in Puerto Rico. The subcommittee shall report to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations, at the earliest practicable date.

For the purposes of this resolution the subcommittee, or any member thereof duly authorized by the chairman of the subcommittee, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ clerical and other assistance and to call upon the executive departments for such experts and such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it or he deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the subcommittee, which shall not exceed $15,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the subcommittee.

FILMING OF MOTION PICTURES ON PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. LUCAS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with additional amendments, Senate Resolution 39, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none, and the amendments will be stated.

The amendment of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys was, at the beginning of line 7, to strike out "and succeeding Congresses" and insert "Congress"; and the amendments of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate were, in line 5, to strike out "and the filming of motion pictures thereon", and in line 8 to strike out "$10,000" and to insert "$5,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 241, Seventy-sixth Congress, agreed to May 24, 1940, and Senate Resolution 147, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to September 8, 1941 (relating to the investigation of the use of public lands), is hereby continued and may be exercised during the Seventy-eighth Congress; and the limit of expenditures under such resolutions is hereby increased by $5,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "Resolution continuing the authority for an investigation of the use of public lands and increasing the limit of expenditures."

INSPECTIONS OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

Mr. LUCAS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, with an amendment, Senate Resolution 65, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported by Mr. REYNOLDS from the Committee on Military Affairs on the 18th instant.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "one", to strike out "expert" and insert "investigator", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof duly appointed by the chairman of the committee, accompanied by one investigator, hereby is authorized to visit, for the purpose of inspection, during the present session of Congress, any part of the Military Establishment in the Western Hemisphere, the expenses incurred in pursuance thereof, not to exceed $3,000, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CONTINUATION OF INVESTIGATION OF ADMINISTRATION AND OPERATION OF CIVIL-SERVICE LAWS AND CLASSIFICATION ACT

Mr. LUCAS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 68, submitted by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] on the 18th instant, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 68) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 198, Seventy-fifth Congress, agreed to on April 1, 1938 (providing for an investigation of the administration and operation of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended), is hereby continued until the end of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

DEVELOPMENT OF MINERAL RESOURCES, INCLUDING OIL AND GAS, OF THE PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. LUCAS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably, without additional amendment, Senate Resolution 73, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 73), which had been submitted by Mr. O'MAHONEY on the 18th instant, and subsequently reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment.

The amendment of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys was, on page 1, line 8, after "Seventy-eighth", to strike out "and succeeding Congresses," and insert "Congress", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the authority conferred by Senate Resolution 53, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to May 1, 1941, and Senate Resolution 310, Seventy-seventh Congress, agreed to November 27, 1942 (relating to the investigation with respect to the development of the mineral resources, including oil and gas, of the public lands of the United States), is hereby continued during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS—NOMINATION OF EDWARD J. FLYNN TO BE MINISTER TO AUSTRALIA

As in executive session,

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, we shall probably not have an executive session today, and I ask, out of order, to make a favorable report from the Committee on Foreign Relations on the nomination of Mr. Edward J. Flynn, of New York, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Australia, and I submit a report (Ex. Rept. No. 1) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE

As in executive session,

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri, from the Committee on Commerce:

Josh Lee, of Oklahoma, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board in the Department of Commerce for the remainder of the term expiring December 31, 1943, vice George P. Baker.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BONE:

S. 579. A bill to authorize the construction of a military supply highway to Alaska; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. CAPPER:

S. 580. A bill recognizing "The American's Creed" as the national creed of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 581. A bill granting a pension to Alma Blanche Shipman;

S. 582. A bill granting an increase of pension to Martha Myers; and

S. 583. A bill granting an increase of pension to Tina Newlon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KILGORE:

S. 584. A bill relating to the district judge for the northern and southern districts of West Virginia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. LANGER introduced Senate bill 585, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr McKELLAR:

S. 586. A bill for the relief of William Andrew Johnson; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. WHITE:

S. 587. A bill granting a pension to Charles Knowlton; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. WAGNER:

S. 588. A bill to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to issue notes, bonds, and debentures in the sum of $5,000,000,000 in excess of existing authority; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 589. A bill with reference to certain loans made under the Agricultural Marketing Act of 1929 and to grant certain relief to Florida Citrus Exchange, the Growers Loan & Guaranty Co., and the Guaranty Operating Co.; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

S. 590. A bill providing for the improvement of the Intracoastal Waterway from Jacksonville to Key West, Fla.; to the Committee on Commerce.

S. 591. A bill for the relief of Ross Jung; to the Committee on Immigration.

(Mr. HAWKES introduced Senate Joint Resolution 27, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. CAPPER:

S. J. Res. 28. Joint resolution to provide for the proper observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of The American's Creed Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KILGORE:

S. J. Res. 29. Joint resolution relating to the use of existing establishments for defense production, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADJUSTMENT OF COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN POSTAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill in the nature of a substitute for one I introduced last Monday. It merely adds provision for supervisory employees, special clerks, clerks, and laborers in first- and second-class post offices, employees of the motor-vehicles and pneumatic-tube services, and carriers in the City Delivery Service and in the Village Delivery Service, employees of the Railway Mail Service, clerks at division headquarters of post-office inspectors, employees of the stamped envelope agency, and employees of the mail equipment shops; cleaners, janitors, telephone operators, elevator conductors, paid from appropriations of the First Assistant Postmaster General.

The bill (S. 585) to adjust the basis of compensation for overtime service of certain employees in the Postal Service, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

THOMAS ALVA EDISON DAY

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution which would request the President of the United States to proclaim February 11, 1943, as Edison Day in commemoration of the birthday of Thomas Alva Edison. The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating February 11, 1943, as Thomas Alva Edison Day and calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on said date and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies.

Mr. President, I may say that the people of New Jersey have a great sense of pride in the fact that Thomas A. Edison was for a great many years a citizen of our State. I believe the people throughout the entire Nation recognize the great contributions made by Thomas Edison during his life to the benefit, welfare, and comfort of humanity throughout the United States and indeed generally throughout much of the world.

I request that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received and referred as requested.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it does not make any difference to me to what committee the resolution goes, but is the Committee on the Judiciary the appropriate committee to which to refer the joint resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already announced the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to that being done. I merely want to have the precedents preserved. Joint resolutions of such nature formerly were referred to the Committee on the Library. I do not know when the rule was changed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Parliamentarian informs the Chair that measures dealing with the designation of special days are customarily referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. He also informs the Chair that bills dealing with monuments and memorials go to the Committee on the Library.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 27) requesting the President to proclaim February 11, 1943, as Edison Day, in commemoration of the birthday of Thomas Alva Edison, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RESOLUTION OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF PANAMA

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, some days ago, on the 6th of January of this year, the National Assembly of the Republic of Panama adopted a resolution in which it conveyed its sentiments toward the Government of the United States and set forth the solidarity of the two nations. On the 22d of January the Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, sent a copy of this resolution to the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the letter of transmittal and the resolution itself may be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter of transmittal and the resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

JANUARY 22, 1943.

The Honorable HENRY A. WALLACE,
President of the Senate.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: The Ambassador of the United States at Panama City, Panama, has forwarded to the Department of State copies of Resolution No. 5 adopted unanimously by the National Assembly of Panama on January 6, 1943, expressing solidarity and best wishes to the Seventy-eighth Congress of the United States on the occasion of the opening of the present session.

Accordingly, I have pleasure in transmitting to the Senate, in compliance with the request from Panama, a copy of the resolution in Spanish and in English translation. A similar communication has been addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

[Enclosure: Copy in Spanish and English translation of resolution of National Assembly of Panama.]

---

PANAMA, January 6, 1943.

ENCLOSURE NO. 3 TO DESPATCH NO. 3476, DATED JANUARY 8, 1943, FROM THE EMBASSY AT PANAMA

[Translation]

The National Assembly of Panama, considering:

First. That the Seventy-eighth Congress of the United States of America inaugurates its sessions today;

Second. That the legislative power of that great Nation to the north has rendered an incalculable service to the noble cause of the United Nations by the issuance of laws of transcendental importance which have mightily contributed to the strengthening of the defense of the freedom-loving nations which are resisting attacks of the totalitarian conquest; and Third. That beyond any doubt it will be incumbent upon the Seventy-eighth Congress of the United States to continue that admirable work and to issue new laws which will tend to strengthen even more the defense of the United Nations and to chart for them the course of definitive victory;

Resolves:

First. To send a message of solidarity and sympathy to the Seventy-eighth Congress of the United States and to express to it the fervent wishes of the Assembly and people of Panama for the success of the important work begun today.

Second. To designate a commisison from the Assembly to deliver personally, with a formal note, a true copy of this resolution to the most worthy Ambassador of the United States of America in Panama, His Excellency Edwin C. Wilson.

ARCADIO AGUILERA O,
The President.
G. SIERRA GUTIÉRREZ,
The Secretary.

This is a true copy:

G. SIERRA GUTIÉRREZ,
Secretary.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I should have consulted the minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]. I consulted the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who is a member of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it is not necessary that I be consulted. I heard the resolution read at the desk.

Mr. CONNALLY. The concurrent resolution expresses the thanks and appreciation of the Congress of the United States. I ask that the concurrent resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5), as follows:

Whereas there have always existed close ties of friendship between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama; and

Whereas these friendly relations, based on the mutual respect and admiration of two free and independent nations, happily grow stronger day by day; and

Whereas the Government and the people of the Republic of Panama have cooperated wholeheartedly with the United States of America in the present world conflict; and

Whereas on January 6, 1943, the National Assembly of Panama graciously adopted a resolution expressing solidarity and extending felicitations to the Congress of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States express its deep appreciation to the National Assembly of the Republic of Panama, and to the people which it represents, for this message of friendship and solidarity, which had as its inspiration the determination of achieving complete victory over our common enemies and restoring the principles of liberty and democracy throughout the world;

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution shall be transmitted to the President of the National Assembly of the Republic of Panama.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall interpose an objection. Of course, it is customary for measures of that character to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I can conceive of no opposition on the part of any members of that committee. However, I ask the Senator from Texas if there is any reason for immediate consideration of the measure?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, there is no immediate, urgent reason for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution except that prompt action would carry with it a more spontaneous response and convey a little more friendly feeling.

Mr. McNARY. I think those are worthy considerations. Personally, I have no objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I simply wish the RECORD to show that the able Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] consulted with Republican members of the Foreign Relations Committee, and his request with respect to immediate action by the Senate has the entire approval of the members of the minority of that committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator very much.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

ALL-OUT AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have read with interest the announcement of the Secretary of Agriculture in bringing before the public an incentive program suggested to increase all-out agricultural production on the farms. I have some very definite views on this subject, which I have discussed in many speeches, and which I embodied in a letter I wrote to the Secretary on January 26. I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the body of the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It has to do with my views on all-out, total agricultural production.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 26, 1943.

Mr. CLAUDE R. WICKARD,
Secretary of Agriculture,
Department of Agriculture,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This morning's press carried your announcement that the Agricultural Adjustment Agency is to do an about-face, a "reverse English" and adopt an incentive program to pay the farmer to produce rather than not to produce.

The abolishment of a contradictory policy that you have maintained in the first year of this war of an economy of scarcity is a step in the right direction. It should have been done before the commencement of the war.

One week after Pearl Harbor, I addressed a communication to you, requesting the suspension and removal of all agricultural production restrictions and penalties for the duration of the war. In that communication I suggested that you adopt an all-out program of agricultural production in order to win the war, rather than to continue a philosophy of an economy of scarcity.

The new program is a continuation of subsidizing the farmer as a bait for increased agricultural production. Why not terminate the Agricultural Adjustment Agency for the duration of the war and get a maximum agricultural production by paying the farmers a parity price or a legitimate profit on the farm? Why not take off all restrictions and limitations; give the farmers their "head" and encourage them to produce by guaranteeing parity prices where they grow the agricultural product? This is the only way to get the maximum production of foodstuffs for our Army and civilian population.

As this war progresses, it is becoming increasingly evident that the agricultural production policy which I called to your attention last December must now be adopted. In that connection, I call to your attention the statement made by Deputy Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Joseph T. McNarney, last Sunday night, in which he said: "Food is just as important as the production of ammunition. We should pray God for the rain to produce the maximum crops; we should see that everyone raises all the food that can be raised, and then we should save that food by rationing, that we might be the better prepared to sustain not only the Army at the front but the civilian population at home."

My files are replete with communications from Nebraska farmers criticizing the Agricultural Adjustment Agency policy of restriction and complaining against failure of the Agricultural Adjustment Agency, the Department of Agriculture, the War Production Board, and the Manpower Commission because these agencies do not correlate their activities to the end that agriculture can have all-out agricultural production and the machinery and labor to meet such demand.

Nebraska farmers, as well as those of other States in the agricultural sections, are unable to obtain new farming machinery. They cannot obtain repairs for that machinery, and the planting season will soon be upon us.

Our farmers complain against the enticing of farm labor to other fields of higher pay—especially war industry—and no effort has been made on the part of the administration, until too late, to stop or discourage such migration. The administration has failed to timely anticipate this need of agricultural manpower and only recently has there been any recognition of this acute problem by Selective Service.

Our farmers also complain that they are unable to obtain lumber with which to make repairs of farm buildings necessary to agricultural production. Our farmers are rationed in the use of gasoline so that they are kept off the highways and from delivering their products to market. They are rationed in the use of tractor oil to the point where they will be forced out of the fields unless the condition is alleviated.

With these things before you; namely, a demand on the one hand for all-out agricultural production, and, on the other, a continuation of a policy of restrictions and penalties, and added to that contradictory position, the failure of the administration to develop a policy whereby manpower, farming implements, repairs of farming implements, lumber, gasoline, and tractor oil have been available as priorities to the farmer, you can easily understand why the farmers are depressed, worried, impatient, and irritable. If our farmers are to produce, let's give them the necessary priorities of manpower, materials, and remove all restrictions and penalties as to an all-out production of agriculture, and induce that maximum production by providing parities at the farm.

The wisdom of adopting such a policy and taking such a position is common sense and is borne out by the many communications which I am receiving. It is also very definitely established by the report of the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program—Farm Machinery and Equipment (pt. 2 of Rept. No. 10), CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 252, January 21, 1943, which report was made to the Senate on January 21, 1943, and was very generally agreed to by Senators who that date evinced an interest in the said report.

I therefore recommend the immediate removal of any and all currently existing restrictions and penalties on agriculture; that our farmers be provided with necessary and needed farming implements, supplies, and manpower to effect all-out production; that priorities be granted industry in the manufacture of such equipment and supplies; that the farmer have parity prices at the farm; and that this matter be immediately brought to the attention of all bureaus, boards, commissions, or agencies which are at the present time establishing policies, especially acreages and farm prices, either directly or indirectly, that have to do with an all-out agricultural program in this country.

Yours truly,

KENNETH S. WHERRY.

FARM LOAN PROGRAM—LETTER FROM GEORGE F. PETERS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a letter dated January 19, 1943, from George F. Peters, of Harvey, N. Dak., secretary of the Harvey Farmers' Union Elevator Association.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HARVEY, N. DAK., January 19, 1943.

Senator WILLIAM LANGER,

DEAR MR. LANGER: At a meeting of our Harvey Farmers Union Elevator Association, comprising a membership of 600 farmers, I, as secretary of this association, was asked by this group of farmers to write to you, asking that you do all in your power to continue our Agricultural Adjustment Agency farm program and our loan program.

It has been brought to our attention that our eastern Congressmen are trying to scrap our farm and loan program.

We do not wish to see that happen, as we feel that the farmers are entitled to a guaranteed price for their products as well as labor and industry.

The farmers have shown their loyalty to our Government last year by producing a record crop of farm commodities and without question will again in 1943 repeat that precedent in spite of a shortage of manpower and machinery.

North Dakota, as one of the Northwestern States, has contributed enormously to the war effort in line of men, food, scrap iron, and War bonds, and commands consideration by Congress in upholding our farm and loan program.

Yours very truly,

GEORGE F. PETERS,
Secretary of the Harvey Farmers Union Elevator Association.

LOANS TO FARMERS FOR INCREASED FOOD PRODUCTION

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I wish to have printed in the RECORD a communication from John I. Taylor, president of the Oklahoma Farm Bureau, which deals with some vital problems of farmers.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.,
January 27, 1943.

Hon. E. H. MOORE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

It has been called to our attention that the Secretary of Agriculture has asked for an additional appropriation of $100,000,000 to be used as a loan to farmers for the purpose of increased food production. We further understand that county war boards have been authorized to employ the necessary personnel and proceed in the carrying out of this program. We are strictly opposed to the setting up of an additional loan agency of any kind. Obtaining needed credit is no problem for Oklahoma farmers. We are short on manpower and needed farm machinery. Nothing will increase the production of foods as rapidly as parity prices including production costs at the market places. We most sincerely urge you as our Senator to oppose to the last the setting up of any such additional loan agencies and urge that you continue the good fight for full parity prices for our farmers.

JOHN I. TAYLOR,
President, Oklahoma Farm Bureau.

FARM CONDITIONS IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from T. T. Varner, of Poteau, Okla., regarding conditions on the farms in Oklahoma.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POTEAU, OKLA., January 22, 1943.

Hon. E. W. MOORE,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have not had the pleasure of meeting you personally, but by way of introduction I am a member of the Republican State Central Committee and was a candidate for district judge in the sixteenth judicial district of Oklahoma composed of Haskell, Latimer, and Leflore Counties. However, you seemed to have been the only one on our ticket that won and I am proud that I had the honor of being on the ticket with a winner even though I lost. Am not writing you as a member of any political party but as a citizen and taxpayer of Oklahoma.

I am not a pessimist nor an alarmist but am very much disturbed at this time because of the way in which the affairs of government are being administered and the way in which the ordinary citizens are gradually losing their individual rights and liberties and being deprived of their property without due process of law under the guise of the war power of the President.

The executive branch of the Government seems to be gradually taking over and usurping the powers conferred upon Congress by our Constitution, and strange to say, Congress seems unwilling or afraid to go to battle with the President in order to retain its powers which have not heretofore been taken over or to regain those which have been taken over by usurpation or voluntarily surrendered by Congress.

The President and the bureaucrats do not seem to have given a thought to the ability to pay, of the persons who really support the Government by paying taxes and furnishing the necessary revenue with which to operate the Government and prosecute the war.

By the trial-and-error methods which have been employed by the New Deal converts of the administration the small business concerns and many of the larger ones have been and are now being forced out of business. Every time a business fails or is destroyed the owner of such business ceases to be a taxpayer and, therefore, the taxes which would have been paid but for such failure, are lost to the Government.

I am especially concerned about the food situation and the present condition of the American farmers because of the attitude of the administration toward agriculture and the effort which has been and now is being made to regiment and place the farmers in a strait jacket to such an extent as to weaken the morale and destroy the independence of the farmers and thereby impair the progress which has heretofore been made by the farmers.

The administration and its bureaucrats who are telling the farmers what is to be done and how it must be done seem to take as an admitted fact, that the majority of the farmers are not only ignorant, unpatriotic, but dishonest as well. This is evidenced by the fact that in every capital and county seat in the United States there are hordes of white-collared office executives and clerks, who have never worked a day on a farm, but who are assuming to tell the farmers what crops to plant and how to cultivate them, the kind of labor to be used and the price which should be paid, and of course the higher-ups fix the prices which the farmers shall receive for whatever crops they may have been so fortunate as to grow and harvest.

I am engaged in farming and raising pure bred Hereford cattle for breeding purposes and operate some 300 acres in connection with this business. I have never grown cotton, but do grow corn, wheat, and other small grains and grasses for feeding my livestock. I have never signed on the dotted line to take orders from the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and am therefore in bad standing with those in charge in this county. I have tried to do everything I could to follow the rules of the Department as to the best farming methods by way of soil conservation, etc., and I do believe I have done as much to improve my farm as any farmer in this part of the State. Last year I sold 42 head of registered cattle for breeding purposes which were raised on my farm, and the man in charge of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration who reports farming activities reported my farm as an idle farm. Recently I tried to procure phosphate for use on my land by joining with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in the purchase of a car, offering to pay the regular price and my share of the freight; but I was told that because I had not seen fit to sign the contract form used by the Government that I could not participate in this purchase and have phosphate shipped with the quantity purchased by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. The phosphates are controlled by priority rating and of course I will be unable to secure any because I have not identified myself with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration by signing the contract. My reason for not signing with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration when it located in our county was that the contract contained certain provisions which obligated me to do things which I did not believe that any self-respecting farmer should do, taking into consideration the fact that those in charge of the enforcement of the contracts were not always competent to say what should be and should not be done under certain circumstances, I have not seen the contract used at this time and do not know whether the same has been modified or not. I explained to those in charge that I was willing to cooperate in every way and would not accept any premium or payment for failing to grow or for growing any crops on my land nor did I accept any payment for any terraces which were built by me under Government instructions. I have built terraces but did so at my own expense and I have never accepted a single check from the Government for anything that I have done in keeping with its rules.

I believe I am familiar with the general opinion of the farmers, and that if a poll should be taken of all the farmers in the State that there would be very few that would voluntarily indorse the methods pursued by the Agricultural Adjustment Agency.

I do not believe there is a more patriotic class of persons than the American farmers; and if they were organized as are the industrial workers and miners, they would not be in the condition they now are, and the President and his bureaucrats would hesitate to undertake to do some things they are now doing and would not make some of the statements which they have made concerning the American farmers.

What the American farmers need are leaders and not drivers. Furthermore, unless something is done toward supplying the farmers with tools and machinery at once there is going to be the greatest shortage of food in the fall and winter of 1943 that has ever been experienced since the Pilgrim Fathers landed at Plymouth.

Last summer I was unable to buy, hire, or borrow a binder or a combine, and as a consequence I lost my entire crop of oats. Many others had the same experience. It will be much worse this year than last. I consider the need of tools and machinery for farmers of as much, if not more, importance than the need of ammunition for the soldiers.

The New Dealers shot the pigs, hogs, and cattle to make good times. They now seem to think crops will grow without being cultivated and that they may be harvested without labor or machinery of any kind.

Due to the drafting of farmers and to the high wages paid at the large industrial plants, hired labor on the farm cannot be had at the price the farmers are able to pay. With the shortage of labor, there is an added necessity for a plentiful supply of tools and machinery, and instead of decreasing the supply it should be increased. I feel sure that any farmer who is in good faith trying to assist in growing food with which to win the war will confirm my statements, and I do hope that Congress will take an active interest in assisting the farmers to procure tools and machinery without delay and in freeing them from the red-tape regulations and restrictions which now handicap their honest efforts to remain independent and useful citizens.

I think that now is the opportune time for Congress to assert its independence and powers, assume and discharge its duties as the agency of the people to make their laws, and to protect them from the attempt on the part of the executive branch of Government to make them on a parity with the people of Germany.

Pardon his lengthy epistle, but as a public official you no doubt are getting accustomed to being imposed upon by your constituents. Here's hoping that you do all you can to help a law-ridden people.

I am, with kindest regards,
Yours very respectfully,
T. T. VARNER.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I have another letter along the same line from Claude Smith, of Stroud, Okla., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STROUD, OKLA., January 24, 1943.

Senator ED H. MOORE,

DEAR SENATOR: I just stay mad all the time, the dab blame crazy outfit. Yesterday I went to Prague to get some cake (peanut) and they only had 5 sacks. They are shut down, the Government won't let them crush any more, they are going to ship the peanuts to Canada and make peanut butter out of them in Canada. They can't ship all of the peanuts to Canada. In the Prague Cotton Oil Mill they have 500 tons of peanuts on storage belonging to the Government.

What is going to happen is that grass will be here in April and the Government is going to piddle around and do nothing with the peanuts and soy beans until April, then it will be too late to do us any good and the Government will have a great pile of feed on their hands that they won't know what to do with, it will be just another one of their utter wastes that they like to make.

I have to drive 28 miles to the mill, my pick-up is a 1940 model, it is wore out. In 1941 I had made a trade for a new one but everything was froze and the dealer could not make delivery. My old pick-up is just about passed out and I need a new one real bad. In the surrounding towns there are 36 pick-ups froze, doing no one any good. I am trying to get a new one—to do this the county board passes on it, then it goes to Stillwater, then to Tulsa, then to Washington. I doubt very much if my requests get through all of these boards, and if it does the war will be over before I receive an answer to it.

Senator, what do you think a man ought to do, sell out and quit or keep trying to operate in spite of the bureaucrats?

Don't take time out to answer this letter, save all of your energy to fight the bureaucrats.

Respectfully yours,

CLAUDE SMITH.

POLICY OF THE NAVY WITH RESPECT TO DISCLOSING INFORMATION ABOUT ITS WAR ACTIVITIES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, Vice Admiral Horne appeared before the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate this morning and gave the committee some very valuable and important information with reference to activities of the Navy since the commencement of war with Japan. In the course of his confidential statement to the committee he gave reasons why it was not possible or advisable to disclose to the public all the information from day to day that became available to the Navy Department. He stated, among other things, that the Navy has been accused of wanting to withhold information from the American people. "This charge," he stated, "is based on a misunderstanding, as it is not from the American people but from the Japanese that the Navy is seeking to withhold information. There are three reasons why it is important that our enemy should be prevented from learning facts about our naval forces and plans." Vice Admiral Horne set forth those reasons, and I think the Members of the Senate and the public should know the position of the Navy in this important matter. I ask that the statement given to the press at the meeting be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

The Navy has been accused of wanting to withhold information from the American people. This charge is based on a misunderstanding, as it is not from the American people, but from the Japanese, that the Navy is seeking to withhold information. There are three reasons why it is important that our enemies should be prevented from learning facts about our naval forces and plans.

In the first place, he wants to know where our ships are. If he can have exact knowledge of the whereabouts and movements of our vessels, it makes it easier for him to plan for naval action. Such information in the hands of the enemy can be effectively used against us.

In the second place, he wants to know the condition of our ships. This is particularly true when one of our ships has been damaged or put out of commission temporarily or for a long period. Precise knowledge of the extent and nature of the damage can be of great help to the enemy in shaping his plans for future actions. Vessels have been damaged in night action and all that the enemy knows is that he has scored hits, but if the vessels get away from the scene of action the enemy can not know the nature and the extent of the damage he has inflicted.

In the third place, the element of surprise is of great importance in any naval action. The less the enemy knows or can guess about our next moves, the greater the advantage to us. One of our guiding principles is never to make public information which might give the enemy a clue as to our future activities.

Premature publication of damage or losses may result in the loss of other American vessels and the death of more American boys. If there is any doubt as to whether or not information should be withheld, we make it a practice to err on the side of excess caution.

METHOD OF HANDLING NAVY NEWS

The Office of Public Relations of the Navy Department handles the preparation and release to the press of all items of news concerning the Navy and its activities. These news releases fall into the following categories:

(a) Navy Department communiques which deal principally with action reports from battle areas. No Navy Department communiqué is released by the Office of Public Relations without prior check and approval by an appropriate official of the Office of War Information.

(b) Press releases which cover items of general interest concerning naval activities and naval affairs. These are released by the Navy Department without checking with the Office of War Information.

The Directors of Public Relations of the Army and Navy meet daily with the Director of the Office of War Information (Mr. Elmer Davis). At this time, the Director of Public Relations of the Navy gives the Director of the Office of War Information a secret report of all developments in the combat zones under the control of the Navy which have taken place during the preceding 24 hours. The Office of War Information is informed as to how much of this information the Navy Department considers can be published without endangering the success of future operations.

SUPPLY OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS TO THE ATLANTIC SEABOARD

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two letters and a memorandum which I have received in reference to the oil situation along the Atlantic seaboard.

One letter is from Hon. James Forrestal, Under Secretary of the Navy. The other letter is from the Director of Petroleum Supply, Mr. R. L. Minckler. The memorandum is from the Navy and deals with the unwisdom and inadvisability of the proposed construction of a concrete-pipe oil line rather than a steel-pipe oil line.

There being no objection, the letters and memorandum were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, January 17, 1943.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I was glad of the opportunity to discuss with you the critical fuel situation existing in the Northeastern States. The Navy Department has foreseen such a condition, and, in fact, has endeavored to cooperate with the Petroleum Administrator for War for the past several months in the hope that the anticipated conditions would not develop into reality.

To the extent that it is possible, without jeopardizing the flow of petroleum products to our forces at sea and overseas, the Navy Department is sharing, and intends to continue sharing, its stocks of petroleum with the civil authorities. In fact, in the month of January there has been made available to the Petroleum Administrator for War a substantial volume which we are advised has been most helpful in meeting certain localized conditions.

You may be sure that, consistent with actual war needs, the Navy Department will continue this practical cooperation with the Petroleum Administrator for War in the hope that it may be of some service in alleviating the conditions brought about by the petroleum shortage in the East.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FORRESTAL.

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION FOR WAR,
Washington, January 20, 1943.

Hon. DAVID WALSH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Pursuant to your telephone request Thursday, we have studied the possibility of present storage facilities for petroleum products being inadequate in New England.

My opinion, however, is that existing facilities are sufficient to store any and all petroleum products which present and expected transportation may be able to bring into New England during those months when the supply is expected to exceed the demand. We intend, of course, to do everything possible to build up New England inventories this summer, but have no information which would lead us to believe that present facilities cannot handle any stocks which we can reasonably expect to accumulate this summer.

Very truly yours,

R. L. MINCKLER,
Director of Petroleum Supply.

MEMORANDUM FROM THE NAVY RE CONCRETE PIPE OIL LINES

To SENATOR WALSH:

I talked with an officer in the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department, regarding concrete pipe lines, and was informed that the use of concrete for large fuel-oil pipe lines was not practicable, and would not solve the fuel-oil problem.

First, the trouble is not in getting steel piping but in obtaining the necessary pumping equipment. The use of steel pipe for other purposes is decreasing, and no great trouble is anticipated in obtaining the required amount of steel pipe.

Second, with steel piping, pressures of 900 to 1,100 pounds per square inch are employed, while, with concrete, pressures of only about 200 pounds could be employed. This would require about double the number of pumping stations and double the amount of pumping equipment, and it is the pumping equipment which is the bottleneck at the present time.

Third, if concrete reinforced with steel were used, almost as much steel would be required, and this would not solve the problem, as the bottleneck re pumping equipment would still exist.

This officer informed me that the Navy had been studying this problem for some time; that they actually have some concrete fuel-oil lines in operation and are convinced that the use of concrete instead of steel piping is not practicable; and that any attempt to use concrete instead of steel piping would delay the pipe-line program, as it would throw a still heavier burden on the manufacturers of pump and pumping equipment.

JAMES A. SAUNDERS,
Captain, United States Navy (retired).

JANUARY 13, 1943.

Capt. A. F. Carter in the Navy says:

1. That the first section of the pipe line from Longview, Tex., to southern Illinois is practically completed—all the pipe is laid—but materials for some of the pumping units have not yet been received. He expects the line to be in operation by February 1. This will increase the eastern oil supply as tank cars will have shorter runs, as many of them will run only as far west as Illinois instead of going to Texas.

2. The pipe is now being processed for the second section of the line—that is, from southern Illinois to the Philadelphia-New York area.

This project is going along satisfactorily, and this section should be in operation by next fall. The priorities on the materials for this section of the line are now satisfactory and they hope to retain these priorities.

The pipe line is capable of delivering 300,000 barrels daily.

J. S. SAUNDERS.

DISCONTINUANCE OF MANPOWER INVESTIGATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, at the request of and on behalf of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program, I desire to make an announcement.

For approximately a month the committee has been conducting an investigation on the question of manpower, and has filed a preliminary report. However, desiring not to duplicate the work of other committees, and learning that five other committees are also conducting investigations of a similar nature, the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program has directed me to report to the Senate that it will discontinue its investigation, and will make available all the information it has for the use of any of the other committees which may request it.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY—CONSIDERATION OF FLYNN NOMINATION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is no Executive Calendar and, so far as I know, the Senate has finished its transaction of business for today. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

Before the motion is disposed of, I desire to repeat what I have already said, that immediately following the morning business on Monday, I shall move that the Senate go into executive session, and proceed to consider the nomination of Edward J. Flynn to be Minister to Australia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 1, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In Thy holy name, O Christ of God, do we lift up our hearts in prayer, and when Thou hearest, forgive. Thou hast said that it is faith that overcometh the world and we pray that it may possess our souls in peace and in holy confidence, never casting us down by disappointments and unduly elating us by our success. Amid clouds, skepticism, and sorrows we even dare to put on the garment of faith in God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Uplifted by this power we pray Thee that murmurings, reproaches, cynicisms may be hushed and that we may be patient and trustful, then we shall soon glimpse the Star of Victory and the Prince of Peace shall be vindicated.

Heavenly Father, may we know the joy of sharing our blessings and the help of sympathy in common sorrow. Many voices offer us a rest in our quiet hours, but Thou alone hast offered us a covert in the storm; in conflict Thou hast a palm for peace, and a garland for grace when cast down. We pause in tribute to our departed friend and comrade. Oh, grant him peace and joy in the heavenly paradise. Deal lovingly with those whose love for him has ever been the earnest of the arms divine. In our pilgrimage keep us all on the toilsome march and bring us at last to the "Master's Well Done." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE LATE JOSEPH J. SINNOTT

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, last evening the Honorable Joseph J. Sinnott, Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives for 22 years, passed on to his reward. Mr. Sinnott was a native of my home city, Richmond, Va. His passing will be sincerely mourned by his many friends in Virginia. We shall miss him here on the floor of the House.

He has had a long and splendid career on Capitol Hill. He first came to Washington in 1885. For 58 years he has labored on assignments here at the Capitol. He first assumed the responsibilities of Doorkeeper under the administration of Woodrow Wilson, and he was again elected to fill this position in 1930.

In the last few years his health was poor, and those of us who saw him from day to day have marveled at his determination to carry on despite the frailty which the ripening of age brought him. His has been a life of service to his country, intense loyalty to his friends, and fidelity to his duty.

I voice, I am sure, the keen regret of every Member of this body at the passing of one who has served so long and so faithfully here.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SATTERFIELD. I yield.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, at this time I have only to say that no more genial or efficient gentleman ever officiated as Doorkeeper of this House than our departed friend Joseph J. Sinnott. Peace to his ashes.

I suffer and I profit by reason of the fact that, unofficially and officially, I have been in and about these corridors for a very long time.

I knew our friend back in 1910, and from that day to this he and I have been friends.

Jealous of his prerogatives, efficient in the discharge of his duty, always a gentleman, he has endeared himself to all those who have come in contact with him over the years.

If ever a man won the accolade of the Lord, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," it was Joseph J. Sinnott.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SATTERFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, when I came to this body 20 years ago it was my good fortune to be taken into the home of Joseph J. Sinnott, where, for 8 years, I lived practically as a member of his family. I regarded that as the high point of initiation into the mysteries of official life in Washington. His great fund of knowledge, his wide acquaintance with men of importance, his long service to his own party and to the Nation enabled him to give wise counsel and advice. I do not know of any man in my public service whose loyalty to his official duty was more pronounced than that of Joe Sinnott. That carried with him right up until the last, because even on yesterday when, as all of us have recognized lately, he was becoming an ill man, he insisted on coming out and being at his post of duty.

He fell in line of action. I believe that the great service rendered by this distinguished public servant will be of inspiration to all of us.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SATTERFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the State of Virginia has contributed much to this Nation. Probably no State in the Union has contributed more. Especially is that true when it comes to the names of her illustrious men: Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Marshall, Patrick Henry, Robert E. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, Walter Reed, and hundreds of others I could name. But I can safely say, after more than 20 years of intimate association with him, that Virginia never furnished a more faithful servant to this Nation than our distinguished friend, Joseph J. Sinnott.

He will be missed more than any other man I could mention at this time, and especially on our side of the House. He set an example for faithfulness that I wish to God were followed by everyone throughout the Nation at this time. If everyone in America were imbued with the spirit of Joe Sinnott we would have no strikes, no sit-downs, no slow-downs, no racketeering, or other interference with our war program, to embarrass our men on the fighting fronts who are clamoring for materials. He was not only a faithful servant, but he was a patriotic American citizen. His example in public life might well be emulated by every person under the American flag. For, as I said, the country never had a more faithful public servant.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SATTERFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the death of our late beloved friend is a great blow to the organization of the House of Representatives, and is a personal blow to every Member, particularly those who were associated with him for years. It is a personal loss to me.

There are many things that I could say on this sad occasion about our late friend, Joseph J. Sinnott, or as we endearingly called him, Joe Sinnott, but I think the point brought out by our distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is the one that I would want to stress on this occasion and to emphasize in the RECORD at this time because it constitutes an example and an inspiration to all, not only to those of us who serve in this great body, but to all persons, an example of devotion to duty up to the very moment of impending death. The example set by our late friend is one that is particularly inspirational at this time, in this trying period of the history of our Nation and of the world; the example of a man carrying on his duty up to the very time of his death. Those of us who have known him for years have seen him withering away during the past months, but in his office carrying on his work, on the floor of the House, carrying out his duties.

We know that Joe Sinnott went to his Maker with a complete performance of his duty under the most trying circumstances, when he was seriously ill to the point that he should have stayed home. You and I wished he had, but on the other hand we respect the state of mind that permitted him to carry on the performance of his duties under great physical difficulties, performing his duties to the point of death.

I am deeply grieved personally and I join with our colleagues from Virginia—and I know my other colleagues of the House join with the delegation from Virginia—in expressing our sympathy to the State of Virginia, and particularly to the members of Joe Sinnott's immediate family, our profound sympathy in their bereavement.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SATTERFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, those who served here with Joe Sinnott loved him, those who served here with him will miss him. Joe Sinnott was a Christian gentleman; Joe Sinnott was a Virginia gentleman. In his unfailing courtesy to all, and in his fidelity to his trust, he set an example of public service worthy of emulation.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SATTERFIELD. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to let this moment pass without adding my word of tribute to a friend of many, many years' standing. It was in April 1911 I first became acquainted with Mr. Sinnott when as a very young man I was clerk here on Capitol Hill. He was kind and courteous to me as a young boy. When I came back here as a Member of Congress he was helpful and always friendly. He was ever faithful in his duties. I join with his other friends in expressing sincerest sorrow in the loss of this faithful official and this long-time friend. The loved ones he leaves behind have my deepest sympathy. Our Nation has lost a great citizen.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have been deeply grieved, as were the other Members of the House, by the sad news of the death of our elderly official, Doorkeeper Mr. Sinnott. Another familiar figure is gone from these Halls. Only a few months ago we were saddened by the passing of William Tyler Page, who had spent more than threescore years of service in connection with this Chamber, beginning as a page boy in his duty, and continuing his service until he became Clerk of the House of Representatives in the day of his party control. While Mr. Sinnott has not served quite threescore years, his services here have been varied and perhaps of even greater responsibility. I personally have lost a friend in the death of each of these outstanding officials and servants of the House of Representatives.

What history this venerable man has seen enacted through the years as he has announced Presidents and Kings and other notables of the earth in the course of his duty. Although he could mingle with the great men of the Nation, he did not overlook common people. Although he was severe in exterior he had a great heart and never failed to try to do the impossible by way of favoring Members, as when there was a clamor for balcony seats at special joint sessions of Congress. I have often been the recipient of his consideration in this regard and of many other acts of kindness which have endeared him to me personally.

As in the case of William Tyler Page, so now, with Joseph J. Sinnott, I can no longer say to my visitors in the Capitol, "There is a great man who has grown up with this Capitol and is an inseparable part of it." They are gone but their dignity is as much a composite part of the dignity of this great parliamentary body as the brilliant careers of our Speakers and legislative leaders.

I ask unanimous consent that I may express my sentiments more properly and fully in the RECORD at the conclusion of the eulogies that have already been given.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Joseph J. Sinnott, Doorkeeper of the House, and an employee for nearly 55 years.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to his memory the Speaker appoint a committee of four Members to attend the funeral services.

Resolved, That the Clerk transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints the following Members to attend the funeral of Hon. Joseph J. Sinnott: Messrs. SATTERFIELD, WOODRUM of Virginia, DOUGHTON, and TREADWAY.

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR THE COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 35, Rept. No. 62), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That until otherwise authorized by law there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives the sum of $2,400 per annum, payable monthly, as compensation to an assistant clerk to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to be appointed by the chairman thereof.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTON. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us the need for this additional clerk?

Mr. PATTON. I yield to my colleague and friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], to explain the need.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. This is for an additional clerk for the Committee on Immigration. Up to this time we have had only one clerk, yet in the last Congress over 400 bills were referred to our committee and we held over 200 hearings. The work is getting very heavy.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman ever bring any of these resolutions to the House?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Did I ever bring in any resolutions?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman did not bring them in, I do not see that he needs an extra clerk.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not quite understand my colleague.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Six hundred resolutions might be referred to the gentleman's committee; but if they are not actually reported out, I do not see that the work would be such as to call for an extra clerk.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We actually reported out about 200 resolutions after days of hearings in the committee room. We have had public hearings and passed on many resolutions. Reports have to be compiled on each bill on which hearings are held or which are considered. In the last Congress we made 150 voluminous reports. We worked on one thing alone, the codification of the nationality law, for 5 years.

The work of the committee has increased to the extent that it is impossible to carry on without an extra clerk. Some of the committees of the House have two or three clerks, yet they have no legislation before them. We are an active committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has it occurred to the gentleman that he might take a clerk from one of those inactive committees to help him out on his committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We do not want to take anything from anybody. What I am asking the House to do is to furnish a little extra assistance to a committee of 22 members. This work is referred to our committee by the Members of Congress. I am sure the majority of the committee feel as I do, for I have talked to them about it and they are in favor of it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This action is taken, then, after consultation with the committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; we talked about it several times last year.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And this resolution is the desire of the whole committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I have personally examined this matter and went into it very carefully. This committee has a tremendous number of bills before it. It is a very hard working committee and it has only one clerk, with no assistant clerk. It is my judgment that the facts warrant an assistant clerk in this particular case. What the gentleman says about other committees is correct, but that is a matter that should be looked into later and will be. I can assure the gentleman from Massachusetts that I have personally looked into the matter and my sense of judgment, my desire to be fair, prompts me to arrive at the conclusion that here is a justifiable case.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. With the assurance of the gentleman, I shall personally withdraw my objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The Accounts Committee heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] for about an hour today and the members of the Accounts Committee were unanimously of the opinion that he is entitled to this additional clerk. The committee only has one clerk. There have been over 600 bills and resolutions brought in to that committee and it is obvious that one clerk cannot take care of the 600 bills, which have to do with the naturalization of aliens serving in our armed forces and other things. I reiterate what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has just stated, and I hope this resolution will pass without any objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yesterday the names of six refugees who have positions in the office of the O. P. A. in New York, or six alleged refugees, I will put it that way, were submitted to me and the inquiry made whether or not they are working there. I would like to know whether a refugee is going to be given this job as clerk, and I am asking this question in all seriousness.

Mr. McCORMACK. In answer to the gentleman's question, and it is a very proper one, I can assure the gentleman that I will take the responsibility of assuring him there will be nothing like that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPENSES OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE RESOURCES OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution (H. Res. 84, Rept. No. 63), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 237 of the Seventy-third Congress, continued under authority of House Resolution 44 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, House Resolution 11 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, House Resolution 65 of the Seventy-sixth Congress, House Resolution 49, Seventy-seventh Congress, and House Resolution 20, Seventy-eighth Congress, incurred by the special committee appointed to investigate the conservation of the wildlife resources of the United States and related questions, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $7,500, effective from January 3, 1943, including expenditures for the employment of experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters shall serve said committee at its meetings in the District of Columbia unless otherwise officially engaged.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this, the Committee on Wildlife, under the chairmanship of our able friend from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], had appropriated for that committee the sum of $7,500. He returned $2,600 to the Sergeant at Arms. I may say that this was also unanimously reported by the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPENSES OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 85, Rept. No. 64), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the study, inquiry, and investigation authorized by House Resolution 281 of the Seventy-seventh Congress and House Resolution 52 of the Seventy-eighth Congress, incurred by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, not to exceed $50,000, effective from January 9, 1943, in addition to the unexpended balances of sums made available during the Seventy-seventh Congress for conducting the study, inquiry, and investigation authorized by said House Resolution 281 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, unless otherwise officially engaged.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] at this time.

EX-PRESIDENT WILLIAM McKINLEY

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, no doubt you and the Members of the House have already noticed the red carnations that are being worn by the Ohio Members in the Chamber this morning. It is our purpose to present each Member with a red carnation.

This was Mr. McKinley's favorite flower and it has become the favorite flower of Ohio.

It is reported that when President McKinley occupied the White House it was his custom to pin a red carnation on the lapel of his visitors, especially those whose request he was not able to grant. He wanted to send them away as graciously as he could, even if he could not grant their request.

In view of the fact that we have just been paying our respects to our beloved Doorkeeper, Mr. Joe Sinnott, who passed away yesterday, we who are taking the leading part in this observation of McKinley's birthday want to approve what has been so appropriately said about Mr. Sinnott. No doubt Mr. Sinnott was here in the Capitol during the time McKinley was President, and no doubt he had many pleasant recollections of his acquaintance with Mr. McKinley. There are not many now living that knew McKinley. There are a few Members of the House and some of the clerical staff of the House who met him. If we had the time we would be glad to have them relate the incidents connected with their meeting this distinguished man.

I crave your further indulgence while I say a few words before the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARSON] delivers what I know will be an enlightening address on the life and achievements of Mr. McKinley.

For several years the Ohio Members have called the attention of the House to McKinley's birthday. Tomorrow will mark the one hundredth anniversary of his birth. Each year we try to have some appropriate program. We do this not because McKinley was a President of the United States. Ohio has, as you know, produced many Presidents. We put on these programs because we think that Mr. McKinley was one of the ablest and most effective Congressmen that ever sat and served in this great body. We appreciate that it is not possible to measure greatness with mathematical accuracy, yet we feel that the impartial historians will so record that William McKinley was one of the greatest of all Congressmen. He was a great Congressman because he left a great impression on the economic growth and stability of our country. I have repeatedly stated on the floor of this House and other places that McKinley made his greatest contribution to his country right on the floor of this House. That is why I have been so persistent in asking for fitting observation of his birthday on this floor. He had a magnificent record as a soldier in the Civil War. He was considered as an able Governor of Ohio. He ranked high as a President. But he would never have been Governor or President were it not for the magnificent record he had made as a Congressman.

Mr. McKinley had a great capacity to make friends. He did this because he was fair in all his dealings. I have been so much impressed with the warmth that the Democratic Membership has always shown to these programs that we Ohio Members have been putting on each year. Last year when we had an observance similar to this one I remember a distinguished Member from Texas rose and expressed his wish to speak. We were glad to hear him. He respected William McKinley because McKinley had shown great kindness to the South after the war. This Texas Member had great respect for Roger Q. Mills, who was one of America's great statesmen. Roger Q. Mills was a Member of Congress from Texas and he served contemporaneously with McKinley. Both were great champions of their respective sides of the tariff issue. There was a friendship between McKinley and Mills which was very warm and enduring. McKinley had been an officer in the Union Army and Mills had been an officer in the Confederate Army, and both were great men. This friendship was very similar to the friendship between Nick Longworth and Jack Garner, both great Congressmen; and it was somewhat similar to the friendship that we from Ohio have for our own very distinguished Speaker, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN.

There is no question but that in the heat of battle on this floor many warm friendships are created. Students of the life of McKinley generally maintain that the great dignity and the great honors that came to McKinley came to him because of his work on this floor. We do not respect him because he was a President any more than we do the other distinguished Presidents that Ohio has produced, but we respect him as the most outstanding Congressman Ohio has ever sent to this distinguished body.

Mr. Speaker, the Ohio delegation has selected the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARSON], a new Member from Ohio who has the honor to represent the district formerly represented by Mr. McKinley, to make the formal anniversary address today. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARSON].

Mr. CARSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, as the Representative of the Sixteenth District of Ohio, a native Ohioan, and a resident of the city of Canton, the home of the late President William McKinley, I am proud to have the honor of addressing the House on the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of our beloved martyred war President, and of paying tribute to one of our country's great men. Tomorrow the whole Nation will observe the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of William McKinley in Niles, Ohio, on January 29, 1843.

At the age of 17 he enlisted in the Union Army and served through the Civil War under Rutherford B. Hayes. He served his country with distinction and was mustered out with the rank of major.

In 1867 he opened his law office in Canton, county seat of Stark County, Ohio, where he maintained residence for the remainder of his life. William McKinley was elected as Representative to the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, and part of the Forty-eighth Congresses. He was again elected to the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses.

The Republican Party became more closely identified with the protective tariff in each successive year of McKinley's congressional experience. The tariff was to him a national policy and not a cloak for special privilege to favored interests. In 1889 he contested the Republican caucus for speakership, and Reed, who defeated him, made him chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

In 1891 McKinley became the fortieth Governor of the State of Ohio and served for two terms. In 1896 he was elected President of the United States, becoming the twenty-fifth President.

The administration that he set up was orthodox in its Republicanism. Except for the restoration of the high tariff and the establishment of the gold standard, the theory implicit in Republican ideology was that all that was needed was to let business alone and to harmonize the clashing claims of interest with as little loss as possible. For this task McKinley was ideally suited. His long professional career had given him an intuitive knowledge of the psychology of the Members of Congress. His natural kindliness and consideration had been developed by the need to conciliate everyone in order to attain his own ends. With a smile he met angrily insistent men at his office door and sent them away beaming, often wearing a red carnation, his favorite flower, from the Presidential desk. He did not pretend to know more than Congress or his party; to him, as to so many in his generation, the Nation and the Republican Party seemed merged as one. He did not surrender his mind to any of his advisers, but he rarely allowed himself to stand far in advance of the opinion of his constituents.

It was during his first term of office that the Cuban question and the War with Spain arose. Up to that time our relations with foreign nations filled but a slight space in American history and excited generally only a languid interest.

The Cuban question was a chronic nuisance. The persistence of slavery in Cuba and the military and absolute government of the Spanish captain-general there, excluding the natives from all participation and from all enjoyment of the fruits of administration, was responsible for the first revolutionary outbreak in the island. These revolutions continued from President Grant's time and almost reached a climax in the last year of President Cleveland's administration. In Congress there was a mounting tide of sentiment for the Cubans. This same situation confronted McKinley at the beginning of his first term as President. President Cleveland had endeavored to be a leader of public opinion and McKinley was a follower. The momentum of Cleveland's sanity and courage had its effect on the country and on the new President McKinley for several months, until dramatic untoward incidents inflamed to the bursting point a public that was already saturated with a genuine sentiment of sympathy for Cuban revolution.

McKinley soon faced the alternatives of leading the United States into a war which he abhorred, or of fighting the politicians who were yielding to the popular clamor and egging on war. He settled the matter when he referred it to Congress, which directed him on April 20, 1898, to intervene in Cuba in order to establish Cuban independence, disclaiming an intent to aggrandize the power of the United States in so doing.

Almost before the minds of the Government had been adjusted to the fact of war, it was turned to the policy of peace. There arose the Philippine situation. Again McKinley, not desiring annexations and sincere in his philanthropic gesture toward Cuba, was the slave of his technique. When he instructed his Commissioners to negotiate peace in Paris, he was not ready to say whether the Philippines should be returned, released, or kept. At this crisis he turned as always to his conscience, for he was devout and earnest. He left, as an explanation of how the decision came to him, a statement made to a delegation of clergymen who visited him in Washington a year or so afterward. He said:

I walked the floor of the White House night after night until midnight; and I am not ashamed to tell you gentlemen that I went down on my knees and prayed Almighty God for light and guidance more than one night. And one night late it came to me this way—I don't know how it was, but it came. 1. That we could not give them back to Spain—that would be cowardly and dishonorable. 2. That we could not turn them over to France or Germany—our commercial rivals in the Orient—that would be bad business and discreditable. 3. That we could not leave them to themselves—they were unfit for self-government, and they would soon have anarchy and misrule over there worse than under Spain. 4. That there was nothing left for us to do but to take them all and to educate the Filipinos and uplift and civilize and Christianize them, and by God's grace do the very best we could by them, as our fellow men for whom Christ had also died. And then I went to bed and to sleep and slept soundly.

President McKinley then directed the Peace Commission to demand the cession of the entire Archipelago. Strangely, Spain resisted and they were finally offered the sum of twenty million as compensation. Spain had already offered to Germany the islands, so she quickly accepted the offer of settlement.

It was during McKinley's administration that Hawaii was annexed. Japan protested, claiming violation of her treaty of 1886 with Hawaii. There were some 25,000 Japanese on the island and it was claimed the annexation might jeopardize their rights. Japan withdrew her protests when she was assured that the United States would protect her treaty rights, and the islands were finally annexed on August 12, 1898. Wake Island was annexed January 17, 1899, and Guam by the treaty with Spain ratified by the Senate on February 6, 1899. I mention these islands since they have made history in our present war.

McKinley was reelected in 1900. On September 6, 1901, during a public reception at Buffalo, he was shot by an anarchist, Leon F. Czolgosz, and died in Buffalo 8 days later. On his lips at the end was the phrase:

It is God's way. His will, not ours, be done.

McKinley believed in the divinity of Christ and a recognition of Christianity as the mightiest factor in the world's civilization. From his youth he had been by conviction a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was buried in Canton, Ohio, where later a beautiful memorial was erected, the fund being raised by millions of pennies collected by school children. His personal associates maintained for the rest of their lives an affectionate loyalty to his memory such as few American statesmen have inspired. We of Ohio are proud to acclaim President McKinley as a native son and to honor and cherish his memory.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to our distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it is only fitting and proper that today, the anniversary of the birth of a great American, we of the House should pause to honor the contributions made by this great American, and to pay respect to his memory.

During its constitutional history our country has been very fortunate in having a great line of Presidents. It is particularly appropriate that today, when our country is engaged in war, we should pause to honor the memory of another wartime President.

Without regard to party, the President of the United States is the President of all the American people. That is my viewpoint of the Presidency, as it should be the viewpoint of all Americans. During the lifetime of a man human emotions come into play, sometimes producing misunderstanding, but history records the true facts concerning the events that occur during one's span of life, particularly in the case of Presidents of the United States, all of whom are sufficiently prominent to occupy outstanding pages in history.

William McKinley was one of the outstanding Presidents of the history of our country. He led our people during the trying period of the Spanish-American War, a turning point in the history of our country. He steered the ship of state to safety. While the Spanish-American War was not a terrible war as far as casualties are concerned, it was an important conflict. We had to have in the White House in those days, just as today or in any other trying period of our country's history, a man of vision, a man of courage. Fortunately, during the Spanish-American War we had in the White House in the person of the man whose memory we honor today, and rightfully so, a man of vision and courage, a man who can take his place among the great Presidents of our beloved country.

When our beloved country is in danger we need a man in the White House who has not only vision and courage but the judgment to lead our people to safety, no matter what may be his name, his religion, or his political party; they are immaterial.

President McKinley is recorded in history as a President who met the crisis of his day and steered the ship of state to safety. It is well that we pause today as Americans to honor this great man and his contribution to our country and to pay tribute to his memory.

I hope and pray that, when Americans of this generation are gone, and if a future generation of Americans is faced with a dangerous crisis there will be in the White House on that occasion, regardless of what party elects him, what his name may be, or what his religion may be, a man of vision, a man of courage, a man of judgment, the type of man we honor today, the type of man we have in the White House now and whom we have had in the White House in every crisis that has confronted our country in its constitutional history. In times of danger, we need a leader in the White House.

I join with the Ohio delegation in everything that has been said today about this great man in honoring his outstanding contributions to the progress of our country.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the kind words of our distinguished majority leader, and, with the Speaker's further permission, I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the few men in this House who had the great privilege of meeting President McKinley. It was during the Spanish-American War. My regiment was camped at Camp Alger, a little way over in Virginia. I was a corporal in my company, and one day secured leave of absence for myself and my "set of fours." We wished to see Washington. We had no idea that we would be privileged that day to meet the President of the United States. We came to Washington; but in those days you must remember that there were no taxicabs or any other means of moving quickly about the city. However, we four youngsters, I think, saw more of Washington in one day than anybody had ever seen prior to that time. We were, all of us, in fine physical condition, full of energy and enthusiasm, and we wanted to see everything there was to be seen. Someone told us there was a public reception at the White House on that day and that we would be permitted to attend. We hurried there and joined a long line that was passing slowly before the President. As we approached him we saw that on the other side of him in a wheel chair was his invalid wife. As each one of us boys came to the President he stopped us and talked with us. He held up the whole line to talk to each of us, and no man not having had contact with McKinley can ever appreciate how kind and generous and how in every way delightful his personality was.

As I passed by the President and came to Mrs. McKinley I then thought I had never before, and I now know I have never since, been more impressed with the beauty and the graciousness of a woman than I was with that of the then mistress of the White House. Her hair was snow white and her eyes to me appeared to be as black as night. While I have known in my lifetime many lovely women, many gracious women, certainly I have never met anyone more gracious and delightful to me than was she. I think every one of the boys felt exactly as I felt. We were the only ones in that great crowd who were in uniform. It was this, I think, which caused them both to pay such attention to us.

That experience has enshrined in my heart a love, a veneration, for McKinley and his dear wife that will remain there so long as I shall live.

It was later when I was attending the Detroit College of Medicine that I learned of the President's assassination. I do not think that in all my life I have ever received such a shock or one that affected me more deeply than that. Of the privileges I have had in this life, I count the greatest of them all that of meeting President McKinley and his dear wife on that occasion, and under those circumstances. I join in everything that has been said by the other Members in regard to this beloved man. I count him among the greatest Presidents we have had.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am proud indeed to wear this red carnation in honor of the memory of so great and so good a man as William McKinley. It may be that because the campaign of 1896 was the first campaign that I can remember I have always taken such a personal interest in the life and accomplishments of President McKinley. In that campaign, like most others in Virginia, I was strong for free silver. I have since learned that McKinley was right. It was when I was a boy during the stirring events of the Spanish-American War that I recall, of everything else that happened then, that President McKinley prayed all night long before he agreed to dispatch a note to Spain protesting the treatment of our friends in Cuba, which he knew would in all probability lead us into war.

Mr. McKinley was a Christian and did not hesitate to appeal to the Father of Light to illuminate his understanding. It was on a warm summer day when I was still a boy that I drove to the little station of Brandy, in Culpeper County, to meet some guests coming from Washington and the news came over the wire that President McKinley had been shot. I stood in front of that little station platform while three old Confederate veterans were discussing the assassination of the President. I remember well one of them said that he was shot in the stomach. The second said that that must have been very painful, and the third one said, "Well, I was shot in the stomach in the Battle of Bull Run. It did not hurt so much but the bullet was mighty hot."

After I grew to manhood and became interested in public problems, I studied the work of McKinley as a legislator, and I am proud to be on the committee that once was headed by that great man. I give Mr. McKinley credit for the fact that in deciding that we should have possessions in the Orient he committed us to the policy of being a world power. In his last speech at Buffalo, in support of his policy, he said that we must not assume that we can forever sell abroad and never buy abroad, and added:

> The period of exclusiveness is past. Commercial wars are unprofitable; reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times; measures of retaliation are not.

That message still rings down to me from that great public leader who envisioned the destiny of a world power, and expected succeeding generations to carry on in the light that he held for us.

It is very fitting, as our distinguished majority leader has just said, for us to pause from time to time to honor the memory of great leaders in this country.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, at this time I want to thank the Speaker very sincerely for his courtesy, and I now yield to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to join with my colleagues from Ohio and the rest of the country in the tributes to one of the great Americans of all time. William McKinley was a kind and gentle man. He loved peace and yet by a curious trick of fate this man of peace was forced to fight as a soldier in one war, to be at the head of the Government in another war, and fall the victim of an assassin's bullet.

William McKinley was devoted to the people of this country. He wanted to serve his day and generation, and he served ably and well not only in war but in peace as well. He left his lasting impress upon our Nation because under his leadership America emerged from a colonial country and became an important world power.

McKinley loved people. He loved his country.

He devoted every hour of his long public career to the interests of the common man. His ambition was to make our country a better land to live in. His devotion to his wife, an invalid, appealed strongly to the American people. His love for children, as evidenced every time he came in contact with them, evoked admiration and respect. The little thoughtful things left their impress upon our people, and he became a most beloved President. We are glad to join in perpetuating the memory of a man whose service helped to make this a greater and a better country. Today as we honor this great and gentle son of Ohio, we hope he may continue to radiate inspiration and the urge for a better life to the American people to the end that here on this Western Hemisphere we can build a finer and better civilization and that through the better civilization we build here we, as a Nation, may be a beacon light for the rest of the world.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will mark the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of President William McKinley. As a lifelong admirer of that great American, whose usefulness was cut short by an assassin's bullet, I am truly grateful to the distinguished speakers who have preceded me for what they have said in appraising his life as citizen, Civil War veteran, Representative in Congress, Governor of the great State of Ohio, and President of the United States.

William McKinley was a great humanitarian, a great American, a great statesman.

As member and chairman of the great Ways and Means Committee and author of the Tariff Act of 1890, William McKinley did much to promote industry in America and to make us self-sufficient, so far as is humanly possible. He believed in protection for the American workingman and the American farmer, and so long as we followed the principles of sound economics laid down by him America grew and the American people prospered.

He was one of the first, and easily the ablest, advocate of truly reciprocal trade relations with foreign countries, but he wanted such trade relations based on sound economics and so carried out as to redound to the welfare of our country and our people.

At this point let me quote from one of President McKinley's statements on the subject of reciprocity. Said he:

> The end in view is always to be the opening up of new markets for the products of our country by granting concessions to the products of other lands that we need and cannot produce ourselves and which do not involve any loss of labor to our own people but tend rather to increase their employment.

This quotation is from his inaugural address.

Unlike the present alleged reciprocity program, the McKinley philosophy does not include the granting of concessions on foreign products which we do not need and which directly compete with and displace our own—at least where the domestic product is available in commercial quantities at a cost not economically prohibitive and where the existing duty thereon does not exceed the minimum of protection necessary to give the American producer an equal opportunity with low-cost foreign producers in competing for the home market.

The fundamental purpose for which this or any other nation carries on foreign trade is to sell abroad what it is able, and to buy from abroad the things which it must import to supply domestic needs. A reciprocity program, to be of any net benefit to this country, must be consistent with the fundamental purposes of foreign trade—in other words, it must be employed to further the exchange abroad of our own surpluses for the commodities we need but do not ourselves produce.

That, my friends, is the principle for which the Republican Party has stood since its inception. The operation of that principle enabled this country to become the greatest industrial and agricultural country in all the world, and it also enabled us to raise our standard of living to a level never before dreamed of in any land.

The reciprocity program that was put into effect by President Roosevelt and his free trade advisers some 10 years ago does violence to all the principles of foreign commerce laid down by the late McKinley, and it is for that reason I have introduced a bill to repeal the trade treaties that have been entered into between our State Department and foreign governments without congressional approval as required by the Constitution.

Each trade treaty should stand on its own bottom and should apply only to the country with which the agreement is entered into. As it now is, when we give concessions to one country, all other countries, save one, receive the same benefits without necessarily giving us anything in return. Foreign countries thus receive most of the advantage. I call that one-sided bargaining, not true reciprocity.

Under the great McKinley, the broad general principle of mutually advantageous exchange was laid down. Commerce was to be a two-way affair, with each side gaining some benefit. We bought from other nations such commodities as we could not produce at home, and in return we expected the countries with which we did business to buy from us the things that they needed and of which we have a surplus. That was sound, Yankee horse trading. Now, however, it seems that a new philosophy has grown up in this country, fostered by crystal-gazers, visionaries, and dreamers. They would buy commodities and products from other countries that we produce here at home, in order to foster the so-called good-neighbor policy. As it now operates, the countries we buy from are not obliged to buy from us and frequently do not.

When this war is over, and God grant that it may be soon, America must reembark on the McKinley system of protection and genuine reciprocity if we would retain the American market for the American producer and maintain the American standard of living. There is no immediate hurry that I can see, as the war serves as an embargo on all peacetime commerce. It is after the war is over and the mad scramble for the great American market begins that we must take steps to protect the American producer on farm and in factory from the devastating competition of pauperized lands. The administration's present foreign trade policy, if in effect at that time, will only result in unemployment and in lowering our own high standard of living to the lower levels obtaining in Europe and the Orient.

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to refer in detail to the public service of William McKinley. Others here are competent to do this and are doing it. I think perhaps the House may be interested, however, in just a word of personal reminiscence of an event that occurred in my younger life that left a marked impression on me that has lasted from that day to this.

During Mr. McKinley's campaign for the Presidency, when I was a young farm boy in Allen County, Ind., he made a speaking trip through a portion of my district. It was a great and gala occasion climaxed by a parade and I made a special trip to town on horseback, with some of the neighborhood boys, to view the celebration.

Two things stand out in my memory of that important day in my young life. The first is the kindliness of that great American, who was to become a wartime President of the United States. The second is an incident which occurred during my ride back to the farm. The events of the day so impressed me, and I was so wrapped up in my contemplation of them, that I became careless and was thrown from my horse.

Mr. Speaker, today is the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of our martyred President, the beloved William McKinley. It is fitting that we should pause a moment in our deliberations to pay tribute to his memory. In the words of the inscription on his memorial at Canton, Ohio, he was a "good citizen—brave soldier—wise executive—helper and leader of men—exemplar to his people of the virtues that build and conserve the state, society, and the home."

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, Kansas has always taken pride in the fact that her date of admission into the sisterhood of States coincided with the date of President McKinley's birth. We join with the Ohio delegation in commemorating January 29, our Kansas Day, and the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of President McKinley.

I recall a dramatic incident which occurred on the battlefield of Antietam. It was there that President McKinley delivered his last Memorial Day address. It was on May 30, 1901, at the Antietam National Cemetery, a part of the historic battlefield. With President McKinley was Senator John M. Daniel, of Virginia, who spoke from the same platform. Senator Daniel, in his most dramatic manner, told how the President, who was a soldier at this battle and commissary sergeant of the One Hundred and Forty-first Ohio Regiment, worked all night of September 16 to make coffee and sandwiches for the Ohio boys and, before daybreak on the morning of the 17th, drove over the peaceful hills where the hell of battle was so soon to plunge and gave many a poor soldier his last breakfast. A bronze plaque now marks the spot. Only 3 months after the memorial address at the Antietam Cemetery on May 30, 1901, McKinley fell victim to an assassin's bullet.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I very well remember when I was a boy in my teen age, my father and a neighbor had spent a few days at the Buffalo Exposition. They had come home late in the afternoon and we were all on the lawn in front of the house listening to my father's story as to the wonderful things he had seen at the exposition. He was telling us this when a neighbor came driving by who had gone to town to get his mail. He stopped and told us that McKinley had been shot and he was dead. I will never forget the shock I got at that and how I walked away from the group and cried. A little while later I went to bed and I knelt down by the side of the bed and prayed for Mrs. McKinley, perhaps more earnestly than I had ever prayed before. I have been wondering just what it was that excited me so and directed my actions in that way, and the only conclusion I can come to is that it was the tremendous influence in my young life that was brought about by a great American and a lovely lady in the White House.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as a Representative of the deep South, I join in expressing the reverence of the people of that great section of our country for our distinguished former President, the one hundredth anniversary of whose birth we are now commemorating—President William McKinley, of Ohio.

I first learned of William McKinley in the campaign of 1896 when he and William Jennings Bryan ran for the Presidency on opposing tickets. In those days there were "giants upon the earth"; and that contest was a battle between two mental giants.

Never have two more consecrated Christian gentlemen opposed each other for the Presidency of this Republic in any contest in all the Nation's history. Indeed, they lifted American politics into a purified moral atmosphere that challenged the admiration of the civilized world.

Every friend and follower of William Jennings Bryan bows in reverence for the memory of William McKinley. He was a statesman, a patriot, and a Christian gentleman. Thomas Jefferson once said there were three questions to be asked of any man who applied for political office: Is he honest? Is he qualified? Is he faithful?

The life and character of William McKinley answers all those questions in the affirmative. However much we may have differed from him on policies and procedure, no honest man could challenge his integrity or question his devotion to those high Christian principles upon which this country must continue to rest if the Republic is to endure.

When I think of that contest between him and William Jennings Bryan, two of the cleanest, finest, and purest men who ever lived, it is my earnest prayer that their example may be repeated throughout all the national contests this Nation is to experience, and that their "lofty scene may be acted over in states unborn and accents yet unknown."

SUBSIDY PAYMENTS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Agriculture has announced unexpectedly a new subsidy policy under which a bonus is to be paid to farmers from the United States Treasury in the form of incentive payments. The Department states that the payments would be subsidies to the consumer rather than to the producer. In other words it proposes to pay a part of the grocery bill of certain classes of people and charge it to the taxpayers.

The amount mentioned by the Department to start the program is $100,000,000, but estimates indicate that the amount required would be from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000, and departmental spokesmen who discussed the subject when it was before the Committee on Appropriations last year said that carried to its ultimate conclusion it would require billions.

On the testimony submitted by the Department when the subject was before the committee during consideration of the price-control bill in the last session the committee not only disapproved such a policy but incorporated in the O. P. A. bill a provision that no part of the funds therein appropriated should be used for subsidies in any form. That provision was approved by the House and is now a part of the law.

It is therefore a matter of surprise that the Department should, without notice and without consultation with any congressional committee, suddenly announce that these payments will be made. The only method by which funds can be secured for the purpose is through appropriation by Congress, and the announcement by the Department carried in every metropolitan newspaper and over every radio channel is tantamount to announcement that Congress will reverse its decision and repeal the policy incorporated in the law and provide the money at the direction of a Government bureau.

The release by the Department of Agriculture does not say that the plan is under consideration or that Congress will be asked to take action, but is a categorical statement that the policy will be followed and that the money will be forthcoming.

It is not only an encroachment on the constitutional prerogatives of the Congress but it is a proposal to take a vast sum from the Treasury to pay a part of the cost of living of certain consumers at a time when the consumer's income is the highest in the history of the Nation and when every available dollar is needed for the prosecution of the war.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD; and also to extend my remarks and include a joint statement by all of the national farm bureaus opposing this proposition.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, Secretary Wickard has announced a program of payments of subsidies to farmers to plant the things that he tells them to, and conform in every way to his regulations. This is another subsidy designed to create inflation by robbing the public of the normal curb on higher prices resulting from the fact that people will not buy when the prices are higher.

It means appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars and adding that amount to our national debt, and that increase in debt is highly inflationary.

The farmers do not want this. They want a fair price for their product. They are entitled to it, and the Office of Price Administration should obey the law which Congress has passed so that they can get it.

I know that the Congress does not want to provide this subsidy money.

The Secretary has tried to deceive the farmer into believing that he will get this subsidy. I do not believe that the money will be appropriated. The farmer must have a decent price for his goods, but subsidies must end.

EDUCATION OF CHINESE STUDENTS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, during the deserved tributes paid to the memory of President McKinley mention has been made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON] of the expression of far vision in connection with the Orient by that former great leader of our land. I should like to call attention just now to the fact that we have on Capitol Hill and present in the gallery members of the Chinese race. I have been privileged during the morning to explain legislative procedure to these Chinese students who are here in this country and have been studying for many, many years.

It so happens that when war broke out there were approximately 1,000 Chinese students in the institutions of learning in this country. Through the Division of Cultural Relations, Department of State, there was given through the emergency fund of the President an amount sufficient to carry forward and complete the education of 175 of those youths. I pay tribute to those young men and also to the solidarity between America and China, which is being brought ever closer.

[Here the gavel fell.]

THE AIR TRANSPORT COMMAND

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, the other day on the floor of the House a friend of mine repeated a rumor to the effect that 50 percent of the personnel in Army planes taken to our flying fronts were killed in transit. I have heard this rumor repeated since in the city of Washington. In fairness to the brave men who are doing a superb job in flying these planes to the fighting fronts of the world, I desire to read a letter just received from Hon. Robert A. Lovett, Assistant Secretary of War for Air. The letter reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR AIR,
Washington, D. C., January 27, 1943.

The Honorable OVERTON BROOKS,
House of Representatives,

DEAR MR. BROOKS: Thank you for bringing to my attention a rumor, apparently reported to certain Members of Congress, to the effect that "50 percent of personnel in Army planes en route to our fronts are killed in transit."

This vicious and reckless rumor is completely untrue. The Army Air Forces, ferrying, flight delivery, and transport operations comprise one of the outstanding accomplishments of the war. The truth of the matter is that in such operations the percentage of fatal accidents to deliveries is two-tenths of 1 percent for the 6 months' period ending December 31, 1942. Furthermore, for the full calendar year 1942, 99.7 percent of all aircraft accepted for domestic ferrying and foreign flight delivery by our Air Transport Command were delivered to their destinations.

Such a record would be gratifying even under peacetime conditions. Remembering that flight delivery of our modern high performance aircraft is made to ten active overseas air fronts completely encircling the globe (from the subzero temperature of the Arctic to the subtropical climates of Africa and the southwest Pacific) the accomplishment is a superb one and an extraordinary tribute to the pilots, the machines, and the operating and supervisory personnel.

The Army Air Forces are justly proud of this record and are doing their utmost to maintain it. Such malicious rumors naturally have a serious effect on morale and we would appreciate very much any assistance you may be able to give us to enable us to trace such stories to their source.

Very sincerely yours,

ROBERT A. LOVETT,
Assistant Secretary of War for Air.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the business of the day and other special orders I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House today for 10 minutes at the conclusion of the other special orders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an article by Kingsbury Smith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF FEBRUARY 1

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to inquire of the majority leader as to the program for next week.

Mr. McCORMACK. On Wednesday the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill will come up. This will probably take 3 days, though I hope only 2.

I have no information now as to whether there will be any legislation called up except possibly some small matters that may be disposed of by unanimous consent.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is my understanding correct that the leaders will be liberal in general debate on the Treasury-Post Office bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. Whatever the committee agrees upon, I assume they will be liberal. The only thought I had in mind, and this is just a personal observation, is that in these busy days if the House can go over from Thursday until Monday it would enable Members to catch up with their mail and their office work and departmental matters. The Members have so much of this kind of work to do.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. We will cross that bridge when we come to it; we shall see what happens in the meantime.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is true, but that was just a personal observation.

The following week, the week of February 8, the independent offices bill will come up.

I am hopeful that the Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet next week and report out a resolution extending the lend-lease policy. If this is done it is my intention to bring it up as soon as possible. I have no definite knowledge beyond what I have stated.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Next week there will be just this one appropriation bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CASE. I am not quite clear as to when the Treasury-Post Office bill is to be called up. I understood the majority leader to say it would be reported out on Wednesday; that he wanted the balance of the week free for Members to clean up other work.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill will be called up Wednesday; that is the information I have received.

Mr. CASE. Presented to the House on Wednesday.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a report received by me from the Commerce and Industry Association of New York concerning the proposed revision of the Securities and Exchange Commission proxy rules. This is a very important report on a very important subject, and I should like each Member of the House to read this report in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from a newspaper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by S. G. Webb published in the Newport County Sentinel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of business on the Speaker's desk and after any special orders heretofore entered on Monday next I may be permitted to address the House for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT]?

There was no objection.

THE WAR IN THE PACIFIC

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the drama and the glamour of the Casablanca conference has no equal in all the pages of history. The full import of this conference on the conduct of the war may not be appreciated until after the passage of many months and the happening of many great military achievements. However, it is most unfortunate that two of the great leaders of the United Nations were not present to participate in the deliberations. While the absence of Stalin and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek has been explained, nevertheless the absence of representatives of the Governments of Russia and China cannot be explained.

In determining the strategy on which this global war is to be fought, it is only proper that all the members of the United Nations should participate in the deliberations. In order that this may be accomplished, dual boards of strategy should be established. The Atlantic conference on strategy should consist of Russia, Britain, and the United States. The Pacific board of strategy should consist of China, Britain, and the United States. The members representing Britain and the United States should be the same on both boards in order that they might serve as a means of coordination, the method of cohesion, and as a force for liaison between the dual hemispheric wars. In this way not only will Russia be given her part in the determination of European war strategy, but also China would be likewise recognized and would be given the position to which she is so justly entitled in carrying out the plans for the complete conquest of Japan.

Too long have we delayed in taking China into our full confidence. For 5 years China has been conducting a single-handed fight against Japan. Unfortunately we have not been in a position to give to China all the aid which we would like or which China should have. The longer we continue to delay in providing China with the essential munitions of war and delay in establishing an effective offensive force of our own in the Pacific, the stronger becomes Japan's position on the continent of Asia. Japan is today building railroads and highways, army bases and supply depots, as well as establishing munition plants and factories. All of which will make Japan a continental power as difficult to destroy as is Germany today as a result of her complete conquest of Europe. The cost in men and materials of defeating Japan already gives promise of being extremely high, and every month we delay in taking the offensive is going to make our task more costly, more difficult, and almost insurmountable.

We must attack Japan now. We must stop Japan's development of the Asiatic Continent now. We must join with China in taking the offensive now.

Germany has been stopped in her forward advance and is now encircled by the United Nations. Our problem is to reduce the size of that circle and reconquer the vast territory of the defeated nations in Europe. Too many people, imbued with a spirit of overconfidence, are of the opinion that the complete downfall and destruction of Germany is at hand. In fact, the war against Germany may yet prove to be long and difficult. The road to Berlin will be arduous and tedious, for it can be truthfully said that in Europe we have not yet begun to fight.

Because of the attention focused on the European war by reason of the Casablanca conference we are in danger of forgetting the Pacific theater of war. Here, too, a tremendous task lies ahead. The defeat of Japan at this time would require years even were we not divided in our efforts by reason of the Atlantic theater of war. If we do not take steps now to encircle Japan as Germany is encircled and to prevent Japan's development of the continent of Asia, we will find that Japan has so developed her resources as to make her destruction three times as difficult and thrice more costly. We cannot afford to pay that price. We must give more attention to the Pacific theater of war. We must find a means of sending planes and munitions to China. The war in the Pacific must not be ignored.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak today for 10 minutes at the conclusion of any special orders that have been entered for today and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROWE]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article by Carlos J. Benitez.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a concurrent resolution passed by the Michigan State Legislature.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next after disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and any other special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a resolution from the Brotherhood of Railroad Shop Crafts of America, Altoona Works, Local No. 42.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House today for 10 minutes after the other special orders that have been heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. HOFFMAN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

CHINA AND RUSSIA

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] has just called attention to an issue which requires our immediate consideration. A Chinese mission has been here in Washington knocking at our door since last April asking for admittance. They have been knocking at that door ever since and have not been favored with our attention. I think it is highly necessary and essential for our own welfare, for the welfare of the Chinese people, and out of consideration for the situation existing in the Orient and our relation to it that we take the Chinese into our confidence and make real partners of them as we have of the British and others.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may extend their remarks on William McKinley.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]?

There was no objection.

FOOD PRODUCTION

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

LET'S MAKE THE FARMER A PARTNER IN THE NATION'S WAR EFFORT

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I have studied the Federal-subsidy program announced by the Department of Agriculture to encourage increased production of war foods and fibers in 1943. To my regret I must express extreme disappointment at the adoption of this plan, and I shall work for its withdrawal or modification. The fault in the use of subsidies is easily noted, for this approach avoids the question of simple justice to the Nation's farmers. The farmer does not want to be a public beneficiary. He wants no left-handed subsidy based on a system which refuses to admit that he is entitled to fair compensation for his labor.

There is a direct and a simple way to achieve needed food production, and in final analysis it comes to this: Needed food production can be assured if the farmer is placed on a basis of national partnership rather than that of Government beneficiary. It is time that the administration use its authority for fixing farm prices at levels which make production profitable. When that is done, a great part of our farm problems will automatically disappear, along with the complicated regulations and bookkeeping of the present patchwork program.

Obviously, agriculture, the oldest and the largest and perhaps the most essential of the industries, has not received a just share of the national income for many years. Workers in other industries enjoy wage-hour legislation, unemployment compensation, and now the highest wages of all time. But, better returns for his crops, improved living conditions on the farm, and a measure of the security which has blessed the lives of so many Americans have been denied to the farmer. Through the years he has accepted near-starvation prices for his products. He has been forced to look to Government benefits payments for a part of his inadequate income. And now comes this crowning blow. Alone, among all the workers in America's war effort, the farmer is refused adequate compensation for his contribution. Alone, among all the workers in America's war effort, he is to be required to depend for livelihood upon a subsidy rather than fair prices. This kind of thing must not be.

Mr. Speaker, there is no lack of patriotism among farmers. Their creed is Americanism in its simplest form—love of God and love of country. They have responded patriotically to every demand, whether for great production or for great sacrifice. They are anxious to feed the millions who look to them. They will fight a good fight, but they need help. They need Nation-wide understanding and sympathetic appreciation of agriculture's problems and they need leaders who are unafraid to place in the hands of the farmer the tools he needs for the job of feeding the world.

America's decade of deliberate scarcity was ushered out with the thirties. Now the picture is altogether changed. Scarcely more than a year ago there were great surplus stocks. Food was plentiful and cheap. Now, with the exception of wheat and the shorter staples of cotton, the surpluses are gone. Already every housewife knows something of the panic that goes with real or threatened food shortage. This has taken place almost overnight, and agriculture's big job has become production—all-out, tremendous production.

To secure production there must be adequate compensation to make it possible. Returns to the producers always have had and always will have a direct bearing on production. In their efforts to control inflation, our Government overlooked the danger of establishing crop prices at or below the mounting costs of crop production. Unwittingly it contributed to a possible critical shortage of the food and fiber necessary for our armed forces, our civilian population, and our allies. There is but one satisfactory solution. Farm crop prices must be increased. Subsidies will not do the job in the American way.

I see but two roads ahead for American agriculture. The administration can use its authority for fixing farm crop prices at reasonable levels which permit fair returns, or the American public must prepare to embrace forever a system of farm benefit or subsidy payments. I fear that administration spokesmen are bound to the latter policy. Officials of the Department of Agriculture declare that subsidies to keep food prices where they are and to encourage farmers to produce those crops most needed in the war effort may well save the taxpayers money in the end. In other words, their position is that subsidies may be necessary as a war measure to prevent inflation and to secure production. Their case places undue emphasis as usual on the contribution of farm crop prices to the threat of an inflation spiral. Actually, inflation is a securely chained bugaboo if those in authority have the courage to use legislation which has been provided for its control. It is a poor excuse for keeping farm prices at present levels.

We must look beyond today's farm picture, Mr. Speaker. Even the requirements of war, however great we know them to be, must not blind us to the tasks of the future. Whatever the remedy, America's farm ills must be cured. They are not now being cured. Agriculture is too important to our way of life to permit its collapse from gradual starvation. Its problems present a challenge which will not forever accept postponement. In this great world struggle for the preservation of American ideals the American farmer must also have his chance to build his resources and strengthen his faith, and in the triumph of peace to enjoy his share in the victory.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from a Boston newspaper. I further ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address I delivered before a meeting of the Rural Electric Cooperatives at St. Louis, Mo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

LET'S GET RID OF THE JAPS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I was interested in what the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] had to say. While we are all excited about the Casablanca incident, we must not overlook the fact that our permanent enemy in this world is Japan.

The Japs have been most treacherous in times of peace and are most beastly cruel in times of war. They have betrayed every confidence we have ever reposed in them. Their inhuman treatment of war prisoners is shocking to every instinct of civilization.

Whatever else may happen, remember that if our civilization is to continue to exist and if we are to drive them back and free ourselves of the humiliation they have attempted to impose upon us, we must forever drive the power of those savage apes from the face of the earth.

The American people are not going to be satisfied until Japan is destroyed.

I wish our allies in this war would give us air bases now close enough to Japan that we can blow hell out of Tokio and destroy the Japanese Empire for all time to come.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GALE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

CREATION OF A COMMITTEE ON AVIATION

Mr. GALE. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to bore you with an account of the place which aviation will play in the future economy of the United States—that, I think, is perfectly obvious. Any schoolboy will tell you that air transport will be a commonplace occurrence. Apparently, it has taken the urgency of a war to really push aviation. If I recall correctly, prior to 1914 men were flying planes sitting out in front of a contraption which looked like an egg crate. Four years of war and terrific competition saw a most outstanding development. So much of a development that in the spring of 1919, Alcock and Brown flew the Atlantic. All this progress, mind you, in 4 years.

It is quite reasonable to expect that aircraft development will follow a similar pattern due to the bitter competition for air supremacy in this war.

It is quite conceivable that a new type of motor may appear, a new type of landing gear and an entirely new conception of flying. The stories and rumors which emanate from the test grounds at Wright field would lead one to believe that there literally is no ceiling on aircraft development.

Certainly if the United States steps out into the world after the war, and I think all of us agree that such a move is part of our destiny, aircraft will be the link between the hundred and one frontiers and the homeland. Other forms of transportation will not be displaced, they will be supplemented. Obviously, ships will carry heavy cargoes, obviously freight trains will carry heavy and bulky freight, obviously automobiles will travel the highways, but over and above will fly the transport planes of the future. This is not a prophecy—this is not a guess—but an absolute certainty.

If Congress is to resume its former important place in the Government, it must take full advantage of these changes which are certain to occur. We must openly recognize the importance of air transports as an integral part of the lifeblood of the American economy. It is not too soon now to begin thinking about such changes. Time is shorter than we think. To authorize now a new standing committee on aviation is the only logical procedure for Congress to follow. It is the intelligent thing to do and we must do it not next year or the year after next, when it is too late, but now.

The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee is a very important body and has fulfilled efficiently and well its functions. However, that group is already overworked in many categories and has its hands completely full with surface transportation. Believe me, this is no criticism of the efficiency and the capabilities of that committee, but in all fairness we cannot expect one committee to do everything, to handle legislation dealing with railroads, motor transportation, and barges is a tremendous order in itself in addition to the thousand and one other things that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee now handles. Without any question, to heap further duties, which might assume considerable proportions in a post-war period, would be riding a free horse to death and taking advantage of an exceedingly hard-working group. The supervision of aeronautics will be a field completely separate by itself, just as different from surface transportation as the dead past is from the future, and aviation should very definitely have a committee specializing in this one particular field. I sincerely hope that the House will follow the only logical, intelligent, and farsighted policy, namely, to authorize the creation of a Committee on Aviation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DEWEY] for 20 minutes.

PAYMENT OF 1942 TAXES

Mr. DEWEY. Mr. Speaker, I presume that in common with my fellow Members a fair percentage of mail coming in from not only our own districts, but from all sections of the country, contains expressions of opinion in regard to the so-called pay-as-you-go plan of taxation. We have already heard several most scholarly explanations of the Ruml plan, and all those who have taken the opportunity of studying our colleagues' clear dissertations are familiar with the subject.

Mr. Speaker, in taking the time of the House this afternoon I propose speaking only in regard to the transition from our present form of tax payment to a current basis, which I think is puzzling to everyone and I know is puzzling to me to find a practical solution.

Section 11 of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended by the act of 1942, reads in pertinent part as follows:

> There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each tax year upon the net income of every individual a normal tax of 6 percent.

Section 12 contains a like provision with respect to surtaxes. I judge from this that the law definitely states that a tax is now due, although not collectible until March 15, 1943. I also know from my correspondence that it is the desire of the individual taxpayer to commence as soon as possible paying future taxes on a current basis. The query at once arises, How is such a thing possible and at the same time take care of the 1942 tax, particularly when one considers the very high rates imposed under the existing law?

In fact, the tax rates are so high that after a certain point in the rate structure is reached, 1 year's income would fall far short of paying the taxes for 2 years. I mention this to show the difficulty of collecting 2 years' taxes in 1.

There are very few individuals who are sufficiently farsighted to have set aside out of their monthly or weekly earnings a reserve for taxation, even if they had known what reserve was necessary. It must be remembered that no tax bill was given to the public until 9 months of 1942 had passed. In fact, not until October.

A further difficulty must be taken into account. The lowering of the exemptions in the 1942 law will bring in as new taxpayers a group estimated at over 7,000,000 persons. I assume that a great number of these new taxpayers are workmen and mechanics who only commenced receiving full-time jobs at good pay as a result of the war effort, and I further think that it is fair to assume that many of these people have only recently paid off private debts on account of mortgage indebtedness or living expenses. Hence, I doubt very much that even if they had had the knowledge and experience as a taxpayer, they would have had the resources with which to set up a reserve for their 1942 tax liability.

The proposed law, commonly known as pay-as-you-go out of current earnings, will probably contemplate the withholding at the source of a certain percentage of weekly or monthly wages or revenue. Where income is not so withheld, it will be incumbent on the taxpayer to make a periodic remittance to the Treasury on the taxpayer's estimated annual income for the year 1943.

The President in his recent report to the Congress stated that he would ask for additional revenue in the amount of $16,000,000,000. Hence, the people of the country may expect the tax rates to be increased, and that a further percentage of income from salary, or whatever source it may be, will go to the support of our war effort. This being the case, it would seem utterly impossible to add to these increasing taxes, the total tax now due for the year 1942.

The answer to this problem to me is self-evident. If we cannot pay all of the taxes due for the taxpaying year of 1942 at one time on top of the 1943 current taxes, we might solve the problem by modifying the 1942 taxes and paying them in installments over a number of years.

The Treasury Department, while not having as yet offered any definite proposal, suggested that the 1942 tax burden might be eased by eliminating the low surtax brackets in estimating the 1942 individual tax liability. While I have made a number of estimates as to the percentage tax liability resultant of such procedure, I am not at present ready to offer any suggestions as to what uniform reduction in rates should be made. I am, however, ready to state that a reasonable uniform reduction of the surtax rates and the elimination of the 1942 normal tax would eliminate millions of small taxpayers, many of whom are in the armed forces, from whom it would be difficult to collect any appreciable revenue without an expense almost equivalent to the revenue collected. Naturally, in fairness and justice, any reduction of rates at the bottom should be uniformly carried through the entire rate schedule for individual incomes.

I cannot help but believe the relief afforded by this means to the new taxpayers would have a most beneficial psychological effect and would prepare the way for a prompt and willing response to any policy of withholding tax that may be inaugurated for 1943 income.

Now, let us consider what would become of the tax liability of the larger individual taxpayers with, for example, a net income of $4,000 or more, who although the 1942 tax rates have been reduced, yet will still have a tax liability for 1942. These individual income taxes will run from small amounts to the very large sums due, even under reduced rates, from the recipients of large salaries or revenue. The small taxes can undoubtedly be paid off in a rather short period, but the larger taxes, unless reserves have been set aside for the payment, will have to be paid in installments over a period of years.

I should like to digress at this moment from the consideration of taxes and tax payments to that of the national revenue. As I have stated, the President has estimated that in the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1943, it will be necessary to raise revenue by taxation and savings in the amount of about $50,000,000,000. This money will be used not only for the ordinary expenses of the Government, but principally to pay the cost price of the materials of war. I can assure my colleagues that neither the Navy Department nor the War Department nor the other expending agencies are interested whether the dollar they are spending is a 1942 tax dollar or a 1943 tax dollar. In fact, it might be a 1933 or 1934 tax dollar obtained from Federal estates taxes of estates that have elected to pay their death duties over a period of 10 years at 4 percent interest on the deferred payments as is permitted by existing law. This being the case, any arrangements we may make to permit the 1942 tax money to enter into our cash revenue system will have three effects: First, of increasing the revenue; second, the increase of revenue would offset an increase of tax rate that would be necessary to produce the amount of the 1942 tax installment cash; and third, the taxpayers' liability to the Government for the 1942 tax would be gradually liquidated.

To return again to the proposed pay-as-you-go plan and the 1942 liability. For the sake of argument let us assume that the 1942 taxpayer is permitted to pay his modified tax liability in installments over 10 years or 120 months. The question immediately arises, What if the taxpayer dies before his liability to the Government is liquidated and there is nothing in his estate upon which to levy? For example, the taxpayer may have been entirely dependent upon a salary and such estate as he may have may be in tax-exempt insurance. This contingency can be covered by insurance protection. You are all familiar with the purchase of an automobile upon the installment plan. It is quite customary for the automobile agent to add a sufficient sum to the installment payment to pay the premium on a fire and theft insurance policy in case the automobile should be stolen or destroyed prior to the completion of its purchase.

I offer a simple insurance plan as a possible solution of the perplexing problem of paying the 1942 tax. During the study I have been making of this whole subject I called upon the Veterans' Administration. I believe no officers of our Government have had a more specialized experience in insurance than they. I propounded my problem to the Assistant Administrator in charge of finance and insurance. He is confident that he can work out a simple scale of actuarial factors which can be applied for every age from the cradle to the grave. If the factor applicable to the age of the taxpayer be applied by the taxpayer to his tax liability for 1942 as modified, the annual constant installment will be determined requisite to liquidate the said taxpayer's 1942 tax in 10 years, and also to provide an insurance fund to insure the Government against any loss of revenue due to the death of an individual taxpayer prior to complete liquidation of the modified 1942 tax claim. There will also be included a low interest charge as an incentive to the taxpayer to make prepayment of his tax claim should he be in a position to do so.

To express the idea less technically, the plan proposes to permit the individual 1942 taxpayer to pay off his modified tax claim in either 10 annual or 120 monthly installments. The installment payments will be so computed that besides liquidating his tax liability they will provide a fund to insure the Treasury against any loss due to death of a taxpayer prior to complete liquidation of his indebtedness, and also pay the Treasury interest at a low rate on deferred payments. Commuted value of future installments will be provided in case of prepayment, and there is little doubt but what many of the larger individual taxpayers will take advantage of this, for the reason that they have probably been in the habit of accruing taxes to meet their tax liability, but for those of more moderate means and revenue, the burden will be greatly lightened.

It may be contended that such a plan does not put the individual taxpayer on a current basis and that he is actually paying his current taxes plus an additional sum to liquidate his 1942 modified tax liability. Such a criticism might be properly sustained if our tax rates were static. They are not; it can be almost accepted that taxes are on the increase—that what the Government needs is more actual cash revenue, and if it does not get it by picking up cash from the 1942 tax liability, it will get it by raising the tax rates to obtain the same amount of money from current taxes.

I recognize that I have drawn a picture of this proposal with very broad strokes and that there are many technical details that I have not covered. I have forborne to do so for the sake of simplicity of presentation. I do believe, however, the insured installment tax plan of liquidating the individual 1942 tax liability will permit a speedy transition to a current collection of taxes. Further, it will relieve the Treasury of a perplexing problem of collecting millions of small tax items from embarrassed taxpayers. While some relief will be granted to larger taxpayers, no "windfalls" will be possible. Last, but most important, insurance is provided against loss of revenue by death.

I hope the idea is worthy of consideration by my colleagues of the House and my experienced associates of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. GALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWEY. Yes.

Mr. GALE. I agree perfectly in the necessity for a pay-as-you-go plan, but does not the gentleman think that as a part of that plan, and a necessary part of it, there should be adequate provision for collecting these taxes at the source? After all, about 70 percent of income-tax payers will be people on salaries or wages, and in order to get money into the Treasury, which, after all, is pretty important to the Government, we will have to have a broad pay-roll deduction policy.

Mr. DEWEY. I thank my colleague for his question, and I thoroughly agree with him. The whole purpose is to simplify our tax system by getting on a pay-as-you-go basis so that tax revenue may be collected at the source, and immediately turned over to the Treasury. We have had experience in social security, and it would be a matter of employing virtually the same system with respect to wages and other income such as from bonds and shares of stock. As I have stated, the taxpayer could estimate his income and make monthly payments directly on account of his estimate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWEY. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If I understand the gentleman correctly, he is dealing primarily with the problem of the 1942 income tax liability?

Mr. DEWEY. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And that, to go along with such pay-as-you-go plan as Congress may adopt?

Mr. DEWEY. Correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me ask the gentleman this question, if he cares to consider it at this time, and if not I shall not press the question. First, is the gentleman in favor of it, and, second, does he recommend that the income-tax liability now standing against the taxpayer on his 1942 income be remitted or canceled out or done away with entirely in any way?

Mr. DEWEY. I do not think that it is possible to cancel all of 1942 taxes. However, as I stated, I do believe, and I make no suggestion as to amount, that if we omit the normal tax for 1942 and drop down by one or two brackets the percentage on through the entire rate schedule we would thereby wipe out the tax liability of a lot of small taxpayers from whom it would be difficult to collect taxes—and that includes many men in the armed services—that would accomplish a desirable end.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And the gentleman makes that a part of his plan to handle these 1942 taxes?

Mr. DEWEY. I offer the insured installment tax plan as a suggestion to be considered by the Ways and Means Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 10 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair informs the gentleman from New Jersey that there are other special orders.

Mr. McLEAN. Notwithstanding that, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWEY. Yes.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I am very much interested in the approach the gentleman has taken on this subject, and I have, I believe, more faith in his particular judgment on this particular subject than perhaps that of anyone else in the House. I make this suggestion: Rather than dropping the tax liability, as far as the 1942 tax is concerned, down by percentage points, thereby giving the big taxpayer a windfall, why not make a flat exemption of possibly $200, thus wiping out all small accounts?

Mr. DEWEY. I think that is a matter that I would not want to argue here on the floor at present, because there are too many elements that go into a matter like that. I think, however, that if you are going to make any modification, it should be a flat percentage, reaching all the way through the 1942 rate schedule and not be on a dollar basis, because $200 at the bottom has an entirely different effect than $200 at the top. I believe, however, the thought deserves study.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWEY. I yield to my distinguished colleague on the committee.

Mr. KNUTSON. Carrying the "soak the rich" proposal just a step further, it might be well to have the RECORD show at this point that the so-called very rich are now paying 88 percent of their income to the Federal Government, leaving them 12 percent to pay all other costs, including State income taxes.

Mr. GALE. As I understand it, you agree with the advisability of a pay-as-you-go plan, but not quite to the extent of Mr. Ruml's plan? In other words, not of completely crossing off the 1942 obligation. Is that correct?

Mr. DEWEY. That is quite correct. I might say to my colleague that Mr. Ruml sets the tax clock ahead, completely eliminating 1942 taxes. The plan that I propose only modifies the 1942 taxes and makes them more easily collectible. When one considers that the 1942 tax bill will bring in over 7,000,000 new taxpayers who have never thought of Federal income taxes before, the cost of collection and the burden on these taxpayers will be something terrific. I would like to have the 1942 tax modification made. I do not believe in favoritism, and if you are going to modify the rate structure the modification must go to all taxpayers.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman bear with me further?

Mr. DEWEY. I yield to my colleague from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have been very anxious to get into the RECORD for the benefit of my constituents advance opinions and observations of the members of the Ways and Means Committee. In view of the fact that the gentleman is a member of that committee, I want to submit this question: In that capacity and based upon your past experience in handling Government fiscal affairs as an official of the Treasury Department, do you believe that the people of this country can sanely go along with that portion of the Ruml plan which cancels out the 1942 tax liability, with the obligations we have assumed and with the commitments we have made and with the disbursements we have to meet? Do you believe that we can sanely go along with Mr. Ruml on that part of his program?

Mr. DEWEY. I would like to say to my colleague from Michigan that I have mentioned here the fact that it is revenue that the Government needs. It is cash revenue to pay the various obligations. I do not think it makes much difference what the date on the dollar is, but I hold with the gentleman that it would be bad for the morals of this country to forgive 1 year's taxes. However, I do think there should be a modification made so that they would be as little burdensome as possible.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, the gentleman wants to make it possible for us to meet these obligations?

Mr. DEWEY. Yes.

Mr. McLEAN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DEWEY. I yield to my colleague from New Jersey.

Mr. McLEAN. Let up assume that the 1942 taxes are evaded and that the taxpayer must pay his 1943 taxes, based upon his income for 1943, the flow of revenue to the Treasury would not be affected in any way?

Mr. DEWEY. In no way whatsoever.

Mr. McLEAN. Now, assuming that there would be a loss to the Treasury, when would that loss be felt? Is it not a fact that it would not be felt until some time long in the future, and then only gradually over several years, as the various obligors die? Therefore, would it not be so much of an advantage to the Treasury to increase the flow of revenue annually by getting on a more business-like basis and take our taxes out of current income and apply to our present situation that principle of the income tax, that the date of payment should not be so far deferred as to hazard the collection of taxes?

Mr. DEWEY. My colleague has asked me two questions. I would like to answer the first one first. The flow to the Treasury would not be interrupted. In fact, I think it would be increased and better collected when we get on a pay-as-you-go basis and withholding at the source; but I would like to say that I have suggested here an insured installment tax plan that will not lose any portion of the modified 1942 taxes. One can apply an insurance factor that will pay the taxes in case of the death of any taxpayer before the completion of his 10 annual payments, or 120 monthly payments.

Mr. McLEAN. I want to emphasize my thought, that in the consideration of this whole matter we have had in mind not losing a sou. We would like to have the Treasury have its cake and eat it too; but there are advantages to the Treasury in this change that ought not be lost sight of. There would be very great advantages to our fiscal system if we would forget about the small contingencies that might arise in the future, in comparison with the present advantages to the Treasury.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DEWEY. I yield to my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The phase of this question that concerns me is that if we do not adopt something along the line of the Ruml plan, perhaps with some modifications, you are going to drive thousands and thousands of the smaller taxpayers into the grasp of the loan sharks.

Mr. DEWEY. I agree.

Mr. KNUTSON. The loan sharks charge 2 and 3 percent per month interest under the State laws. In Minnesota they charge 3 percent. If some individual in the lower brackets were called upon to pay two taxes in 1943, that is, 1942 and 1943, during the calendar year 1943, he would have to go to some loan shark and place himself in his power.

We virtually would sell them into perpetual slavery to the loan sharks.

Mr. DEWEY. I agree with the gentleman.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be permitted to continue for 5 additional minutes, because we have taken up so much of his time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DEWEY. I agree with the gentleman from Minnesota thoroughly, that it would be quite impossible to pay 2 years' taxes in 1 year. I feel, therefore, that the modification of the rates at the bottom to relieve these new taxpayers would be very beneficial. I also want to have it fair and based on ability to pay, and on justice, to carry it straight through the rate schedule. Then if the liability of the larger taxpayers is spread over a 10-year period, supported by this insurance proposal the Treasury will be protected against loss of money through death of the taxpayer.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWEY. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. The gentleman from Illinois is such a student of finance that I hate to get into a discussion with him, but he has presented a matter that constitutes a problem for all of us; that is, what to do with the 1942 tax liability. This is going to be the issue that will have to be decided in the Ways and Means Committee; there is no question about it.

We can use the 1942 tax liability as a basis for 1943 taxes and the Treasury will not lose substantial revenue if it loses any revenue whatever.

The gentleman's proposal, as I understand it, is to reduce the income-tax collection for 1942, 19 percentage points, 6 percent normal and 13-percent surtaxes.

Mr. DEWEY. I do not recommend any particular percentage, but that in general was what I had in mind.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. That is the thought the gentleman had in mind. We all know that a number of taxpayers will be current; there is no question about that, if we increase the 1943 rates about 5 percent; but a reduction of 6 percent normal and 13-percent surtaxes on the 19-percent bracket income taxpayers makes a windfall for the 88-percent-bracket taxpayer just as much as the Ruml plan so far as windfalls are concerned; so I think we shall have to watch that at the same time.

Mr. DEWEY. It has never entered my mind that it should apply unfairly to the poor or to the so-called rich. I should like to see a full consideration of the question of method of payment.

What the Government needs now is cash revenue. I believe an insured installment plan will liquidate the 1942 situation. The 1942 tax situation must be so disposed of that it will not be a subject for discussion in the future.

I do not consider that which we are required to pay as being taxation. We are all willing to pay to support our country in time of war, but I do not call it taxation. Rather it is the obligation of the citizens to their country to give all they possibly can; and they do it willingly, but one would scarcely call it a tax system.

In order that we can supply the revenue our country needs, let us move in the direction of bringing ourselves to a current system of pay-as-you-go and collect-at-the-source. At the same time let us modify and pay in some way that will be fair and equitable the 1942 liability. If we do not pay this liability it means we shall have to increase the rates in 1943 to pick up the money we did not get which should have come out of 1942 taxes.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Providing there is a loss in collections for 1943 taxes over 1942; that is the only difference. Many of us seem to forget that these taxpayers have been paying taxes in 1942 out of 1942 income but on a 1941 tax liability. The tax on last year's salary is not paid out of last year's earnings but out of this year's earnings. We must find some way to establish this new system whereby the 1942 tax liability will not be wiped out or that revenue lost to the Government. It could be spread over the years 1943, 1944, and 1945. That would take care of the larger taxpayers and the estates.

As to the insurance suggestion I do not believe I could go along with it, for it places an additional liability on the taxpayer, not only the liability of paying 1943 tax liability in 1943 but added to that is an insurance premium.

Mr. DEWEY. He pays a very small additional charge as an insurance premium and his family is protected against claims of the Treasury for his unpaid balance.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I realize that, but it is an additional burden.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article which impressed me as being one of the most concise analyses of the lend-lease situation that has been published, an article by Walter Lippmann.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from Mr. Keller, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, relative to the pay-as-you-go tax plan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next after disposition of business on the Speaker's table and other special orders, I may be allowed to proceed for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include Senator Vest's tribute to a dog.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, almost everybody loves a dog. Anytime I find a man, woman, or child who does not love a dog, I become suspicious of them, and anytime I find the average dog that takes an immediate dislike to somebody—of course, after due smell to satisfy his curiosity—then I am immediately suspicious of that person.

What the late Senator George Vest said in his immortal address about dogs is all too true. In my extension of remarks, I ask to include his speech at this point.

DEFENSE OF THE DOG

Gentlemen of the jury: The best friend a man has in the world may turn against him and become his enemy. His son or daughter that he has reared with loving care may prove ungrateful. Those who are nearest and dearest to us, those whom we trust with our happiness and our good name may become traitors to their faith. The money that a man has he may lose. It flies away from him, perhaps, when he needs it most. A man's reputation may be sacrificed in a moment of ill-considered action. The people who are prone to fall on their knees and do us honor when success is with us may be the first to throw the stone of malice when failure settles its cloud upon our heads. The one absolutely unselfish friend that man can have in this selfish world, the one that never deserts him, the one that never proves ungrateful or treacherous, is his dog. A man's dog stands by him in prosperity and poverty, in health and sickness. He will sleep on the cold ground where the wintry winds blow and the snow drives fiercely, if only he may be near his master's side. He will kiss the hand that has no food to offer; he will lick the wounds and sores that come in encounter with the roughness of the world. He guards the sleep of his pauper master as if he were a prince. When all other friends desert, he remains. When riches take wings and reputation falls to pieces, he is as constant in his love as the sun in its journey through the heavens.

If fortune drives the master forth an outcast in the world, friendless and homeless, the faithful dog asks no higher privilege than that of accompanying him, to guard against danger, to fight against his enemies, and when the last scene of all comes, and death takes the master in its embrace, and his body is laid away in the cold ground, no matter if all other friends pursue their way, there by the graveside will the noble dog be found, his head between his paws, his eyes sad, but open in alert watchfulness, faithful and true even in death.

Mr. Speaker, I have a dog—a little white and liver Springer Spaniel—that I have had for almost the entire 10 years of his life. He is a splendid hunting dog and has been a great companion of mine through all these years. He has flown with me for hundreds of hours through the air; has hunted with me each fall and I can honestly confess that at one time he actually helped save my life. I think a lot of that dog and, therefore, I was much upset several weeks ago when that dog disappeared on New Year's Day on his customary morning run. I advertised constantly for 2 weeks, not only in the four daily papers in the District, but likewise in two of the colored weekly papers. His disappearance was broadcast over the radio on several occasions and I am sincerely appreciative of the cooperation I received from all of these several avenues of information.

I am very glad to say that 2 weeks to a day after my dog disappeared, I received a telephone call late at night from a doctor and his wife who had located the dog 12 miles from the Capital down along the shores of the Potomac and who identified him by a name tag attached to his leather harness. When I recovered the dog, he was a pitiful sight to behold and indeed it took almost a week in a veterinary hospital to pull him through and restore him to health.

During the time my dog was gone, I made inquiry into the laws of the District, into the laws of the several States, and into our Federal laws, which might afford some protection to these poor animals in the future.

After all, Mr. Speaker, we in the District, we in my home State of Michigan, and in practically every State of the Union, are required to pay a license fee or a dog tax in order to keep a dog. I have been told on good authority that in the District of Columbia, for instance, the taxpayers last year paid approximately $70,000 in dog taxes. Just what does the taxpayer get in return for that expenditure? I was amazed to find that there are very few modern statutes on the books which give these tax-paid dogs or their owners in the District any protection. Consequently, I am introducing legislation today seeking to afford some measure of protection.

It is perfectly true that in the District of Columbia, as elsewhere, an unlicensed dog is subject to being picked up and being deposited in the pound, and by statute that dog is, after a reasonable length of time, subject to disposal. We have such a pound in the District of Columbia; and may I say at this time that I think the District of Columbia should congratulate itself on the splendid manner in which that pound is being conducted, and the people of the District should pride themselves on the sincerity, the industry, and the ability of its poundmaster and his assistants. I just previously stated that the District collected approximately $70,000 in dog taxes last year. Of this sum, the District fathers generously appropriated approximately $16,000 for the operation of the pound and its designated duty of picking up stray dogs. Almost one-quarter of this generous appropriation is returned to the District treasury by the poundmaster through the sale or return of dogs which have been thus acquired, after he has been fully satisfied that the proper owners have redeemed their dogs and paid their proper license charges and other fees, or after he has been satisfied that the dogs will not be thus reclaimed and that a proper new home has been found for the animal.

But, Mr. Speaker, while my dog Curley was gone I was amazed to find that there are very few laws on the books giving the properly constituted police authorities in the District an even break to cope with the problem of lost dogs. I was amazed, and very much disturbed, to learn that there is a widespread racket prevalent in the District of Columbia, and prevalent in many States of this country, and especially is it virulent along the eastern seaboard. I learned from indisputable evidence that, unfortunately, there are at large in the District of Columbia and elsewhere those who will deliberately steal a dog and hold him for ransom, if you please; those who will pick up a dog and watch for advertisements with the word "reward" appended thereto, and who then mysteriously find the dog that has been missing. There are those who make a practice of stealing dogs for transportation to other cities for disposal through so-called dealers in pets, and, perhaps worst of all, there are those all over the Nation who make a habit of stealing hunting dogs, transporting them hundreds of miles across State lines, and then disposing of them as trained hunting dogs through surreptitious advertisements in the smaller sporting publications. These—perhaps the worst of the lot—advertise trained hunting dogs at nominal prices and dispose of these stolen valuable hunting dogs at absurdly low figures.

There is a second class of devastators of dogs that I think we ought to deal with and that is the hit-run driver. In most States outside the District of Columbia it is a crime for a person to injure a dog by means of an automobile or otherwise and then inhumanly fail to give that dog proper assistance or at least report the facts to the proper authorities. A person who will hit and injure a dog and then drive away is the type of person who would just as soon hit-run an individual. There is one third type that we must cope with and that is the dastardly inhuman individual who will set out poison for a dog. That inconsequential inhuman being, in his own ignorance, apparently does not realize that there are such treasures as little children in the world, and in his stupidity fails to realize that a young child is curious and will put most things into its mouth.

Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced two bills which I hope will be speedily reported by the proper committes and which I think will adequately cope with the above-named situations.

The first bill I have introduced, I hope and expect will be assigned to the District of Columbia Committee, because it deals specifically with the problem within the District. It is a very simple bill which I can briefly describe, as follows: It provides for a penalty in the form of a maximum fine of $100 or a jail sentence of 90 days, or both, for anyone who harbors a dog without the owner's consent and who does not report that dog with its complete description, together with his own name and address and telephone number, if any, to the District poundmaster within a period of 48 hours. It provides a similar penalty for anyone who injures a dog by means of an automobile or anything else and who does not stop or administer such help as possible, and who fails to report the circumstance together with the description of the animal, and his name and address, to a regular police officer of the District. It provides further that a maximum fine of $300 or imprisonment for 90 days be levied against anyone convicted of setting out poison.

I have introduced a second bill today which I assume will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which would make it a Federal offense for anyone to transport across State lines any licensed dog that has knowingly been stolen and provides a penalty for anyone who shall knowingly buy such a dog. Mr. Speaker, I think that every person in this country, and everyone in the District of Columbia, who has any regard for a dog should certainly join me in working for the speedy enactment of these two pieces of legislation. Dog owners have a right to expect a proper sense of protection for their dogs, otherwise we have no right to tax them for the privilege of owning a dog; and those who would traffic in stolen dogs merit just condemnation and just penalties.

In conclusion, may I say two things. I think one of the surest ways of providing perfectly humane and adequate identification, as a means of protecting dogs, is through the process of tattooing them on the inside of the ear. This is absolutely painless and can be done at a very low cost. Most valuable dogs are proudly registered by their owners with the American Kennel Club, which serves as the clearinghouse for registered dogs in this country, and which keeps a record of the pedigrees of such registered dogs. My dogs are having their American Kennel Club register number tattooed on the inside of their ears. I recommend it to others. It is a very prevalent practice in Canada. And lastly, may I commend to all of you your support for, and your approval of, the admirable work being carried on in the District of Columbia and all over the country by the various civic-minded, humanely minded private or semipublic organizations, who seek the proper and humane protection of the dumb animals, such as the Animal Rescue League, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, The Tail-waggers, and many others.

Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate that this Nation is at war. Our primary thoughts must be directed toward the successful prosecution of this war. This legislation should require no debate, should not command any appreciable amount of time on the part of any Member of this House, nor of any committee of this House. The dog is playing his full part in this war, and as to verification of that I respectfully refer you to the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard. The dog played a valuable part in the last war. The dog and the dog owners who willingly give up those dogs to the service, whenever acceptable, are doing their part in the winning of this war. Those valuable animals deserve the protection offered by these bills and likewise those dogs, just as human beings, who are physically incapable of filling their niche in the war program still have the right to the protection offered by this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that in behalf of both of these bills I may have the unanimous support of this House in behalf of our true friends—our best friends—who cannot speak for themselves, who cannot vote for themselves—your dog and my dog.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a speech I made and an address made by Paul A. Strachan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on two subjects, in one to include a letter and in the other to include a short statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] earlier in the afternoon mentioned a new subsidy proposal which was recently announced by the Secretary of Agriculture. I desire at this time to further discuss that proposal as well as our entire subsidy policy as far as it pertains to subsidies which are designed to keep down the prices of farm products.

I feel that this is of the greatest immediate importance in connection with our efforts to produce an adequate food supply and is fully as important from the standpoint of our future agricultural economy.

I refer particularly to those subsidies designed to keep down the prices of agricultural commodities which are being put into effect without any discussion or consideration of the matter by the Congress.

For the purpose of this discussion I want to refer to two kinds of subsidies—one, the subsidies which have been paid in the past under legislation authorized by Congress for the purpose of making up a part of the difference between farm prices in the market place and what Congress has determined to be fair or parity prices. Tied up with these subsidies have been programs of production control and soil conservation.

The second type of subsidy has come into the picture only recently. It has been made necessary in the main by reason of price ceilings placed upon agricultural products by the O. P. A. and its ostensible purpose is to encourage production. This type of subsidy has not to my knowledge been authorized by Congress either directly or indirectly, with the exception that the Secretary of Agriculture has been given authority to give assurances to farmers that in the cases of some commodities a certain minimum price will be maintained for the commodity during the war and for a certain period thereafter.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. The gentleman knows that when the new Administrator of the Price Administration took office he was quoted in the press as stating that it was the intent of Congress in passing the Price Control Act that an administration should be set up for the protection of the consumer. He made that very clear. I am wondering by what authority the Secretary of Agriculture is given this authority which the gentleman has just mentioned and if the Secretary of Agriculture abandons the protection of the producer and his prices, who is going to speak for them?

Mr. HOPE. I think the gentleman's observations are very much in point and I am in entire accord with what he has just stated.

The authority to which I was referring when I yielded to the gentleman from South Dakota has been exercised in the case of some commodities through Government purchases at the minimum price, a good illustration being the purchase and resale of oil-bearing crops by the Commodity Credit Corporation. This operation, of course, would not have been necessary except for the low ceilings placed upon fats and oils by the O. P. A. If the prices of fats and oils had been permitted to rise naturally, the price of all oil-bearing agricultural products would have gone above the minimum price and no government purchases would have been needed. In the operation just mentioned the procedure followed was for the Commodity Credit Corporation to purchase the product at the minimum price and then immediately resell it to processors at a lower price based upon the O. P. A. ceiling on fats and oils. The ultimate effect, of course, was the payment of a subsidy to the producer by the Federal Government.

In other instances subsidies have been paid outright. Such a subsidy is now in effect on Cheddar cheese. For a time subsidies of this type were being paid to milk producers in the New York City and one or two other milksheds. This subsidy, however, has now been abandoned.

Earlier this week the Secretary of Agriculture announced a program involving the payment of $100,000,000 in Federal subsidies to the producers of certain crops which are badly needed in connection with the war effort, the crops involved being sweetpotatoes, soybeans, grain sorghums, peanuts, flax, and dried peas.

This subsidy will be paid directly to farmers, not on all of his acreage of the crop in question but upon that part of his acreage above 90 percent and less than 110 percent of the goal assigned to the farm in question.

At the present time the House Committee on Agriculture has before it for consideration a bill setting up the machinery by which all of the peanut crop of the United States is to be handled through a Government agency to the exclusion of private dealers and handlers in order that producers of the crop may be subsidized. This is essentially the same operation which was used by the Commodity Credit Corporation during the past crop year in connection with the soybean and flaxseed crops. In each case the Government becomes the sole handler of the commodity, and marketing through any other agency is prohibited.

With the exception previously mentioned by which the Secretary of Agriculture was authorized to fix minimum prices on certain products, there has been no consideration by Congress of these various types of subsidies, nor does it appear that there is any authority for putting the same into effect unless it is contained in some of the sweeping powers given the President under the national defense program. Assuming that those powers do exist, I think it is safe to say that they are being exercised in a manner not contemplated by the Congress at the time they were granted.

I am bringing this matter to the attention of the Congress now because I believe it is high time that congressional consideration be given the matter of whether agricultural prices are going to be permitted to rise in accordance with wages and other prices or whether a permanently lower price level is to be established for agricultural products, supplemented in times like these by subsidies paid out of the Federal Treasury. The subject is of vital importance to everyone and particularly so to those who are dependent, directly or indirectly, upon agriculture for their livelihood. There can be little doubt but what we are going to have a higher price level after the war. This will be necessary in order to discharge the war indebtedness.

It is almost as certain that the level of wages will remain practically as high as it is at present in the post-war period. That was our experience after the last war at a time when labor had nothing like the organization it has now. If, through the use of subsidies, the level of farm prices is kept below the cost of production and below a fair price ratio with other commodities and wages, the disparity between farm prices and other prices which has existed ever since World War No. 1 will be further increased. On the other hand, if subsidies are eliminated and the price of agricultural products permitted to rise in harmony with the wages of labor in industry and the price of other commodities, we can hope for the maintenance of a fair balance between agricultural prices and other prices after the war. We know from experience what happens when we destroy the fair relationship between farm prices and other prices. Loss of buying power on the part of our farm population is bound to result in industrial unemployment and bread lines.

There are other important issues involved. One I have already mentioned. That is whether in the case of some commodities, like oil-bearing products, the Federal Government should become the sole handler of the commodity.

Another vital question is whether in a time of prosperity the taxpayers, either now or in the future, should be called upon to pay subsidies to consumers. All of the subsidies under consideration are subsidies to consumers, although not considered as such by consumers, and in the public mind they are bound to be charged up to agriculture. Is it sound fiscal policy to pay these subsidies out of borrowed money for the benefit of consumers at a time when the greatest threat to inflation is a so-called inflationary gap of unused purchasing power? Why shouldn't consumers devote some of this purchasing power to paying a fair price for farm products now rather than having this amount added to the public debt and loaded on the shoulders of future taxpayers? Looking at it from the standpoint of inflation, isn't it much less inflationary to pay as we go rather than to pile up the public debt through these subsidies? There is a particular reason why these questions should be considered by Congress now. That is because farmers must know now and not next summer what they can depend upon. This subsidy program has been worked out without any authority by Congress and without congressional consideration. However, in the case of the direct subsidies, Congress is going to have to provide the money. The chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CANNON] is quoted in the daily press as stating that Congress will not appropriate the $100,000,000 required for the subsidy program announced by the Secretary of Agriculture earlier in the week.

This afternoon he has again expressed his opposition to the proposal and in this he has been joined by the ranking Republican member of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. I believe that the sentiment of Congress is in accord with the views expressed by these gentlemen. Whether it is or not, the matter should be submitted to Congress now for its consideration. Farmers are not going to go into the subsidy program, and should not be asked to go into it, until there is assurance that the money will be provided. Congress has never passed upon the question of paying subsidies for the purpose of keeping prices down. This question should not be decided by officials in the executive branch of the Government. It involves matters of fundamental governmental policy which should be passed upon by Congress. I am not suggesting at this time the procedure to be followed except to suggest to the executive branch of the Government that it take no further steps in this matter until there is an opportunity for Congress to act.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I would like to make just one observation. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, of which the gentleman speaking is also a member, I feel that the majority of that committee agrees exactly with what the gentleman has said.

Mr. HOPE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. First, I want to congratulate the gentleman for what I think is an outstanding and appropriate statement at this particular moment. To bring this thing right up to the snubbing post, can the gentleman inform the House whether or not the Department of Agriculture, responsible for this new program, now has within its hands the money with which to proceed to pay these subsidies, or must it come to the House for appropriations?

Mr. HOPE. It is my understanding that the Department expects to ask the Congress to appropriate the money. I think the Secretary of Agriculture has made a statement to that effect.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was not informed of that. If they have to come here for the appropriations, we can, we should, and we must do something about it; but if they have the funds in their hands by reason of an appropriation previously made, perhaps they can bull this thing through for the time being.

Mr. HOPE. It is my understanding that they will have to ask for the funds. Some of the subsidies I have discussed can, of course, be provided by existing appropriations to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Commodity Credit Corporation, but the particular one announced by the Secretary recently requires a direct appropriation from the Treasury, as I understand.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. The President's Budget message and the Budget showed that $1,018,000,000 is to be provided for Government subsidies to agriculture. Certainly, that must be appropriated by the House of Representatives or the money cannot be had.

May I also make the observation that in my judgment the asking of these large subsidies for the agricultural interests of the country is a confession of guilt on the part of this Government that the farmers have not been treated fairly.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman is the ranking minority member on the Committee on Agriculture and has given the benefit of his experience to the Members of the House for many months on this very subject. May I ask the gentleman if the Committee on Agriculture, knowing that the farmers of the country are not so much in favor of subsidies but want what their crops are worth, has given any consideration to studying measures to do by direct legislation what you are trying to do indirectly through subsidies; that is, to give the farmer the average cost of production with a fair profit, eliminating this vicious subsidy program which is hanging over the head of the farmer all the time? All the farmer wants is cost of production plus a fair profit.

Mr. HOPE. I may say to the gentleman that bills along that line will probably be introduced in this session of Congress. They have been introduced in previous Congresses. I do not think it is necessary at this time to enact legislation to enable the farmers to receive parity prices if the O. P. A. will simply adjust its ceilings in accordance with the legislation passed by Congress.

The trouble is that the O. P. A., disregarding the laws of Congress, is now putting price ceilings on certain farm products at levels which are below the cost of production and by reason of which it is impossible to get the needed production of those products.

Mr. STEFAN. There is no trouble involved in figuring parity?

Mr. HOPE. No; we have a formula for figuring parity.

Mr. STEFAN. Can the average cost of production be figured out?

Mr. HOPE. I think that can be arrived at; yes.

Mr. STEFAN. If that is true, why does not the O. P. A. in putting a ceiling on farm prices put those prices at cost of production plus a fair profit, instead of going into the intricate matter of subsidies, which are obnoxious to most farmers?

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman is addressing that question to me, but I cannot tell him why the O. P. A. does not do it.

Mr. STEFAN. In the gentleman's address on yesterday he indicated his belief that the O. P. A. is doing something illegal in fixing farm prices below parity.

Mr. HOPE. That is true.

Mr. STEFAN. What is the gentleman's solution of the problem? Would the gentleman suggest that the O. P. A. set a fair price for the farmer, with a bottom on those prices, and that subsidies be eliminated?

Mr. HOPE. I say that if Congress refuses to appropriate money for subsidies the O. P. A. and the Food Administration will be forced to permit farm prices to rise to a point where farmers can afford to produce the needed quantities. That is all we need for the present.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. Does the gentleman feel, then, that it would be a misappropriation for the Department of Agriculture to use money that has been appropriated for the A. A. A. benefit payments to pay for incentive payments or subsidy payments along the lines of the recent announcement?

Mr. STEFAN. But this is in addition to the A. A. A. payments.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

GOVERNMENT REPORTS AND QUESTIONNAIRES

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-seventh Congress, after considerable study of the problems created by the wave of Government reports and questionnaires now swamping American free enterprise, late in the last session enacted Public Law No. 813, known as the Federal Reports Act of 1942. This act directed the Bureau of the Budget to investigate Government methods of collecting statistics and information, and to coordinate and simplify these collection methods.

Certainly this action was a move in the right direction, resulting from a real desire to relieve American enterprise from the deplorable burdens with which it is now saddled. My only criticism of that law is that Congress failed to go far enough, and to act positively enough in the matter. The executive agencies are, in my opinion, still allowed too great discretionary authority to harass and burden the American people.

The existing act suggests that information and statistics be gathered by simplified methods through a single coordinating agency. I agree with that suggestion fully, but I believe we have an agency much better fitted for the job. I believe, also, that Congress should make the simplification and coordination specific and mandatory. Therefore, I urge your support of the proposal I am offering today requiring the Department of Commerce to be the sole agency for the collection and coordination of Government reports and questionnaires.

Self-important little bureaucrats in a dozen different Washington agencies have been running riot in red tape and so overburdening business with paper work that thousands of enterprises simply will not be able to keep up with the demands. A certain percentage of business may be prosperous enough to afford the added costs, but they cannot possibly find the additional personnel to handle all this unnecessary work. The greater portion of American business certainly cannot afford this extra work, even if additional help could be found to handle it. The larger firms may devise ways to struggle along under the burden; but thousands of smaller concerns, already hard-pressed to survive the serious trouble confronting them in the emergency, are simply being driven out of business.

And all this has been happening by the most flagrant abuses of administrative law. The worst offenders among the guilty Federal agencies are interpreting laws in devious ways never remotely intended by the Congress which passed them; and issuing orders and directives to which they are actually attempting to give the force and effect of criminal law. The poor, harassed businessman who finds it impossible to comply with executive demands may actually find himself threatened with criminal prosecution.

All of this has led to almost criminal wastes of time, money, and, worst of all, manpower; and a shameful invasion of private rights. It is high time that Congress issue positive orders, not mere suggestions to the Executive.

We already have in the Bureau of the Census the largest statistical agency in the world, completely staffed and equipped to handle all the fact-finding work necessary to any problem of administration. The job of Government reporting can be turned over to this agency with many real benefits.

In the first place, this agency, realistically administered, will find that at least half of the information now being regularly demanded by little bureaucrats is unnecessary, and that it is uncoordinated and unused after it has been gathered at great expense to business and the Government. In the second place, if the mountains of information already on hand were coordinated, I believe it can be shown that much of the really necessary information is already available right here in Washington, where it is collecting cobwebs and dust in file batteries and storage lofts, forgotten by the bureaucrats who sweated it out of the American people. Finally, by clearing all fact-finding through this single agency, all the duplication of reporting which now haunts American business could be eliminated.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROWE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF CONGRESS

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the Well of this House a fervent appeal was made to the new Members of the Seventy-eighth Congress. It was stated in that appeal that we new Members just came from the touch and thought of the people and that we were expected to revitalize the strength and fortitude of the Members who because of their small number were impotent in their efforts to continue with constitutional government and keep America American.

I cannot speak for all of the new Members, but I can speak, and speak frankly, for myself, even though I may violate the traditions of decorum in my sincere efforts to convey my observations and opinions of what the good people of the Fourteenth District of Ohio were thinking when they unseated a man of professional power and long membership in this House by sending me here.

My people are crying for relief from the weight of a strong centralized governmental yoke. They are asking, yea, even praying, that this Government stop policing their patriotism with thousands of snoopers and tycoons of totalitarianism who harass them and eat out their substance.

I have been here but 1 month and I notice that many Members take this floor every day and recite at length the injustices that are heaped upon the people whom they represent. One day it is the dairy industry, another day it is the wheat farmer, another day it is the small businessman, and then the landlord, and so on through every strata of American life. Nothing is being done to encourage them that relief is anywhere in sight.

It is not my purpose to point a finger of criticism at our President. He appears to be assuming all of the responsibility that was intended that he have under the Constitution and much in addition thereto. If he has any powers above and beyond what this House believes he should have, then the Congress of the United States is alone to blame.

I appreciate that many in this House may feel inclined to rise and defend themselves as opposing acts by this House that have generously given up of the powers that belong here. Gentlemen, you have not given up your powers and the people at home are fully aware of it. They know that past Congresses have abdicated both their power and responsibility. That is why that each time many of the Members of this House come up for reelection without the support of a very popular President, from 60 to 80 are retired to private life.

This House and its Members are under the scrutiny of a hostile electorate. We must stand on our own feet. Under article I, sections 3 and 7 of the Constitution of the United States, the Congress has the power to limit the number of employees and impeach those who do not follow the law as prescribed by this Congress.

Past Congresses have tried the blank-check process and the people are sorely distressed from its effect. Congress has tried the appeasement process to avoid pressure and adverse propaganda from the predatory power seekers, and 107 Members were hung higher than a kite last November. No, sir, gentlemen; we are all on our own and the people are not wasting patience. We had better streamline this Congress and recapture, and exert, the powers that are rightfully ours in behalf of our people. They will make every sacrifice necessary in the war effort, including the blood of their boys, but they are demanding immediate relief from control by a lot of bureaucratic buncombe over their personal lives.

I sit in the office to which my people elected me, and am overwhelmed by our slowness to remedy admitted wrongs. I receive at my office each day a Federal Register with 100 pages of orders and directives that either result from powers granted by the Congress, or a usurpation of the powers that belong to us.

If this Congress does not restrict or prescribe the definite use of the money we appropriate for the next fiscal year, we may as well give the bureaucrats a blank check for $117,000,000,000 and all go home.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE LEND-LEASE PROGRAM

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I have been forced to make the discussion on lend-lease this afternoon because of the impending hearing tomorrow on the extension of the lend-lease bill. It came a little sooner than I had anticipated. However, I want to give the preliminary report, some of which I have verified, and some of the original report which I will continue to verify in coming days. Because of the importance of getting some of this information before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs and the subcommittee on appropriations that will consider the $7,000,000,000 of additional lease-lend appropriations, I make this preliminary report this afternoon.

Several days ago by chance it came to my attention that lease-lend had been forced upon some countries that did not want lease-lend in the first place. In other words, the dollars of our taxpayers, earned by their sweat and toil, are being forced upon countries which want to remain financially independent.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that nations which have not asked for money are being told that they should come and get it?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman is in his right mind, is he not? Is that possible?

Mr. JONES. I say to the gentleman from Michigan that I was as shocked with the report that was made to me as he is now. I was so shocked that I disregarded the rest of the statement and the rest of the story.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. JONES. I attempted to verify, by the best means possible, whether the charges made are absolutely true. I contacted the Lease-Lend Administration and did not get any satisfaction. Then I contacted the Congressional Library, thinking that perhaps their Legislative Reference Service would not have in it the rancor of partisanship, and that they might have that information. They too were denied the information and said no such arrangement existed. Then today, just before coming on the floor of the House, I learned through the Legislative Reference that they had found a publication entitled "The Bermuda Gazette and Colonist," for the issue of October 22, where the charges are substantially verified. I yield now.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman was on the floor the other day when the Member from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE] told about how impossible it is for his constituents to get meat up in the city of Brooklyn. The gentleman has been on the floor, and has listened to these other Members of the House when they have told how their people are short on fodder, on milk, on meat, on bacon, on canned goods. Does the gentleman mean that these other foreign countries are asking for and getting those things when we cannot get them?

Mr. JONES. Let me read to you from the issue of October 22 of the Bermuda Colonist, which was established in 1856, and I presume is a reliable newspaper, or the Congressional Library would not take it.

Mr. RANKIN. Where is it published?

Mr. JONES. In Bermuda.

Mr. RANKIN. The Bermuda Islands?

Mr. JONES. Yes. I hold in my hand a photostat of the issue of October 22, and the issue of October 20; in the October 20 issue, which has the same cap head, and apparently is the same paper as the October 22 issue from which I will quote. It says—

Hamilton, Bermuda, Tuesday, October 20, 1942.—

A Bermuda purchasing commission came to the United States some time before October 20 last year. They went back, and the matter in this publication is a report of that Bermuda purchasing commission. Mr. Tucker, apparently a member of the commission and probably a member of the general assembly, made the following report:

"I hope," he said, "to give the house some more detailed information in regard to shipping at a later stage of this discussion, when I shall move that the house go into secret session."

He referred to lend-lease, and stressed that the house had not been committed.

I quote further:

"I should like to assure the public," he declared, "that there is nothing mysterious about lend-lease, and that no secret commitments of any sort exist."

How different from the method of procedure of our Foreign Affairs: Months after commitments have been made by our executive departments we learn what has happened, sometimes many months afterward. Continuing the quotation:

"No one country," he added, "at the moment was bearing its contribution to the war effort in the form of dollars or sterling." It was simply a matter at the present time of gathering together all essential supplies and allocating them where they would do the most good. "I feel," he said, "that the committee did everything in its power to present Bermuda's case vigorously and accurately. We stressed the fact that Bermuda liked to be financially independent. We stated that for that reason the house of assembly had been adverse to the principle of lend-lease. We met with a courteous reception of our problem. We received attention and every consideration possible, but in the final analysis it resolved itself into the situation where, in my opinion, if we wish certain supplies we must get them through the lend-lease procedure."

I think this is enough to lay the foundation for the Foreign Affairs Committee to investigate, before any new bill extending the present lease-lend law is reported to the House. Why should we not know exactly what is intended by lease-lend? I think every Member of the House had the impression that lease-lend was for the purpose of helping to win the war. If you will look at the fifth report of the President under lease-lend, you will find agreements between the United States and foreign countries as a result of the lease-lend law, which project themselves far into the future, long after the war is over, committing our country to a policy long after arms are laid down. I suggest that you look at the fifth lease-lend report and the succeeding reports, and find how far from our general impressions that law is being administered. We have little idea of what is being done under the basic law that was passed in 1941, and have little conception of what is intended or being done every day without our knowledge.

In October 1941 I called the attention of the House to the fact that there was no prohibition in the lease-lend law or in the rules and regulations of the lease-lend administration that airplanes that we have built with our genius would not be used after this war is ended to bend our people down by competition with our own products, so that we cannot compete in world trade, because we have given of our toil and sweat.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] a moment ago referred to the fact that while these arrangements were being made the people in New York were hungry. On yesterday, I believe it was, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] pointed out the fact that the trouble in New York has been that certain labor racketeers have stood guard at the gates of the city and demanded tribute on every truckload of produce that the farmers of the West and South shipped into New York. That is a tariff. That is where the word "tariff" came from; the port of Tarifa. That is where this tariff racketeering began years ago, probably 100 or 150 years ago. So they demanded a tariff or tribute on every truckload of material that the farmers send in there. Now, since we can only get a small amount of rubber to supply our trucks, the farmers of the country do not feel it incumbent upon them to ship this material to New York City and take the risk and then be robbed at the city gates on every truckload.

Mr. JONES. Now, continuing the discussion on lease-lend——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Along the line the gentleman was speaking, I know there was a great deal in the press several months ago to indicate that our Government was asking these other nations to make known their wants; that we had an ample supply of everything; but I had thought that since a scarcity developed in this country and since our own people were put on rations, that practice had ended and that now we were only giving to those who conceived themselves to be in need, without any prompting from the doers of good.

Mr. JONES. I would say that the Congressional Library Legislative Reference Service reported to me yesterday afternoon that it was absolutely denied that there was any such arrangement as I have reported on Bermuda in any shape or form.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I call attention also to the fact that Bermuda is an ally of ours in this war.

Mr. JONES. I am glad to have the gentleman's contribution, but why should we object if Bermuda, by action of its general assembly, wishes to remain financially independent; wishes to take its place in the stature of the United Nations in helping to win this war? Why should we force upon her the sweat and toil and tears of our American people, if Bermuda wants to continue themselves, as the report indicates?

Mr. RANKIN. Do you mean to say they were able to buy this material and pay for it?

Mr. JONES. I mean to say that they were averse to receiving lease-lend.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that as far as I am individually concerned, where any of our allies is able to buy material and pay for it, and is willing to do so, I am certainly anxious to see them do it.

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. It seems to me that that is common sense. It seems to me that that makes them better partners in bearing their share of the burden.

Mr. RANKIN. But at the same time we are fighting a war in both oceans, and if we are able to send material to our allies who are doing the fighting, and thereby probably save the lives of hundreds of thousands of American boys, I want it distinctly understood that I am in favor of carrying out that policy.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We can go along with that, all right, but when the gentleman says they have the money with which to buy it and want to buy it and do not want to be classed as charity patients, that is a different proposition. When we are all getting letters, as we are—and I am sure the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is getting letters of that kind, too, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]—where mothers are writing in wanting to know if we cannot change this regulation so that they may send packages to the boys, and are told that they cannot do it because of transportation space, and then we hear that cargoes of beer and other things are being shipped out, it does not just seem right. I have difficulty in explaining to my constituents that that is the right sort of practice. I am sure the gentleman from Ohio can tell us of things of that class that have been sent across in some of these transport vessels, where our mothers were denied the privilege of sending packages to their boys. I wish the gentleman would tell us about some of those things, if he has knowledge of them—things like silk garments and powder puffs, and things like that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Do we understand that the position of Bermuda is that this is as much their war as it is our war, and they have the notion that it is as much their business to take care of their people as it is our business to take care of our people, and that they do not want to be in the attitude before the world of panhandling this country?

Mr. JONES. I think the gentleman's observation is entirely correct.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Are we not fighting this war as much as the people in Bermuda and are they not as much interested in winning the war as we are?

Mr. JONES. I should think so. I think there is a good deal of dignity in their position.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not get the slant myself that in this World War we are the only people who have any interest in having it won.

Mr. JONES. In connection with the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan in regard to the shipment of nondefense items, that question came up a few days ago and I learned that there were several thousand cases of beer, and rayon hose, and powder puffs shipped and transportation paid for with lease-lend funds. I understand, from talking with the Lease-Lend Administration that they claim to have been reimbursed for these transportation charges.

Further than that, I am told on reliable authority that the shipments of these nondefense articles, the rayon hose, the beer, the powder puffs, were to private individuals and shipped with lease-lend shipments—the entire cargo otherwise lend-lease. The Lease-Lend Administration states that they were reimbursed for every bit of the charges paid, but all these private shipments entail an enormous amount of detail work; many thousands of people come into the Government in the city of Washington, making the housing shortage critical so we can figure the accounts. We pay for the accounting system, we pay for the personnel, we pay all the expense of segregating these items. In addition to that our boys are denied the little box of cookies their mothers may want to send them because the space is taken up, or was at least at that time, with these nondefense articles shipped to private individuals. Private individuals made a profit reselling them in the several countries to which they were shipped. If this continues, certainly the order against shipping packages of little knicknacks and things from home should be lifted and our boys not denied these little things that mean so much to the morale of our soldiers, sailors, and marines fighting in the far corners of the world.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Has it come to your attention that a cargo of heavy underwear was sent somewhere down in the Far East where they had absolutely no use for it?

Mr. JONES. I had not heard of that.

Mr. GROSS. I think if the gentleman checks the records he will find that a cargo of heavy underwear was shipped where they could have no possible use for it.

Mr. JONES. A question I should like to have answered is: What machinery have we provided in the basic lease-lend law for the clearance of orders that come to us for lease-lend aid? What basis of clearance have we in the lease-lend administration to say to the shipping authorities on the dock: "We will not take these nondefense items like powder puffs, beer, and rayon hose; we will not pay for freight of those shipments." What safeguard have we provided for ourselves and for our boys at the front? At one time there was in the lease-lend administration a control committee that went over every request with a fine-tooth comb. At one time a request was received for several thousand snappers. Nobody in lease-lend knew what snappers were. They found out later they were false teeth. It is time we found out whether there is any type of material control in lease-lend by military and naval experts who know what is necessary for our allies, the United Nations, to have to help them win the war. Or is control in the control of Harry Hopkins?

If we extend the lease-lend law, we should be interested in some such type of control, some sifting of orders so that our receding cargo space may be used to the utmost to ship necessary guns, planes, and tanks to our boys or the United Nations wherever they are needed. At the present time I can report to you on reliable authority that Harry Hopkins, particularly in the case of the British Government orders, has full charge of what shall be sent and what shall not be sent. I should say: "What shall be sent, period," and there is no military or naval authority going through those orders to see that necessary amounts are sent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. It seems to me a third necessary thing is a restriction that lend-lease shipments must be necessary for use in the war effort only. When a decision is made whether a Diesel engine shall be sent that will last 5 years or one that will last 15 the decision should be in favor of the one with the lesser life in order to conserve our critical materials and send the machine that will use less critical materials if it will last long enough to win the war.

I point these things out, and any member of the Foreign Affairs Committee may have my photostatic copy of the paper to which I have referred and the other reports upon which I based my original inquiry. Any other information I have as it is verified is available. Later on, next week, I hope to have the rest of the information verified and will report further to you.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Tuesday, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and other special orders, I may address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE CIVIL AIR PATROL

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, when enemy submarines some time ago were working havoc in our coastal waters there was formed, in fact it had been formed before that time, among civilian owners and operators of airplanes, an organization which tendered their services and the services of their planes to the Federal Government. My interest was aroused in this organization because of its demonstrated unselfish, self-reliant, willingness-to-do-something - about - it, fit - to - live-and-govern-in-a-free-democracy sort of spirit, the sort of spirit which must be nurtured and encouraged and must spread in this country if we are to have that fitness which makes free government possible. One of the leading spirits in this organization is a citizen of my own city, Maj. D. Harold Byrd. I have had compiled certain facts with regard to this fine organization which for its inspirational value to the American people I ask the privilege, which has been granted, to give them to the House and to the country.

The Civil Air Patrol was brought into being, according to its first general order, by "the universal demand of the civil airmen of the United States to be utilized, with their equipment and facilities, in the war effort." In this spirit, the private pilots at the municipal airports and hayfield landing fields mobilized throughout the country.

Long before the declaration of war, groups were formed along military lines in many States by alert volunteers who wanted to get ready. For years, these flying civilians, many of them pilots in the last war, were the backbone of air progress in America. Believing in aviation, they fought for air power, for the development of air transport, and for a national system of airports. They kept alive the spark of aviation interest in thousands of communities. When air power became the deciding force in warfare as they had predicted, it was not in their temperament to play a passive role.

At once applications from every one of the 48 States poured in by the thousands. These individualists threw all their assets and skills into the common cause.

The first job was to train the local squadrons in military drill and discipline so that each member would know his duties and serve under orders; then to undertake a rigorous program of practice missions to get each unit ready to meet emergency situations. The volunteers went to work with a will. At their national headquarters a comprehensive roster was set up on punch cards to index the specialized experience of every member so they could be placed on assignments for which they were best fitted.

This work was barely launched when the men of C. A. P. were given their first opportunity to show their mettle on an active military assignment. Enemy submarines were operating along the Atlantic seaboard within sight of shore. Sinkings of tankers and cargo vessels were a daily occurrence. Available blimps and subchasers were few. Army and Navy planes were urgently needed on the battle fronts.

The Flying minutemen Flew their little ships to hastily improvised bases. They brought their own radios, repair parts, tools, and equipment, starting from scratch to fly their single-motored landplanes over the winter ocean unarmed and with no more protection than their kapok life jackets.

This coastal patrol has been maintained ever since, from dawn to dusk, regardless of weather, on constant watch. Men from 45 States have entered this service. Subs spotted by Civil Air Patrol observers have been sunk. Vessels in distress have been reported; hundreds of survivors of torpedoed ships have been rescued. Many of the Civil Air Patrol planes are armed with bombs now. By their own labor and money they have converted their fields in farmyards, on sand spits, and in swamps into well-organized airdromes with the highest standards of maintenance and discipline.

Men from all walks of life work together on these patrols. The private marching on guard with a shotgun may be a millionaire, and the lieutenant about to fly may be a garage mechanic who spent his last dollar to patch up his plane and bring it to the base. They are working merely for expense money with no salary or allowance. They have sought no personal credit and want only to do a job for their country.

The discipline of this volunteer organization in keeping the military secrets with which it is entrusted is shown by the fact that although the little planes on C. A. P. coastal patrol have been carrying a heavy load of bombs for many months, the first time the public knew it was when an official announcement was made a few days ago. The best-informed newspapers reported it as something that had just been added.

In much the same way the Patrol has been manning inland missions on an increasing scale now approaching that of the coastal patrol and potentially much larger. While planes upward of 90 horsepower must be used in flying over the ocean, because of the bomb load and the dangers of off-shore winds against which smaller ships could not return to land, the inland work is performed by "grasshopper" planes under 90 horsepower.

Thousands of miles are being flown each day for the Army on regular schedule to carry dispatches, urgent shipments, and key officers between widely separated military posts; to fly tests of the air-raid warning system; inspect camouflage installations; give sighting practice to antiaircraft gunners; tow aerial targets over the fire of guns; and for many other purposes. This work helps release military planes and airmen for service on the advancing fronts around the world.

The men and women of the Civil Air Patrol are keeping the faith.

Organized with a Wing Command in each State, the patrol has active units at more than 1,000 local airports. In their home-town squadrons, the members serve without compensation, buying their own uniforms, paying for the operation of their own or rented planes, and maintaining all the overhead expense of the organization. In their capacity as aerial home guards, they are making themselves ready for any local emergency. Frequently the squadrons turn out to fly on flood or tornado rescue missions, search for lost Army aircraft or stand on guard in local disasters without a cent of compensation.

Although many are devoting their working hours to duties in war-production plants, they turn out for evening classes and drills and report to the air fields regularly each Sunday for flying practice. An important by-product of this training is the preparation it gives to men who enter the armed forces. Membership or active duty in the patrol do not exempt anyone from the draft, and the men who are called or who volunteer are much better able to enter military duties, whether they are assigned to flying or ground service.

C. A. P. has opened a number of airports of its own, developed through volunteer labor and donated material.

These fields are available as emergency landing areas to military planes as well as for recruitment and training centers. The fact that civilian planes are being kept airworthy and that repair and fueling facilities are maintained give the United States a vast reserve of auxiliary air facilities which can be drawn upon in many ways toward the winning of the war. The States in which the recruitment of flying cadets has been the highest are the States in which civilian aviation activities have been most intensively organized.

A new undertaking has recently been launched by the patrol in the formation of a C. A. P. cadet corps for students in the last 2 years of high school. It is a father-and-son organization. Each C. A. P. squadron can set up a counterpart squadron of cadets and each member of C. A. P. can sponsor one cadet. On this simple plan, the total cost to the Government to date has been only that of printing a one-page directive, and application form, and a membership card and mailing them to the 48 wings. As a result, tens of thousands of young Americans are receiving the same military and aviation training that the senior organization gets, under the guidance of seasoned flyers.

May I give you some more details as to this fine organization?

Sixty-seven thousand civilian volunteers have been enrolled. A wing of C. A. P., as a State organization, has been formed in each of the 48 States, which reports directly to C. A. P. national headquarters which is staffed by several officers of the Army Air Forces. Under the wing commands, local squadrons and flights are active at more than 1,000 airports. The larger State wings are divided into group commands with several squadrons in each group. Maj. Earle L. Johnson is the national commander.

Each wing, group, and squadron has its own commander and staff officers assigned to special duties such as operations, intelligence, communications, transportation, and medical. About a third of the members are pilots; a third are student pilots; and the rest have special skills as mechanics, radio operators, photographers, nurses, typists, and ground crew. Each unit is self-contained with personnel, equipment, and training to perform any mission that light planes can fly.

C. A. P. is not a flight training corps but rather an organization of citizens with prior experience applicable to aviation. Its training program, however, not only has advanced the skill of airmen in C. A. P. but has encouraged many with little or no previous experience to take lessons and become good pilots.

Each member is required to cover the ground studies necessary for a private pilot's license. The basic C. A. P. course of 81 hours stresses military and defense subjects such as infantry drill, discipline, first aid, gas protection, military secrecy, and signaling. The advanced course of 150 hours includes air navigation meteorology, crash procedure, and a number of flying missions simulating the actual wartime assignments of the patrol.

Thousands have left the patrol for flying duties in the armed forces, the Air Transport Command, the pilot schools, and the airlines, better prepared by their C. A. P. experience which is good background for any wartime service. From its detailed roster, C. A. P. frequently recommends men and women for special war posts. Members while in their local units continue their regular occupations and devote their spare time to the patrol. But, thousands who have been able to volunteer 30 days or more of continuous service have been detached from their squadrons for assignment to active-duty missions which C. A. P. performs for the Army. In addition to the sea operations and services mentioned, extensive inland missions also are being flown for the Army to help release military planes and pilots for air duty.

Courier service totaling thousands of miles a day on regular routes and schedules is being flown to carry officers, dispatches, and rush shipments between Army posts. Other work included towing aerial gunnery targets, tracking flights for guns and searchlights, aerial reconnaissance and inspection, simulated air support for ground troops in training, and searches for lost aircraft. In addition, active missions are performed for Federal and State agencies. For the United States Forest Service, area patrol, and observation flights over fires have been conducted to conserve timber resources in a number of States. Federal officials have been carried on rush trips. For war-production plants, courier services have been organized in many areas to carry key executives and urgent shipments such as machine parts. In some cases, the stoppage of assembly lines has been prevented by this aerial pony express.

Members on active duty receive a moderate per diem to cover personal expenses including cost of their uniforms and a good deal of their equipment. A moderate rental, varying with horsepower, is paid for planes per hour of flight. It would be interesting, I believe, to know something of the strength of the several State organizations and to have the names of their respective commanding officers. They are as follows:

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] has just given us a very fine summary of the activities of the Civil Air Patrol. I am particularly interested, as I am a member. I was on active duty for a month last summer, during the informal congressional recess, as a pilot on an anti-submarine patrol and I have, therefore, had a chance to see the C. A. P. in action, and to witness first-hand the initiative and resourcefulness they exercise in getting the job done. You find all shapes, sizes, and conditions of men on a C. A. P. base, for they are not exempt from the draft and, therefore, the C. A. P. depends upon men who are not subject to military service. You find fat, bald-headed pilots; others wear glasses when flying; there are also women members of the C. A. P. and women pilots, although they do not go on the coastal patrol. All are alike in one respect, however; they have a wonderful spirit of getting the job at hand attended to. I know of members, who have spent thousands of dollars of their own money securing equipment for bases. These same men, who would never think of asking for anything for themselves, are willing to beg or borrow planes, engines, or other equipment from their friends, when it is needed to keep them going. Their spirit seems to inspire a kindred spirit in the communities where they operate, and businessmen and public officials have dug up for C. A. P. bases everything from screw drivers to radio generators and buildings without charge.

At a time when there is a great tendency for people to lean on the central government for support and guidance, the Civil Air Patrol is keeping alive in war work the old pioneer spirit of self-reliance and resourcefulness, although in performing their flying missions their discipline and obedience meet military standards. They are the home guard, the continental militiamen of the air, and they are not only performing important services in the war effort, but are keeping alive a kind of American spirit that is not too prevalent these days.

I want to congratulate my distinguished friend from Texas on telling the House about their work. With his usual keen insight, he has discerned in this outfit an example of the type of American spirit which he is continually preaching in the House. My own contribution in time, or otherwise, to the C. A. P. has been very small, but I am proud to have had a small part in it, and I am grateful for the chance it gave me to see them in action.

PUTTING FIRST THINGS FIRST

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] addressed this House for a period of 10 minutes. The subject of his discussion was concerning some bills that I understand he has or will introduce, and which he no doubt feels are of national, or, perhaps, international importance. The fervor and deep earnestness with which the gentleman approached the matter would indicate to the casual listener that the legislation he is espousing is a real emergency and that Congress should drop everything else, and possibly meet in extra sessions, to consider this question of such far-reaching importance to the present generation of dogs, legislation that no doubt will vitally affect canine generations yet unborn.

In these dark and perilous times, with our country engaged in a life or death struggle, I was frankly amazed that the gentleman from Michigan would consume 10 minutes of the valuable time of this House discussing proposed legislation affecting the welfare and security of dogs, pedigreed or otherwise. I yield to no one in my affection for a good dog. It has been said that dog is man's best friend. My little 3-year-old son, Jed, Jr., has one which he loves devotedly. It occurs to me, however, that this is not the time nor the place for the consideration of the welfare of dogs, especially when so many human beings are enduring slavery and worse. The matter about which the gentleman complains might be presented to the pound master for the District of Columbia, otherwise known as the dog catcher, rather than to consume 10 minutes' time of this House.

Someone facetiously suggested, while the gentleman was talking so fervently about his proposed legislation for the uplift of dogdom, that a special committee on canine activities be created for the consideration of the legislation to which the gentleman refers. Another Member suggested the matter might be presented to a subcommittee of the city council.
